My plea to my hon. Friend the Minister is that where it is clear that fraud is occurring—as investigations have proved a great deal of fraud is being perpetrated in the minicab sector in London and throughout the country—the appropriate action must be taken to stop that disgraceful practice. Not only are ordinary taxpayers footing the bill for that fraud, but minicab drivers are collecting fares and tips on which they are not paying tax. Enormous losses are therefore occurring across the board. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to make more finances available to combat that.

I crave your indulgence, Madam Deputy Speaker, in deviating from the main issue to emphasise that enormous problems confronting the legitimate cab trade because of illegal touting—most of it by minicabs. If they were put off the road and prevented from operating, that would also stop fraudulent benefit claims.

If one wants to receive housing benefit, it is the easiest thing in the world to acquire from any letting agent the details of a property and then to receive housing benefit. Letting agents are becoming a little cute, and a letting agent may have the benefit paid direct to the landlord or to himself. I declare an interest, as a partner in an estate agency—so I know what happens.

[Mr. Vivian Bendall]

If a landlord or letting agent is not cute enough to have the occupier's housing benefit paid direct, more often than not—after the deposit and first month's rent has been paid—that is the last that either will see of rent on the property. Arrears rapidly accrue and, because of assured tenancy legislation, the occupier cannot be taken to court for two months. Even then, another two months may elapse because the courts are so busy. It may be five months at the earliest before the property can be repossessed, at a cost to the landlord of £3,000 or £4,000.

Of greater concern is the fact that an occupier may have pocketed the money he or she received as housing benefit and not passed it on to the landlord or agent. Just as the bailiffs are about to go in, the occupant may do a moonlight—and then move on to another London local authority. Because no check is made, that individual can then proceed to do exactly the same.

That happens time and again. The property world knows very well what happens to housing benefit, but how can that problem be stopped?

Mr. Roger Knapman (Stroud): Is my hon. Friend aware of another problem that particularly affects popular holiday areas where there is a need for affordable rented accommodation? I know from personal experience that if one has a capital gains tax problem, one can roll it over into holiday accommodation but not into rented accommodation for social purposes. The agency that handles my property has 6,000 properties, mainly in the west country, that are let out for holidays—often for that purpose. Does my hon. Friend, with all his professional experience, agree that, instead of making such a distinction, it would be better if more properties could be let at reasonable rents, preferably to local people? It all boils down to supply and demand.

Mr. Bendall: I cannot see any reason for that distinction. It would be advantageous to free such properties for permanent rather than holiday lets. The more property that is available for letting, the more likely it is that rents would be set at a sensible level, because the public would have a greater choice. I certainly agree with my hon. Friend in that respect.

For far too long, claimants have been arriving in one London borough from another, or from another part of the country, expecting to be rehoused. In the 1980s, when there was high employment in London and the south-east, such a policy might have worked to the benefit of people moving from the north, north-west or north-east, but now that unemployment is highest in London and the south-west, encouraging people to move from other parts of the country to London only makes the situation worse and produces inflated rents.

If more rented housing were made available in those other areas, at lower rents than in London, the rents in London would also be more sensible. The time has come for the Minister responsible—and that is not my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt)—seriously to examine that possible means of solving the problem of social security benefit fraud. A spin-off would be an easing of pressure on school and hospital places and on other social services.

As to stopping fraudulent claimants moving from one authority to another, no housing benefit should be paid to tenants; it should be paid only to landlords or their agents, and the landlord should be registered with the local authority. If a tenant left and the landlord failed to declare that change, the local authority would know where to find the landlord and there could be no nonsense.

Substantial savings can be made just by ending fraud in housing benefit and among minicab drivers, and hon. Members on both sides of the House have said, rightly, that those savings could be used to benefit genuine, less fortunate claimants. A good start would be to help pensioners and those in the poverty trap, just above income support level, who will be hurt most by the imposition of value added tax on fuel. Much benefit can flow from the right action against fraud. Ways can be found of dealing with that fraud and it can be stopped if there is the will.

10.57 am

Mr. Harold Elletson (Blackpool, North): I begin by telling the House about Jack O'Nory. I refer not to the well-known children's television programme but to the individual of that name, who submitted a claim for unemployment benefit last year—along with Count Dracula, Donald Duck and Gary Lineker. Their discovery contributed to the Department of Employment saving the taxpayer £34 million.

The Department of Social Security has a much larger problem combating fraud, and my hon. Friend the Secretary of State has announced that he intends to deal with it this year, to make savings of £1 billion. In view of money that would make available to the DSS to spend on other benefits, it is surprising that no Liberal Democrat Members are present for this debate. I assume that they are all in Christchurch, telling pensioners there how much Liberal Democrats care about social security issues. Those of us who are present for this debate will not fail to remind our constituents of the absence of Liberal Democrat Members and of their apparent complete lack of concern about social security fraud.

Blackpool and the whole Fylde coast region is an important area for the Department of Social Security. It is, after all, the centre of the administration of the Benefits Agency. It is also, unfortunately, a national centre for social security fraud and benefits abuse. Blackpool is by no means unique. It has a number of problems in common with other tourist resorts and it seems to act as a magnet for such activities for two reasons.

First, there is a thriving black economy in the town. There is much seasonal work available and that seems to attract one type of social security fraud. Secondly, by far the most important reason is the many hotels, guest houses, hostels and houses in multiple occupation which encourage large-scale housing benefit fraud. Blackpool, after all, has more bed space than Portugal and 2,000 properties that are what is commonly described locally as DSS hostels. That is extremely damaging for Blackpool's reputation as a tourist resort.

Blackpool seems to act as a magnet for fraudsters from all over the north of England and, unfortunately, fraud is conducted on a grand scale. As my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Mr. Bendall) said, that often results in landlords—or, in my case, mostly landladies—being defrauded. What is most disgraceful is that there is sometimes connivance by the landlords and by some employers at the two types of social security fraud.

Those who make money at the expense of the town's genuine tourist trade by providing cheap, unregulated and below-standard accommodation for DSS customers are often prepared to turn a blind eye to housing benefit fraud. I hope that the Minister will accept that tightening up on fraud, especially in tourist areas and especially on housing benefit, has been and will be widely welcomed by all good, law-abiding citizens of towns such as Blackpool. They recognise that it is genuinely good for tourism, for business and ultimately for employment in those towns. It stops the drift into tattiness and seediness which is becoming a problem in so many of our leading tourist resorts.

I am delighted that the Benefits Agency especially is taking fraud in Blackpool seriously. In the year ending 31 March 1993,the Blackpool fraud sector, which covers the whole area from Lytham St. Anne's up to Knott End-on-Sea, carried out 2,158 investigations of which 914 cases resulted in a weekly benefits saving. Some 304 cases produced an instrument of payment saving and overpayment was detected in a further 304 cases. It is estimated that, because of that, there were gross savings last year of £2.5 million.

During the past couple of months, the Benefits Agency and the Department of Social Security investigations squad have launched Operation Sea Breeze. As part of that, the fraud support team investigated 1,600 claimants. Some 20 per cent. of them were found to be making false claims for housing benefit and income support. During the past few weeks, the squad conducted a dawn raid on four DSS hostels in my constituency. It found that of 70 claimants at those premises, more than half did not live there or had moved on. That is a shocking statistic. People locally were shocked by the sheer scale of fraud and it brought home to them what the scale of the problem is.

Mr. Sykes: Like my hon. Friend, I represent two tourist resorts, Scarborough and Whitby. We, too, have a growing problem with DSS hostels. Does my hon. Friend agree that they are the centres of crime and fraud? Does he also agree that the Department of the Environment could play its part in solving the problem by changing the use class orders so that local councils could make decisions about where the DSS hostels should be?

Mr. Elletson: I agree with my hon. Friend. I have no doubt that the overwhelming number of people who, unfortunately, are claiming DSS benefits and living in temporary accommodation are genuine people with genuine problems. However, there are many who are not genuine. In tourist resorts such as mine and the one that my hon. Friend represents, there are now so many of these places that they are having an extremely damaging effect on the tourist trade. As I said, there are 2,000 such places in my constituency and I am sure that my hon. Friend has similar numbers in his.

I have to say that various Departments seem to be passing the buck. The buck must stop at the Department of the Environment, which must take the issue seriously. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will pass our serious concern about the matter to the Department of the Environment and that he will ensure that it does something about the problem.

Mr. David Nicholson (Taunton): My hon. Friend has chosen an important and worrying subject to raise in this debate. I am sure that he is aware that this phenomenon occurs not only in Blackpool or Scarborough. I fear that all over the country, claimants who go to boarding houses usually have no connection with the area in which they are temporarily residing. They come from other parts of the country and they cause crime not only in the immediate vicinity, but in the hinterland, as has happened in the south-west. There is considerable fear in the south-west that some of the crimes there are committed by people from such areas.

Mr. Corbyn: What is the evidence?

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman knows that he cannot intervene from a sedentary position. There is a proper way in which he can do so

Mr. Elletson: I fully agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson). There is plenty of evidence which the police will, I am sure, be delighted to provide to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn). My conversations with the police in my constituency suggest that they are deeply aware of the problem. That is why they have done so much recently to investigate it.

I especially agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton about the number of people coming from other areas into towns such as Taunton, Blackpool and Scarborough, often because local hoteliers advertise in places such as Scotland and Liverpool for people to come to collect their DSS benefits, to register and to live in sunny Scarborough or sunny Blackpool. That cannot be good for them or those towns because we do not have the employment infrastructure to support them. It is a serious problem and I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to take it seriously and to pass on our concern to the Department of the Environment.

I also urge my hon. Friend to continue the clampdown that he has launched, which has been so successful in Blackpool and in other areas. My hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) mentioned the recent clampdown in the Fishergate area of Preston. Those activities are having a seriously good effect in such towns, as Operation Sea Breeze has had in Blackpool, and I hope that they will continue. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Minister and all those involved in them.

Mr. Knapman: Will my hon. Friend take the point made by our hon. Friend the Member for Taunton a little further? Genuine people with genuine claims would receive prompt service from Government agencies if there were fewer fraudulent claims.

Mr. Elletson: I agree absolutely. I cannot begin to estimate the time and finance involved in dealing with fraud. That must have extremely damaging consequences for those who have genuine problems. That is the whole point.

The scale of the problem nationally is alarming. In 1992-93, DSS investigators discovered that almost 250,000 people were cheating the system. The Department reckons to have saved about £500 million by stopping fraudulent claims last year. However, the Exchequer is losing about £2 billion a year through social security fraud. This year, we aim to save £1 billion through anti-fraud activities. It is vital that we concentrate on that. As my hon. Friend the Minister said, every pound lost means less for those who are in real need.

Earlier this year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security said that the increase in benefits that he was able to announce in extremely difficult economic circumstances was made possible largely because of the savings that had been achieved through cleaning up fraud. It is vital, therefore, that we should continue to do so.

I shall elaborate on a few of the points that have already been made about what else could be done. My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North suggested that we should pay more attention to minicab fraud. He was absolutely right to make that point. As he said, it is not a problem which affects London alone. It is prevalent throughout the country, certainly in my constituency and others like it. The Secretary of State and the Minister of State are absolutely right to say that we should make fraud a priority. Earlier today, the Under-Secretary suggested that the priorities should be to prevent, to detect and to deter fraud. I hope that he will look at other specific areas where I believe we could make great inroads.

First, I urge the Under-Secretary to target tourist resorts for major clampdowns. That is bound to yield real savings for him. Secondly, and in line with that, he should consider the establishment of some form of telephone hotline, particularly in tourist resorts. If he did that and reached out to the public, I think that he would find a genuine and grateful response that would provide much information and enable him to deal with the problem in tourist resorts.

That is part of a wider point about better publicity. We must convince people who are tempted to defraud the system—both tenants, when it comes to housing benefit, landlords and employers, who may connive at this sort of fraud—that they cannot get away with it and, more importantly, that they are likely to be caught. The Department of Social Security has a good record in clearing up fraud. It has a very good story to tell, particularly in constituencies such as mine where it is cracking down hard on fraud. We must make it clearer, perhaps at the point of requests for assistance with social security, that fraudulent claims will be dealt with and are likely to end up in some form of prosecution.

Mr. Nigel Evans: Is my hon. Friend aware of the fraud that asylum seekers coming into this country are committing and that, as from next month, all of them will be fingerprinted, a measure which was resisted strongly by Opposition Members?

Mr. Elletson: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend. The scale of the problem and the amount of money that appears to be going out in fraudulent payments to those people is absolutely disgraceful and must clearly be regarded as another priority.

Mr. Corbyn: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Elletson: Yes, I shall certainly give way to the hon. Gentleman. I think that we have all been looking forward to hearing from him.

Mr. Corbyn: Just so that the record can be put straight, Labour members on the Standing Committee that considered the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill opposed the fingerprinting of all potential refugees, including children—which Conservative Members supported—because there is already a perfectly adequate system for identifying asylum seekers by the issuing of a letter, stamped and embossed, which also includes a photograph. We believe that the use of fingerprinting is an attempt to criminalise people who seek asylum in this country. That is why we opposed that provision and that is why a large number of libertarian and legal sources also opposed it.

Mr. Elletson: I am sure that my hon. Friends and the whole House will take note of the hon. Gentleman's reminder that the Opposition opposed that provision, but I think that they will be suitably sceptical about the excuses which the hon. Gentleman gave.

Mr. Corbyn: What excuses?

Mr. Elletson: I suggest also that the Under-Secretary of State should toughen up on landlords and employers who are prepared to connive at social security fraud. There is a substantial amount of evidence that fraud is taking place. I do not think that landlords, in particular, should be allowed to get away with it. I know that there have been prosecutions, but stamping out fraud needs to be a major priority.

It is also important that we should work on the type of system that delivers results in combating social security fraud and ensure better co-ordination between local authorities, the DSS, the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service. It has been the key to success in a number of recent operations, particularly in Blackpool, Manchester and Westminster. The Government have introduced a programme of incentives for councils to clear up housing benefit and council tax fraud. They can attract a 100 per cent. subsidy for benefits that have been overpaid. Councils will also share in any increase in benefits that these savings achieve. That must be good news.

Mr. Bendall: Is my hon. Friend aware that in London, where one local authority can rehouse people in another borough, those people are supposed to register when that happens but that, more often than not, they do not, which is why councils often cannot catch up with people?

Mr. Elletson: Absolutely. That problem is to be found all over the country. I hope that the Minister will take note of that point, too, and will pass on the message to the Department of the Environment.

The introduction of new technology will be important in combating social security fraud. The new computer system that is to be put into operation in the 160 or so fraud areas will have a major impact.

The Under-Secretary should not hold back in dealing with the problem. I am sure that he will not. In a climate of rising public expenditure, we cannot afford to waste money. Nobody would expect us to waste £2 billion a year on fraud. The Under-Secretary was right to say that the people of this country are outraged by fraud and they expect him to become the hammer of the fraudsters. I hope that he will take the gloves off and deal with this matter with an iron fist.

11.16 am

Mr. A. Cecil Walker (Belfast, North): We in Northern Ireland have many problems—of identity, security, lack of parliamentary democracy. There are also problems over the way in which Northern Ireland legislation is handled in this House. There is also the problem of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and the Irish Government sticking their nose in our affairs. All these problems contribute to the unrest. That unrest and instability lead to the problems that we share with the rest of the United Kingdom: serious fraud and the abuse of the social security system.

One problem that concerns us very much centres on the legislation regarding homelessness and the fraud to which it has given rise. The Housing Executive was set up by the Government to look after and administer public sector housing, and its policy of housing homeless single people has led to great problems. Single homeless people use their houses only for the receipt of their social security cheques —well known as giro drops. They do not live in their houses. Many of them still live in the family home, but they use the social security system to get their cheques delivered to the houses that they have obtained through the Housing Executive.

The Housing Executive does not care too much about that, because it gets its housing benefit money through the Social Security Agency. It is one of the biggest problems we face, but it could be overcome if the Government would grasp the nettle and make the Housing Executive much more aware of its responsibilities. We have a large waiting list for houses. The people on that waiting list are legitimate family people who have been waiting for houses for years. While this system continues, they will never be rehoused.

Another serious problem concerns the building industry in Northern Ireland. I am sure that many hon. Members are aware of the serious scam perpetrated by the IRA a few years ago, when it defrauded the Government of literally millions of pounds through false tax exemption certificates.

The Government have recently produced a consultative document to regulate the building industry in Northern Ireland. I welcome it, but it does not get to the nub of the problem, because most fraud still involves social security and the 714 tax exemption system. Much could be done under existing legislation if the present law were applied with some force and vigour.

An example of the problems in the building industry is the way in which labour is brought on to building sites throughout the Province. Casual labour is bussed in to build houses and other buildings under Government programmes. The people involved are drawing the dole, but are prepared to work for cheap rates, which causes great problems for the wages system. In many cases, the labour even comes from the Irish Republic, and the people are allowed to go there one day a week to draw their dole.

One can imagine the problems caused for the building industry and for those who wish to get legitimate work in it, but are unfortunately unable to do so. When the Government try to investigate such problems, a paramilitary influence is unfortunately often brought to bear, and can stop investigations because of fear and intimidation.

There are also problems in the private sector, such as office cleaning businesses, where people are being employed "on the double" to clean offices and other public buildings. They, too, work for cheap rates. Even in the private security sector, some people work for as little as £60 a week, which causes great consternation and is certainly not helping our economy or people who wish to work legitimately. They are the great difficulties we experience in Northern Ireland, especially when some of the people involved are also drawing unemployment benefit, thus causing problems for the whole social security system.

As hon. Members will know, many chain stores are setting up in business in Northern Ireland, and some are doing well—some would say, much better than on the mainland. The reason is that we have a lucrative black market, which invariably distorts the unemployment figures and other statistics.

My purpose is to make the Government aware of our problems and to ask them to consult the various agencies more actively to combat this scourge in our community.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls (Teignbridge): I have been a Member of Parliament for 10 years. Before that, such are my curious tastes, I was an assiduous reader of Hansard. I was never aware of a major debate in which a major political party—or one which claims to be so—was content to field no spokesman.

I thought that my hon. Friend the Minister accepted the apology of the person who apparently speaks for social security matters on behalf of the Liberal Democratic party with his customary courtesy and friendliness. The Dispatch Box imposes that discipline on Ministers from time to time; luckily, those of us who are not charged with the responsibilities of office can take a more robust view.

It is extraordinary to hear the excuse that it is not possible for an hon. Member to speak to the House because the business was arranged only the week before. There have been times when I have been unable to speak in a regional debate affecting the west country for precisely that reason, but members of my party were here to speak on behalf of the people we all represent.

Clearly, one sometimes cannot tell what the business will be for the following Friday and cannot be sure that one will be here, but the idea that a political party cannot get anyone to turn up is extraordinary. Representatives of the Ulster Unionist party are here; I am sure that they find it extremely inconvenient to be here on Friday, but their party has arranged for representation.

We should remember that today the Liberal Democratic party is doubtless out on the streets of Christchurch telling the pensioners of Christchurch, whose pensions are paid from the social security budget, that they would like those pensions greatly enhanced. Liberal Democrat Members of Parliament will be telling them how outrageous it is that the Government have imposed value added tax on domestic energy, but they will not mention the fact that the idea was taken directly from the Liberal Democrats' manifesto. They will also not be telling the people of Christchurch that they were not present at a debate on social security fraud—the type of fraud which directly restricts the money avaialable to help pensioners and people who will be unduly affected by the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel.

Instead of posturing on the streets of Christchurch, the Liberal Democrats could have done something and made a contribution. They could have represented the causes and concerns of those they purport to represent, but they are conspicuous by their absence. It is quite contemptible.

Until recently, I was the Conservative majority leader on the Social Security Select Committee, an experience which I greatly valued. The Committee is chaired by the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), who is an extraordinary performer. He has a knowledge of social security matters which is, I think, without equal. He has a fearless way of putting over ideas which are sometimes controversial, even within his own party. He plays a major role, and anyone who has an interest in social security, or anyone who is dependent on social security, could look to the hon. Gentleman as a model of how things should be done.

What I found impressive during my time on the Select Committee was the fact that one would never hear the hon. Member for Birkenhead suggest that fraud was anything other than wrong, wicked and criminal, and should be pursued accordingly. That was always his position, and he stated it fearlessly. Sometimes, I felt that, in an attempt to achieve an intellectual consensus, other members of the Committee found not the concept but the language in which it can be expressed rather troubling. For all I know, we may in due course hear something that reflects that position. In any event, it is important that we remember that that was the tone of the Select Committee when I was a member from 1990.

It is interesting that we have today heard precisely the same attitude from Labour's spokesman. I do not say that in any carping sense. I thoroughly enjoyed the contribution speech of the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), and I hope that he will have gathered as much from the manner of my interventions.

Not only did I enjoy the content: I had to admire the style of delivery. The hon. Member's speech lasted 35 minutes, but I make no complaint about that. It was such a marvellous balancing act that I wondered how he would get to the end without being savaged by some of his colleagues. In the end, I detected that he was going to be savaged, but he managed to defer a mauling by what he said later in his speech. His speech was refreshing and, although it reflects the way in which these matters are dealth with in Select Committee, it is perhaps unusual to hear such a speech from the Labour Front Bench. It was welcome.

We began to see some internal tensions in the hon. Gentleman's presentation, but I realised that it would not have been appropriate to say quietly, as it were, from a sedentary position, "Cross the Floor, because I cannot tell the difference between us," because one or two things that he said finally made me feel that I could detect more of a difference between us than was readily apparent at first.

I have never understood—I say this with all the insincerity at my command—why the Labour party feels it necessary in debates on social security fraud to say at once, "What about crime in the big City?" I do not understand that—I say that with a straight face because I have been in the House for about 10 years—because it seems that crime is simply indivisible. Crime is wicked; wickedness should be punished, and criminals should be pursued and brought before the courts. That strikes me as so obvious that normally it should not need to be said.

If we were to have a debate on crime in the City—I would welcome such a debate and would take part—I cannot imagine making a contribution, either in a speech or from a sedentary position, let alone from the Dispatch Box, saying, "Yes, but what about social security fraud?" Although I do not understand it, I can speculate for a moment about what is going on.

We have the revisionist tendency at the Dispatch Box —trying to square circles and make some sense of why traditional supporters have not been representing them for about a decade. On the other hand, they have their natural consituencies represented by the serried ranks behind them which take a different view. That different view is much more primitive and goes a bit like this: crime in the City is committed by upper-class toffs who are absolutely dripping in money, whereas fraud in social security matters is committed by poor people who must defraud the system to live. That is the underlying animus which drives the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn). The fact that that constituency must be dealt with by the Labour Front Bench means that we must pay lip service to that concept today.

One can have a bit of merriment at the difficulty of Labour Front-Bench spokesmen when they try to square the circle, but there is a much more serious point to be made. I accept at once that it is not intended, but we should consider for a moment how profoundly insulting it is to people who depend on social security benefits—we hope that it is for a relatively short period, but perhaps it is for their whole lives—to hear fraud talked about in these terms: "It is committed by people at the lower end of the market because they are so poor that they have no choice."

We will not find that from the sort of socialists represented by the Hampstead and Islington loveys. But what we will find among the working poor, or even sometimes the non-working poor, is that they are every bit as hard on crime and in favour of criminals being punished as those of us who earn vastly more. If we talked to those who represent not the flash showbiz end of support for the Labour party but the traditional bedrock working-class adherence, we would hear a line that is so stern that it makes me appear liberal and, frankly, that is remarkable. The idea that we must simply plant the idea that upper-class crime is reprehensible and lower-class crime is in some ways justifiable is not only wrong, daft and outdated but profoundly insulting to those for whose benefit that statement is apparently made.

When we talk about the effects of fraud and the money that is forgone by social security fraud, we are not talking about someone who made a mistake in filling out a form or who perhaps, because of the pressures he or she was under, made a false declaration on an isolated occasion; we are talking about large-scale sophisticated wickedness. That is what my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State was talking about when he referred to the latest fraud investigation.

We are talking about people of real talent who will divert their considerable energies to set up structures and complexities, which must require a lot of work. We are talking about systematically defrauding the system on a grand scale. We are not talking about an individual claimant who may be under a degree of pressure. We are talking about systematic, organised crime that needs to be stamped on—it can never be stamped out, but it certainly needs to be stamped on. Anyone who has any doubt that fraud is taking place on a grand scale is looking in an entirely different direction from that in which the rest of the world is looking.

If we look at the evidence produced by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary and some of the press campaigns and investigative journalism that have taken place, to which I shall refer in a moment, or think about the anecdotes that we hear—what our friends and constituents tell us—two things are clear: first, fraud happens on a grand scale and, secondly, it is unquantifiable and one cannot begin to tell what the savings might be. The hon. Member for Withington, who led with a skilful balancing act—of course, he expressed complete support for everything that the Government are doing—did not say "but"; there were "howevers", "furthermores" and swallowed phrases. I said "but", but the hon. Gentleman would not do it, which was rather unsporting. He said everything else but "but". To "put it in context"—a lovely phrase—he decided to slip in the statement that the amounts are relatively tiny. I do not know—a billion here and a billion there these days and we are beginning to talk about a week or two of the public sector deficit, so every little billion helps.

There is a slightly more serious point at stake. There must be something profoundly disillusioning for working people who are paying tax on a low income—although the rate has gone down greatly under the Government, it still represents a fair chunk of their income—and it goes against the grain when they know that in the house, the bedsit or the street next door there are people who do not get up in the morning who could and who are netting not that much less than they are. That is profoundly disillusioning and corrosive.

There is nothing worse socially than making people feel humiliated by working hard to earn a low wage when they know that there are more dishonest ways of earning about the same amount. Even if the amounts are small—even much smaller than I suspect they are—we owe it to the working people and, indeed, working poor people to ensure that, as far as we can in an imperfect world, every penny that is spent on social security is spent as intended.

Under the traditional demonology that usually characterises debates such as this—I accept that it has not done so today except in an undercurrent—the feeling has often been that we should face the fact that it is the rich who pay the taxes and they can afford to pay a bit. It is incredible that, in the past, such debates have taken place almost as though the way in which we judge a social security system is by measuring not the amount that reaches the people that it was meant to reach but the amount that was spent, squandered or raised. There are simply not sufficient rich people to provide in any abundance the money to fund something as vast as a social security system.

About 89 per cent. of the revenue raised in income tax is paid by basic rate taxpayers. There are simply not enough rich people, even if we confiscated all their money, to make more than a drop in the ocean compared with the total tax take. The fact is that social security payments are paid for by basic rate taxpayers.

In this debate, there has been a feeling among Labour Members that in some way the issue is all about the Government and how much money they give to people on social security. Perhaps it needs to be said, even in these revisionist times and subject to a speech that I am looking forward to hearing in a moment——

Mr. Sykes: My hon. Friend is staying only to hear the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn).

Mr. Nicholls: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for saying that I am staying only to hear the hon. Member for Islington, North. I take that personally—I am upset about it.

There is a serious point to be made. There simply is not sufficient money among the rich to be able to fund the social security budget, so we need to ensure that we target effectively.

There has not been much talk today about the sorts of benefits that can be subject to specific examples of fraud, but a point that constituents have raised in letters to me needs to be made: some people on invalidity benefit are worried that in some way the debate about invalidity benefit is directed at them. Obviously, it is not, but the figures tell a particular story. Apparently, the number of invalids has increased from 700,000 to almost 1·5 million over 10 years; that figure is incredible. If so many people are sick, that would be such an important matter that even the Labour party would not have missed the opportunity to exploit it. Those figures cannot be right.

Mr. Bendall: Does my hon. Friend agree that those figures are totally contrary to all the health reports which state that people's health is improving?

Mr. Nicholls: That is right.

Some other factor is involved, which we cannot measure without further information, because it is obvious that some of those in receipt of benefit are not those for whom it was designed.

My hon. Friend the Minister has already spoken about the planned reform of the benefit system, but I hope that when he replies to the debate he will emphasise that we are not talking about chasing those people who should, rightly, claim benefit; we are trying to ensure that only those who are entitled should claim. I have received several letters from constituents who are worried that we are talking about an arbitary cut in benefits. We are not. We are trying to direct payments towards those who should receive them.

I thought that we should have heard more today, and perhaps we will, about new age travellers. I applaud the steps that the Government have taken in recent years to deal with the menace of supporting alternative life styles on the social security system when the system was not designed for that purpose. If a person is claiming income support in normal circumstances, he should be available for work. That is, of course, a passive test and we now know that it is relatively easy to avoid it. That person should also be actively seeking work. Obviously, one should do both. Two years ago, many of my constituents were outraged at the idea of bus loads of social security clerks being sent out to camp sites to facilitate the payment of benefits to people who, by any stretch of the imagination, did not satisfy those two tests.

Such abuse no longer takes place, but many of my constituents wonder how it is possible that people who have no intention of doing anything approaching a day's work are able to support their life style. They believe that there is still too much laxity in some quarters in ensuring that social security payments are applied properly. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will say something about that later.

The fundamental point is that the welfare state was not designed as a mechanism for supporting those who regard themselves as being entirely outside society. The welfare state is a mechanism for supporting people in society who have fallen on hard times. Society can be broad and encompass a huge range of political ideas. It encompasses comfortably the position that I adopt in the political firmament and that adopted by the hon. Member for Islington, North, to whose contribution we look forward. Some new age travellers whom I have met, however, are so far removed from the sense of community and from those who are entitled to rely on the welfare state that they are unable to tell the difference, politically, between the hon. Gentleman and me. That is distressing for both of us.

In no sense can the social security system and the welfare state be considered suitable mechanisms for supporting people whose life styles are so vastly removed from what society as a whole judges to be acceptable.

There is nothing wrong in adopting an alternative life style. There is nothing wrong in people saying that the apparatus of the civilised society, demoracy, the Westminster model and the rest is not for them. What is not acceptable, however, in any circumstances, is for people who have made that decision to expect that their activities should be funded by those whom they hold in complete contempt.

It has been said by Ministers and by Conservative Back Benchers that the key is to ensure that the funds get through to those who are entitled to them. The speech by the hon. Member for Withington was interesting and of a different tone from that adopted by many in the Labour party. I suspect, however, that there are still many in the Labour movement who would suggest that the aims and intentions of the social security review are not what they seem. It is worth while emphasising again what my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in a recent debate:

"What we want is a better system which ensures that the most vulnerable people in society are protected and that all of us have the means to cope with the needs and variations of life. But to do that we must make sure that the benefits system is affordable. It cannot indefinitely outstrip the economic means that the country has to pay for it. If it did so, it would become unsustainable."

My right hon. Friend's conclusion sums up the whole debate, because he said:

"That would be the greatest betrayal of those in need and damage the economy."—[Official Report, 7 June 1993; Vol. 226, c. 6.]

There is no Government who can pay out the money to those on benefit, just the taxpayer. We must do our duty by the taxpayer and those who need to be maintained by the system. We must therefore take the social security review seriously.

We must ponder on the fact that the Liberals could not even be bothered to turn up for the debate. We must hope —I do not have a great deal of it—that what we have heard from the Opposition spokesman, the hon. Member for Withington, in his new-model, revisionist speech, represents the views of the serried ranks on the Opposition Benches. But we shall see.

11.45 am

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I have heard many speeches from the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls), but his performance today must rank as one of his greatest and most idiotic.

The hon. Gentleman set up a huge Aunt Sally and spent 20 minutes trying to knock it down. At the end of the speech, he let the cat out of the bag, however, when he revealed that the proposed reform is what we all know it to be about: it is a huge smokescreen to divert attention from the real intentions of the Conservative party to weaken, if not destroy, the social security system.

The hon. Gentleman tried to foster the idea that everyone on the Opposition Benches, and certainly Labour Members—the Liberals are not here, so we do not know their views—supports and condones fraud. He knows perfectly well that no Opposition Member does that. He also knows perfectly well that the major scandals of housing benefit fraud that have been uncovered in London in the past few weeks have been uncovered, yes, by Lambeth and Lewisham councils' internal investigations. The pressure from Lambeth, Lewisham, Croydon and Waltham Forest—not all Labour authorities—has led to the establishment of a London-wide investigation team headed by the treasurers of all the London boroughs, irrespective of party. They are determined to get to the bottom of the massive abuse of housing benefit fraud by landlords, claimants and all sorts of people.

The hon. Gentleman should remember that, in the early 1980s, many people expressed concern when his Government proposed the transfer of payment of housing benefit to local authorities. At that time, the Minister and I were members of the London borough of Haringey. I do not know what view the Minister took of that decision, but Haringey said that it was not a good idea for local authorities to take over the administration of that benefit. Haringey could envisage the precise problem that would arise without a unified system of benefit payment. As a result of the change, London had 32 different systems of administration of housing benefit. That was a perfect opening for the fraudulent abuse of the housing benefit system. That is precisely what happened.

The hon. Gentleman should at least recognise that London Labour authorities have attempted to get to the bottom of the abominable housing benefit fraud perpetrated by landlords. To pick up on what the hon. Member for Ilford, North (Mr. Bendall) said earlier, I also believe that that fraud has been encouraged by the deregulation of rents. That has meant that private sector rents have sky-rocketed and that, as a result, the amount paid out in housing benefit has increased.

I favour a return to a system of rent regulation. I do not see why millions should be paid into the pockets of private sector landlords, bed-and-breakfast millionaires, who have made a fortune out of the Government's refusal to invest in a housing building programme and an affordable rents programme. It is the Government who have lined the pockets of private sector landlords.

I am not in favour of fraud. The hon. Member for Teignbridge and I both sat on the Social Security Select Committee. He has tried to create illusions about what some Labour Members are supposed to have said, but he knows that his suggestions resemble nothing that we said.

En passant—as they say—I find it a bit rich that Conservative Members talk about fraud and dishonesty when all of them, except the Minister, has at least one paid job, if not 20, as well as being a Member of Parliament. That is immoral. People are elected to the House to be full-time Members of Parliament, not to take secondary incomes on behalf of private companies.

Mr. Nicholls: Will the hon. Gentleman look around him for a moment and speculate about where all his hon. Friends are?

Mr. Corbyn: I have honestly not the slightest idea where my hon. Friends are. I imagine that the majority are in their constituencies dealing with the problems occasioned partly by the poverty that many people suffer since the Conservative party came to office.

Mr. Richard Spring (Bury St. Edmunds): The hon. Gentleman referred to rent controls. In New York, the middle class—the tax base—has been driven out, leaving only a limited number of rich people supporting a considerable number of people living in subsidised housing. That has resulted in the diminution of living standards for everyone concerned, distortion in the housing market and a housing policy that no one would sensibly wish to emulate.

Mr. Corbyn: It is a measure of how far the Conservative party has been driven to the right that Conservative Members now quote New York as a dangerous example of a step towards socialism because of its rent control system.

I favour rent controls because rents charged, particularly in London, are astronomical. Private sector tenants come to my advice surgery and tell me that they pay £150 a week for one or two-bedroomed flats, which are often in bad condition, and they cannot get them repaired. Many pay far higher rents. Is it right that landlords should make so much money from rent? The Government lifted rent controls and said that housing benefit levels should be set by the market. A system of rent controls would make more affordable accommodation available and people would not have to spend such a huge proportion of their income on rent.

The Conservative party is trying to increase council and housing association rents.

Mr. Bendall: If we bring back rent controls in the private sector, available properties will dry up. The hon. Gentleman is right to say that it is a matter of supply and demand. As I said in my speech, if local authorities or Governments limited the amount that they paid on rents, it would bring rents down.

Mr. Corbyn: The cash limiting route, which the hon. Member for Ilford, North suggests, would be even worse. It would be as bad as the social fund, writ large. Under the social fund, people must be lucky enough to have their application accepted in the first 10 days of the month. They might then receive a loan, but will be unlikely to receive a grant. If they apply for a social fund payment towards the end of the month, they will have no chance and will go to the bottom of the queue for several months thereafter. Women who are victims of domestic violence must go into hostels and cannot be rehoused because the social fund cannot pay out for the basic necessities of life. That is injustice and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) said, that is a fraud against people who have paid tax and national insurance and are looking for just one job, unlike Conservative Members who hold dozens of jobs.

Mr. Bendall: I was arguing that for one-bedroomed properties in a certain geographical area, the rent that one can pay should be limited. That rent could be £80 or £90 a week. A two-bedroomed flat could cost £100 a week and a three-bedroomed house could cost £120 a week. You have limits and you control them in geographical areas. Rents in parts of the north are much cheaper than in London. Landlords will still have a fair return for their money but, as you rightly say, people will not have to pay £150 a week for one bedroom.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman inadvertently used the wrong expression. All remarks should be addressed to the Chair. Clearly, his remark was intended not for me but for the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn).

Mr. Corbyn: No one was suggesting for a moment, Madam Deputy Speaker, that you were trying to rent out a flat for £150 a week—[Interruption.] We are not allowed to discuss that possibility, but I am sure that you are not.

Conservative Members do not agree that we should restore rent controls. They have encouraged a free market economy and created bed-and-breakfast millionaires, who are making a great deal of money from the social security system. I should prefer more money to be put into capital investment programmes so that all the out-of-work building workers could be given something useful to do, such as building houses for the homeless. That would be a sensible way to approach the issue.

No one condones fraud and I was surprised that the hon. Member for Teignbridge did not mention the serious fraud in Westminster city council. First, it sold its cemeteries for 5p and then it used £15 million of public money to buy them back. An investigation is now being carried out into the council's housing department, resulting in the office of the council's Conservative leader being raided by the chief executive to provide papers for the Director of Public Prosecutions' investigation into the administration of Westminster city council.

I hope that Conservative Members will also condemn the sale of those cemeteries and the unfortunate circumstances that followed in which Westminster residents were expected to pay £15 million to get back something that belonged to them in the first place. By the way, no one was surcharged for that.

Mr. Nicholls: I see no need to distinguish between crime committed by one person or another, whatever his or her political view. Real opposition to crime should be indivisible. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for playing into my hands because he is an honest and honourable man. Every time he finds himself forced to condemn crime among people whom he regards as socially unacceptable bed-and-breakfast millionaires, he tries to justify it by introducing a political dimension. The trouble with the hon. Gentleman is that his mind is set somewhere in Russia in 1880.

Mr. Corbyn: The hon. Gentleman's knowledge of Russian history is slightly awry. Peter Kropotkin had not even written "The Price of Bread" in 1880, which was long before the Bolshevik revolution of 1917. Nevertheless, this is not a debate about Russian history or the fate of the Soviet Union.

I hope that the hon. Gentleman condemns what has happened in Westminster city council. I hope that he will condemn Conservative councillors obstructing that inquiry and the shredding of documents before the investigation officers arrived at the city hall to look at documents involving that council's housing policy.

Mr. Nicholls: I shall pass no comment on matters of which I have no knowledge but which sound as though they are sub judice. Will the hon. Gentleman consider what impression is made on people outside when they hear him talk about crime and justify it by referring to Conservative crime? That is a ludicrous position to adopt, although it is consistent with the hon. Gentleman's approach to such matters.

Crime and the need to condemn it should be indivisible. The hon. Gentleman does neither himself nor his constituents any favours by trying to justify crime in party political terms. As he knows, 1880 was when his ludicrous ideas were being formed.

Mr. Corbyn: The hon. Gentleman's knowledge of history is even weaker than I had thought. Socialist ideas started long before 1880, indeed, before 1780—perhaps the hon. Gentleman will spend some time in the recess doing some reading, as it might help him——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the hon. Gentleman return to the subject of the main debate on social security fraud?

Mr. Corbyn: I do not for a moment condemn the hon. Member for Teignbridge for being politically motivated in his comments. I am sure that nothing could be further from his mind.

The housing benefit fraud, which has gone on in London and elsewhere, is absolutely appalling. It is being dealt with by the actions of local authority councillors and officers who have got together to do so. Nobody condones such fraud, but some credit should be given to those honest local authority officials who have attempted to get to the bottom of the fraud.

As I recall, the Government came to office on a programme designed to get rid of quangos and to ensure that things were better run and there was more accountability. Many jokes used to be made about the former Prime Minister, Jim Callaghan, and his predilection for appointing people to the boards of quangos. We heard much about that in the 1979 election campaign, but there are now many more quangos and far less accountability in our society and far more money is paid directly by central Government to unaccountable organisations.

I am not suggesting that housing associations are intrinsically fraudulant or wrong, but there is much less accountability with respect to the money paid to housing associations to build than there is with respect to the money paid to local authorities to build and administer housing. The same applies to national health service trusts, which are not as accountable as direct health authorities. I could continue with more other examples.

If we are to achieve a more honest society, we must set good examples. The Conservative party and some of the gutter press must set a better example. They should pursue City fraud as assiduously as social security fraud—

Mr. Nicholls: Ah!

Mr. Corbyn: The hon. Gentleman says, "Ah!", but what I am saying is relevant. We must investigate British companies that deliberately site their head offices in tax havens in order to avoid paying tax in this country. The hon. Gentleman knows what the Select Committee on Social Security, which was investigating the fraud involved in the Maxwell pension fund, has been discussing. There must be accountability in our society. One of the causes of the Maxwell pension fraud was the lack of accountability in the way in which the pension fund was run. The same is true of almost every pension fund in which there is a lack of democracy.

We live in a society in which, increasingly, many people are extremely poor and are in danger of losing their benefits. The Government—initially led by the then Prime Minister and the chair of the Conservative party in 1985—are increasingly targeting benefits. None of us condones fraud, but I believe that the Government and many Conservative Members promote such discussions when they know full well that the problem of housing benefit fraud is being addressed by local authorities. In doing so, they are motivated by the fact that such a discussion will divert attention away from their real agenda of cutting the social security bill, targeting benefits and reducing the level of payments to people in desperate need.

I spent yesterday evening visiting young people at the Centrepoint hostel for the homeless in London. Those young people are homeless for all sorts of reasons—some have run away from home, others have been thrown out of home, and many of them have been terribly abused and mistreated. They explained their problems when trying to obtain the benefits to which they are entitled. At my constituency surgery this evening in Finsbury Park, I am likely to be visited by many people who cannot obtain housing benefit, a social fund loan, income support or a pension. Those people live in desperate poverty and have to borrow off their friends and neighbours to survive until next week, which is an indictment of our society.

When the social security legislation was pushed through the House in 1986, one of the key issues was that the Department of Social Security would no longer be obliged to give advice and information to everyone about their right to claim and their eligibility for benefit. That is why many benefits are not taken up in some districts. The advice is simply not forthcoming and the voluntary agencies are so strapped for cash that they are unable to give advice; some of them have had to close down altogether. There is something deeply wrong in a society in which young people, pensioners and those living in desperate poverty who are entitled to benefit cannot obtain it. We must look at both sides of the coin. We must condemn fraud, but also condemn a system that is incapable of paying people who are desperately in need in order to alleviate their poverty.

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): We have covered a tremendous amount of ground this morning, but I am not sure that all the contributions have been meaningful, particularly those from the Opposition. I join my hon. Friends in saying that it is remarkable that, for a debate on a subject on which there is so much national concern, only two Labour Members are present and there is no one in the Chamber to represent other parties, including the Liberal party. That tells us something about the Opposition's commitment to social security fraud, about which every man and woman feels deeply offended.

I was even more depressed by the speech of the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) who seemed to be selective in his condemnation. He seemed to spend more time worrying about tax evasion and other issues that are totally unconnected with the subject of today's debate. He exploited political correctness and appeared to suggest that a good, honest, working-class man was incapable of committing fraud, whereas landlords were all villains.

Mr. Corbyn: When did I say that?

Lady Olga Maitland: That was the clear implication of the hon. Gentleman's speech. As is said so often by Conservative Members, crime is crime, and must be condemned on that basis.

When I listened to the speech of the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), I found myself scratching around to find signs of his commitment to stamping out social security fraud. In his 40-minute speech, he made only scant mention of that subject. He mentioned other issues such as entitlements and tax evasion.

I take heart from the words of the words of the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), who seems to have a genuine commitment. He made a statement to The Guardian which was published in January:

"It is the Labour party that is seen as in favour of mollycoddling people. We have to be tough with ourselves and ask why that has happened. We have to convince people that we are not a tax and spend party."

I congratulate him on making it clear that it is time to look at social security fraud and people who claim money which is not theirs by right.

I congratulate the Government on their genuine commitment to stamping out social security fraud, and on the many measures that they have taken to do so. The world seems to be divided into two categories: workers and shirkers. We appear to have become a nation of cheats who rob the needy. On average, every working person pays £13 every working day to support the jobless, the elderly, children, the sick and the disabled, but last year alone, a mind-boggling £500 million was creamed off—stolen by fraudsters. Some of them are petty criminals; some have a misplaced belief that one small lie does not matter. Others form themselves into well-organised gangs—as happened in the case of the counterfeit books in Brixton, described in the papers today. Those books had a face value of £35 million.

It is deeply disturbing to learn that there appears to have been an Irish nationalist connection with the case in Brixton. It is also disheartening to realise that, for every pound snatched from a needy person, someone who is desperate, frail or vulnerable loses—the money has gone to line the pockets of thieves and cheats who are greedy for easy money.

Cheating the welfare state has been considered fair game, the acceptable face of fraud. Nowadays, the friends and relatives of cheats do not seem as shocked as they used to be—until the day comes when they want to claim benefits themselves, only to discover that the money has already been stolen from them. The cost of social security theft is reckoned to be the equivalent of a penny on income tax.

The time has come to put an end to this so-called national sport. Stealing from benefits agencies is the same as stealing from one's neighbour: the money all comes from the same source. The only difference is that the seemingly anonymous state benefits agencies, funded by the taxpayer, have now had enough.

The public are fighting these shabby people now, which is why I offer my admiration for the Government's determination to stamp out this pernicious scam and for their decision to allocate an additional £10 million to allow the Benefits Agency to deploy more manpower and improved computers, with more cross-referencing. This will help the agency to target money better and to save next year about £1 billion—money which can then be given to the people who deserve it. It is important to remember the vulnerable, not to defend these cheats, a practice which the Labour party, at least by implication, seems to go in for.

It is time to make it abundantly clear that the law will be enforced. People who think that they have been getting away with fraud for years are going to find it infinitely more difficult to do so in future.

My constituency of Sutton and Cheam—agreeable, pleasant and leafy—attracted some fame the other day when I publicly drew attention to the problems of persistent juvenile crime—a problem which is reflected nationwide. In the same way, we are also vulnerable to cheats who put in fraudulent claims. I am often left speechless by the shirkers who come to my surgery and blatantly say that they cannot possibly work.

The other day, a barman told me that he was not working; he was claiming income support. When I asked why he did not find another job in a bar, he told me that he was very selective about the kind of bar in which he wanted to work, and that he was quite happy to wait and to live on a minimal amount of money. How dare he say that? He is a shirker. Perhaps we should follow the Italian example and put an end to giving such people support when they have no intention of seeking work.

I also find it irritating beyond belief when a youngster aged 21 or so tells me that he is not working. I ask him whether he has any plans to work. He says that he cannot find any. I now have an answer for such people. I produce magazines and lists of employment agencies. I offer them the Evening Standard, and I tell them not to come back to see me for at least two weeks and then to tell me how they have got on.

I know that these youngsters can find work. The trouble is that they are selective and lazy and will not do menial labour, plenty of which is available. When my son comes down from university, he picks up two jobs in one day because he is prepared to do dirty work. I do not see why the young should consider themselves above what I call, good honest toil. As far as I can see, it is theft if they claim income support.

As for those who claim sickness benefit, I find it astonishing that people who seem perfectly healthy and capable of working at least in an office, if not in a strenuous job, should tell me, as a man did recently, "My wife is going out to work and I am claiming income support." I should like to know why that man is not going to work. The time has come to be much more rigorous——

Mr. Bradley: Is the hon. Lady suggesting that GPs are falsely giving sick notes to sickness benefits claimants?

Lady Olga Maitland: I am suggesting that GPs are perhaps not careful enough when assessing people's health. Sometimes they become too sympathetic to a person's social circumstances and agree to give him a sick note. GPs need to be given clear guidelines on what is expected of them.

In my constituency, a tremendous amount of good work is being done to uncover fraudulent claims. North Surrey fraud office, covering an area from Croydon all the way to Mitcham and Morden, Wimbledon and Sutton, has saved £6·2 million that would otherwise have been stolen last year. A sub-office dealing with unemployment benefit saves about £6,000 a month by its vigilance. In Sutton, we have two full-time investigators who, last year, prevented the theft of £500,000. With a staff in north Surrey of 19, admittedly costing £500,000 a year, I reckon that the investment has been well worth it, given the size of the savings.

Sutton does not have quite the same problems as some other areas, So I should like to turn my attention to Haringey, whose fraud squad is hard at work. It caught up with nearly £1 million-worth of fraudulent claims last year.

I am reminded of the occasion two years ago when I spent a week in a hostel for the homeless. I was doing a test case for a radio programme about living on income support——

Mr. Bradley: How much were you paid for it?

Lady Olga Maitland: Nothing.

Apart from one other person in that bed-and-breakfast accommodation, the 29 residents were all immigrants—from Turkey, Bangladesh, west Africa and the West Indies. I am not saying that they were frauds; I do say that they came to this country because they knew that we would give them the most generous income support and a life style that they could not enjoy in their own countries. We should give that some attention, too.

I congratulate the Government on encouraging and giving incentives to local authorities to investigate fraudulent claims. The scheme is working well. Sutton has three full-time officers in the field, and the benefits of that are clear. Their experiences would be laughable if it were not for the tragedy of the mockery of the system. Moonlighting is rife and is almost seen as a game of touch and get away. The cheats are almost blatant in their efforts to claim money.

Last week, I was told about a young man who drew up outside our local unemployment office in his work van which was emblazoned with the company name. He shot in, signed up and tried to shoot out. Another man on his way to work turned up in a works van with a ladder on top. More extraordinarily, a taxi driver parked his cab outside the benefits office and went in to sign on while his paying passenger waited in the back seat. In another case, although not in Sutton, a man answered a call on his mobile phone from his office while trying to claim.

Our fraud investigators have a sharp instinct for cheats, and can sense when things are not right. Is a jobless man a little bit too tidy and smart? Could he have just walked in from his office? How energetic and interested is he in seeking work? Is he available for interviews, and how many telephone calls has he made? Has he written many letters? The officers tell me that the busy man suddenly signs himself off the dole when requested to come for an interview when the appointment might conflict with his job. As for the requirement to attend a mandatory week's course, the long-term unemployed person suddenly discovers that he has found work after all.

It is also important to visit employers who take on itinerant casual labour. Such employers engage staff at unsociable hours which suit night security workers and minicab drivers, people who can still clock into the unemployment office during the day. Minicabs should be licensed in the same way as black cabs, so that their operators are exposed to the same disciplines. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Mr. Bendall) on graphically demonstrating the way in which they have abused the system.

Some people who try to claim support from the Benefits Agency should not do so at all. They are well funded, with money in the bank or the building society, although sometimes there is a misunderstanding about what the money is for. I was told this week that it is not unusual for someone to say, "But that is my funeral money. Surely you cannot take that away from me." It should be carefully explained to people seeking income support that we are not trying to run them out of business or deprive them of their funeral money, but there is a difference between having money for one's funeral and claiming money to which one is not entitled.

We must crack down on scroungers, and especially on those who apply in several names. My hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson), who is not in the Chamber at the moment, spoke about people who use fictitious names such as Count Dracula, Jack O'Nory, Donald Duck or Gary Lineker when claiming benefit.

I congratulate my right hon. Friend the previous Secretary of State for Employment on her push to investigate alleged cheating. As a result, 50,000 people suddenly and mysteriously withdrew their claims. She uncovered a fraud in which people working abroad claimed unemployment benefit in Britain. Investigators discovered that groups of workers, mainly in construction, had been hired to work abroad and given time off every 13 weeks to return to Britain to sign on the dole and receieve unemployment benefit. I regret that that is possible if a claimant lives more than six miles from a benefit office.

It is disgraceful that employers have colluded in this way and turned a blind eye to employees who are on the dole. They have some responsibility, because they rely on the fact that people are claiming money in order to pay them lower wages. A London magazine distribution company had 1,000 false names on its books, ranging from William Shakespeare to William Caxton, Mickey Mouse and Nick Faldo. That went on for five years, but I am delighted to say that it ended with a conviction for false claims.

When I first entered Fleet street, some moons ago, there was a definite scam in the old-style printing industry. Printers clocked in using fictitious names, so that they could double-charge on social security. Fraud is rampant in the garment sweatshop industry. A series of visits recently resulted in 190 people withdrawing claims, with a saving to the Government of £330,000.

An investigation of part-time workers in the packaging, land work and perfume industries in the east midlands led to 303 people signing off the unemployment register. In the south-east, 733 people left the register, saving the state £670,000. In Scotland, more than £5 million was saved when investigations resulted in more than 7,000 people withdrawing claims.

It is appropriate that my hon. Friends, but not Opposition Members, should pay attention to new age travellers. It is offensive to see the way in which those people trample across our country and have the nerve to lay down the law according to their lights. The party is over for these hippies. From now on, they will not be able to get dole money in the free and easy way that they have obtained it in the past. They never show any intention of looking for work. The war on those dole cheats reached new heights when investigators learned that £55 million in benefits should not have been handed out in 1991. It was discovered that one in five of the 230,000 claimants was a cheat.

The challenge in dealing with cunning cheats who use a variety of well-tried and up-to-date rewarding techniques is depressing. Many claimants know the complex rules by heart, and are well versed in how to get round them. One rule that is exploited to the full is that unemployed people are entitled to seek work in their own field first, even if it is known that work is unlikely to become available. That gives the more imaginative claimant unlimited scope to come up with occupations that are disappearing or in which there are few readily available jobs.

On a broader level, I have found when talking to people who are on income support for genuine reasons that I have had to point out to them that, if they are in a certain job and the work is finished, they should look for work in another sector. There tends to be a rather blinkered approach. People must understand that, in their lifespans, they may have to change their careers two or three times. Mobility and flexibility have to be encouraged.

Housing benefit abuse has been well documented by Conservative Members. It is a scandal. In Sutton, we are exposed to the same problems of collusion between landlords and their tenants, as elsewhere. We hear of the landlord raising the rent, the tenant claiming the increased rent and the two splitting the profit. Sometimes, tenants make claims on fictitious addresses, arranging for money to be sent to other addresses before being sent on to them. I welcome the suggestion of a national cross-referencing index on multiple housing benefit claims to ensure that it is impossible for those cheats to get away with it.

To multiple addresses can be added multiple names. In the most bizzare case that I have heard of, a man had 37 different identities. That particularly happens with immigrants. It may be politically incorrect to touch on this, but I will identify their origins. They are largely west Africans, with highly complicated names. The trend in that section of the community should not be left unnoted.

Our European friends are not much better. In the 1950s and 1960s, Italian immigrants flocked to this country, eager to work, to win a better life style and to contribute, and they succeeded. The country's presentation changed with the rise in the number of Italian restaurants, pizza bars and similar establishments, of which Sutton has an excellent supply. However, the situation has now changed.

The Sunday Express ran a front page headline saying:

"Crackdown on Euro Spongers—Lilley moves to stop Britain being a soft touch on handouts."

I congratulate my right hon. Friend on that, and I congratulate a campaigning newspaper on doing a worthwhile task. It certainly had a case to report, and that case has been taken up in other newspapers.

For instance, the Daily Mail ran a story saying:

"Rocco is Italian, idle and a heroin addict and you pay for him to live in comfort."

Rocco is aged 22, and his story is depressing. He came to this country. He knows that we are a soft touch. He picks up £67 a fortnight, and in addition, £90 a week for a shared room in a smartly decorated King's Cross bed-and-breakfast hotel—a useful sum. I can only describe him as a permanent loafer and a scrounger, but at least he gives the British welfare system high praise because it is easy to tap into. He says:

"In Italy, you would never get money if you haven't worked, and you would never get a flat that's paid for."

He simply cannot believe his luck. Furthermore, as a citizen from a fellow European Community member country, he is entitled to all the free medical treatment he needs, and he is a drug addict. He has access to the best possible NHS treatment, free housing, income support and the occasional crisis loans. Now, he teaches others how to milk the system.

Another Italian, Marco Redi, aged 26, has spent the past seven years sponging off our system claiming money from our social security system. He is a drug addict and has HIV and is getting the best possible treatment. He is blatant about his idleness and lack of willingness to seek work. He says:

"In Italy you get minimal help but here, it's very nice—I'm staying."

That is ironic, given that unemployed British nationals living in Germany, France and Spain get no financial help. Their insurance-based systems do not pay out unless the claimant has been in work. In Italy, a Briton down on his luck gets only 20 per cent. of his salary, for just six months—and that is only if he can prove that he has been in work. No proof, no dole.

In short, thousands of foreigners have been coming to Britain and claiming millions of pounds of benefits. Therefore, I welcome the Government's announcement this week that they intend to close that loophole in the income support rules and bring to an end the scam from which 10,000 have benefited, to the tune of £17 million.

Another area of abuse concerns single-parent families. People seem to be nervous of identifying that social grouping. However, whether or not it is politically correct, I do not hesitate to do so, because single-parent families, like everyone else, have responsibilities to society. They are not immune from and above the law. They must abide by the rules, and should not be given a free hand to cheat and to take money that is not theirs to claim.

One example of abuse is a single mother in her housing-benefit-subsidised council flat who allows her boy friend, who may be in work, to move in with her. Technically, she is no longer single, and she should not claim the advantageous benefits available to single parents.

Often, the cheat begins unwittingly. The boy friend spends the odd night in her flat, then weekends, then he is there more often than not, and then he becomes a permanent fixture and part of the household. It is right that we should rigorously ensure that those women who are backed up by a partner are brought to book if they continue to claim benefits to which they are not entitled.

Mr. Bradley: Can the hon. Lady tell the House the precise number of single parents in the position that she described? Precisely how many claimants is she talking about, and what is her source for that statistic?

Lady Olga Maitland: I am unable, at this moment, to give the precise figures, but I shall provide the hon. Gentleman with them at a later date. The background to what I am describing has come from my local Benefits Agency office.

Another abuse of the system is fictitious desertion. A woman with children pretends that her husband or lover has deserted her, and then claims housing benefit, income support, one-parent benefit and council tax benefit. All told, that can add up to more than £100 a week free of tax. It is little wonder that some couples go to considerable lengths to pretend that their relationship is over. We must breed a new habit of honesty. Such flexible households are not above the law, and should not consider themselves free to claim money that is clearly not theirs.

Another deeply serious point, which has already been raised, is the extensive theft of benefit books. Last week, a man in Sutton was arrested for stealing cheques sent to tenants in a multiple-occupation house. Officials say that that is just one small example of a large story. They estimate that the biggest losses come from stolen and counterfeit benefit books and girocheques. In north Surrey in the first quarter of 1991, more than 62,000 social security books were recorded as lost, stolen or destroyed. The head of the Benefit Agency's organised fraud unit said:

"It is easier to counterfeit a benefit book or girocheque than it is to go into a bank with a shotgun. There are fewer risks and the returns are as good."

In the past, a criminal having 100 stolen books could draw £8,000 a week, and might hand over only 5 per cent. of that to the accomplices who posed as claimants.

I congratulate the Government on acknowledging the seriousness of that problem, and my hon. Friend the Minister on demonstrating that much work has been done to make sure that such counterfeiting cannot occur in future. The message must go out to fraudsters and forgers that they can no longer get away with it. Benefit books will be like bank notes—forgeries will be easily detected in future, and those using them will be brought to book.

Clear guidance must be given to post offices and others who are confronted by a claimant who says, "My book has been stolen or mislaid. Can I have another?" Double encashment has been a great loophole in the system, but it is now being closed.

A rational approach must also be taken to invalidity benefit. Can it be true that the number entitled to claim it has more than doubled in the past decade, from 700,000 to 1·5 million? Have we suddenly become a deeply sickly society? I believe that doctors have unwittingly been over-generous to their patients, in helping them to claim more than that to which they were entitled—bearing in mind that invalidity benefit is higher than unemployment benefit.

More than two thirds of the general practitioners in a survey by "Monitor Weekly" admitted that they had signed benefit forms for patients whom they knew not to be sick, or whose sickness did not prevent them from working. Most newspapers argue that changes should be made. On 12 June, The Times commented:

"The number of claimants has more than doubled, although there is no evidence of a corresponding increase in ill health."

The Daily Express asked:

"why should the benefit not be re-examined . . . a stringent medical examination would seem only fair."

Although medical examinations are not as widespread as they might be, it is interesting to note that 50,000 claimants failed to report for a medical assessment last year, and consequently had their invalidity benefit stopped.

We must give GPs clear guidelines, and educate them in the fact that their job is to make a medical assessment and that they should not confuse their priorities. A GP may assess a crane driver with a history of heart attacks as unfit for work, but would that man be unfit for work behind a desk?

It is hard to understand how one GP managed to support the claims of a farmer who stole £36,000 by claiming invalidity benefit while doing three jobs. He was originally diagnosed as suffering from multiple sclerosis. I am glad that his condition was not too serious, but he managed to continue running his 30-acre farm, undertake sub-contracts and run a haulage business. His family—a wife, two sons and a daughter—and another farmer all colluded with him.

The examples are rife and rampant. One could go on for days describing cases of scamming, cheating and shirking. I congratulate the Government on their enormous determination to increase the search for more fraudulent claims. Their target of £60 million nationally on a £10 million investment in investigation resources is enormously worth while.

We must continue with our drive to encourage local authorities with incentives. There is no doubt that my Sutton council is encouraged, and that it has stretched its energies to seek our fraudulent claims, because it knows that it will get back a percentage to carry on with its work. The loopholes for abuse are still there. We must continue to modernise our information technology, and we must continue to update our cross-referencing to make it impossible for people to get away with fraud.

Above all, we must encourage a public spirit of coming forward with information about social security abuse. Information from the public already forms a major part of the basis on which investigations are made.

People should not feel guilty about giving information about their neighbours. They do not feel guilty if they report a bank robbery, and they do not feel guilty about reporting a major crime in another area. Why should they feel guilty about reporting that a neighbour is cheating? Who is more worthy of protection—the petty criminal neighbour or the needy victim who is prevented from getting the just help he needs? The money that is saved will help him even more.

The issue raises the question of identity cards. If we know who everyone is, we can immediately tap into the computer and thus make fraud far more difficulty. Some people say that identity cards are another form of Big Brother. In certain situations, such cards are worth while. We are all surrounded by Big Brothers anyway, because we are on various computers and we carry various cards.

Identity cards would give us just the means of getting information for the benefit of us all. Employers should follow the French system of logging with the Department of Social Security the names of all those whom they have laid off. That would not cover everyone, but it would make it more difficult for people to claim benefit to which they were not entitled.

I may have seemed rather hard, and to be pushing those who carry out scams and who are shirkers. They are indeed a very unpleasant part of our national life. However, I recognise that the vast majority of those who claim social security are entirely genuine, and that a far smaller number are fraudulent. People who are honest and in genuine need have nothing to fear about claiming benefits. Those who claim them fraudulently must know that we shall find them wherever they are. We will catch them. We will make them repay their debts. We will make them go to court and, if necessary, they will be heavily fined, and may even pay the ultimate price of going to prison. It is morally wrong for people to steal, to lie, to cheat and to punish the very people whom society most wants to help.

Mr. Richard Spring (Bury St. Edmunds): It is a great pleasure to follow my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland), who made a great and comprehensive speech which was thoroughly well researched. All of us in the Chamber enjoyed listening to her.

The hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) talked about a Jurassic tendency in the Conservative party. I have not yet seen the film, but I know that the Jurassic tendency applies to dinosaurs. Dinosaurs disappeared because of evolutionary improvement. Does evolutionary improvement account for the fact that the Labour Benches are so bereft of Members today? I can offer no other rational explanation.

Apart from Jurassic tendency, what is of great interest —I hope that the ladies and gentleman of the press will pick this up—is the marshmallow tendency: appealing on the outside but no substance in the middle. I am referring, of course, to the Members of the Liberal Democrat party who are so conspicuous by their absence today. On an issue of such importance, it is disgraceful that that party, which is always so sanctimonious about social security, should not be represented here today.

I imagine that the Liberal Democrats will be in Christchurch today talking about the need to increase pensions, benefits and so on, but the fact is that pensioners, like everybody else in receipt of benefits, suffer from fraud and abuse, and their investigation is part of the whole review of social security. Therefore, it is a great disappointment, which I hope will be noticed by everybody, that no Liberal Democrat Members of Parliament are here today. As I said earlier, it is the marshmallow tendency—looking good on the outside, but having no substance in the middle.

All hon. Members are in favour of a benefits system that protects the most vulnerable in our society—the sick, the disabled, the unemployed and the elderly—and an element of Conservative thinking is that there should be a safety net through which people cannot fall. We are spending £80 billion out of nearly £250 billion on social security. About £50 billion of the £250 billion is being borrowed and the amount of interest which has to be paid on that sum is increasing. If, therefore, there is any way of reducing public expenditure by cutting the fraudulent abuse of taxpayers' money, wherever it exists, we must do it.

Our duty in terms of social security is to help people in need. Every pound that is wasted or lost to fraud means less for those who are in real need. As the Under-Secretary of State pointed out, it is instructive and important to note that anti-fraud activity will save £1 billion in 1993-94—a substantial sum of money. I very much welcome the additional resources that are being made available to the Benefits Agency so that it can use modern technology to weed out false claims. The additional £10 million a year to be provided for this purpose is welcome. The fact that the anti-fraud yield was £341 million in 1990-91 and that it has risen to nearly £500 million in the last fiscal year is, again, to be welcomed.

I refer to the problem of bogus asylum seekers, to whom the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) referred. There are millions of potential economic migrants in the world. Outside Russia, 25 million Russians are having their civil liberties, including their language rights and political rights, removed. We see in eastern Europe the potential for economic migration on a substantial scale. Because of our generosity as a nation in always taking in people who are genuine refugees, something which we have done for hundreds of years, we act as a magnet to people who are in difficulty. While we have always welcomed genuine refugees, we now have the economic migrant. That is why all of us welcome the fact that the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill will clamp down on bogus asylum seekers and speed up the assessment process.

Two thirds of the asylum seekers arriving at our ports do so with no valid documents and might be suspect. The hon. Member for Islington, North said that fingerprinting was wrong, but it is at least a unique record of each individual. How else are we supposed to prevent abuse? Photographs and documents can be doctored and the solution advocated by the hon. Gentleman and his colleagues is in fact no solution at all. I hope that we shall continue to deal rigorously with a serious problem which can only grow worse as the years go by in view of the political turbulence all over the world. The traditional hospitality of the British people must not be abused. In a period of high unemployment all over Europe, we must protect British people, their jobs and their employment opportunities from bogus asylum seekers and others.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam graphically outlined the unparalleled generosity of the British taxpayer to other EC citizens. Newspapers and surveys by interested parties have uncovered enormous potential financial abuse. Britain is unique in that someone arriving by ferry can be given DSS leaflets in a number of European languages to tell him how to claim benefit. We are the only country to provide that service, which is almost an encouragement.

British nationals visiting Germany, Italy or France get no help at all. As my hon. Friend said, those countries have an insurance-based system under which one cannot claim benefit unless one has contributed to the insurance programme. The only two countries in which such benefit is automatic is Belgium and Ireland, and it lasts for three months. We must compare our social security set-up with that on the continent because many people involved in this area believe that our system leads to abuse as people come here with the intention of claiming benefit.

What always amuses my hon. Friends is that if the Labour party can attack this country or cite an aspect of life in another country which is better than ours it will unhesitatingly do so. I have heard the chandeliers in the Moscow underground being used as proof that Moscow had a better public transportation system, even under the old creaky communist system. Labour Members often cite France as an example of a country with a superior social security system. However, British nationals going to France receive no housing benefit. That is in contrast to newspaper reports which show clearly that in London housing benefits of up to £300 a week are being paid to EC nationals. That is an abuse of the system. British and other

[Mr. Richard Spring]

EC citizens going to France get absolutely nothing and information provided by the French equivalent of the DSS is provided only in French.

Germany is often supposed to have a pension system that is superior to ours, but only people who have worked and paid social security contributions for at least 12 months in the preceding three years can receive unemployment benefit. Needless to say, information is available only in German. By contrast, Denmark has a more rigorous system, and there are limits. It has a generous unemployment benefit system—people get 90 per cent. of their previous wage. Once again, EC nationals cannot qualify unless they have been living in Denmark for 12 months and have paid into the state unemployment fund. Needless to say, information about that is available only in Danish.

In Spain, there are no payments and information is available only in Spanish. In Portugal and Luxembourg, there are no benefits either. As I said, the only two countries in which there is something parallel to our system are Belgium and Ireland and payments continue for only three months.

There is substantial abuse because of the comprehensive social security benefits that are available to EC residents who come into the United Kingdom. However, I am glad that that has been tightened up and, undoubtedly, my hon. Friend the Minister will allude to that later. In the United Kingdom, proof of nationality must be provided. At the local DSS office, the interviewee must show that he or she has completed a national insurance record. That is helpful.

Another matter that must be examined is whether the rent is reasonable. If it is shown that rent is reasonable, 100 per cent. housing benefit is paid. What is the definition of "reasonable"? It is arbitrary. In central London, rent can be expensive and, therefore, costly to the taxpayer. Therefore, probably and potentially, an indeterminate amount of money is given to those individuals to the disadvantage of genuine British claimants. I am glad that that has been tightened up, but more could be done in that direction.

My hon. Friend the Minister talked about involving local authorities and sharing in the savings from fraud. I commend him on those remarks, because the new set-up announced in April gives local authorities an incentive to be involved. Local authorities keep 15 per cent. of the savings generated and, through anti-fraud efforts, that will rise above a threshold to 20 per cent. in 1993-94 and 17·5 per cent. in 1994-95. The reason for the rise is to give a boost and encouragement to effect those savings. Out of that will come a total saving of some £185 million, of which £45 million will usefully be retained by local authorities.

I turn my attention to the question of students. I have recently visited Japan and Taiwan and I was delighted with the number of students coming to the United Kingdom from those countries. Of course, they are areas of considerable economic growth. If we examine the history of Britain, students coming here have then returned to their home countries and played an important part in the lives of their nations. We should continue to welcome students for as long as we have excellent universities—and, of course, we shall continue to have them in the future.

In 1991, which is the last year for which full figures are known, 200,000 students from outside the EC came to Britain. While that is excellent news for the reason that I suggested—enhancing British prestige and increasing British influence in their home countries—it is clear from newspaper reports that there is abuse. Students working part time have certainly claimed income support in the past.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam referred to identity cards. I should like my hon. Friend the Minister to give an assurance on that, because, apparently, in student cities and towns—expecially in London—there is a roaring trade in bogus EC identify cards. It is difficult to determine the difference, for example, between a Colombian and a Spaniard, and other nationalities. That places considerable strains on the system and it is abused.

Another matter with regard to people arriving here is the increasing number of people who seem to appeal to the Home Office for a review of their conditions of entry to the United Kingdom to gain income support. While the Home Office is reviewing that, benefit is still paid. My understanding is that 10,000 people from abroad will not now receive income support, which involves savings of £17 million and is very welcome. However, asylum seekers will continue to receive benefit while the Home Office processes their cases under the urgent case rules. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will keep that process under constant review to ensure that it is not abused.

The scourge of the new age travellers, happily, has not afflicted the part of the world that I am privileged to represent, Suffolk and East Anglia. Under the actively seeking work test introduced in 1989, real attempts are now being made to address this problem. My constituents were very alarmed recently when a gipsy horse fair was held in my constituency. Happily, it passed off without major incident, but there was a considerable fear that a whole range of different individuals, including new age travellers, would arrive.

It is right that individuals who clearly have no intention of working—whom, in the past, DSS officials have bent over backwards to help—should now have to take on personal responsibilities and that their relationship to work should be more clearly defined.

The hon. Member for Islington, North made an interesting and curious speech. It is always comforting for my hon. Friends and myself to know that the Labour party has such individuals propagating a certain point of view. The whole thrust and ethos of his speech was less appropriate to a debate about social security fraud and abuse than to a national heritage debate. Such a speech, reflecting such attitudes, should be inscribed, illuminated, and put up next to a famous tomb in a cemetery not far from his constituency, where there are more specialist millionaires than the bed-and-breakfast millionaires to whom he constantly alluded.

It is clear that there is a feeling in this country that we have a comprehensive welfare system, which spreads far and wide and provides help to many people. It has been open to abuse, but there is a sentiment in my constituency and elsewhere that fraud and abuse must stop. Much of the evidence is clear and has been provided in the courts; much is anecdotal. The I-can-get-away-with-it mentality is deeply offensive to the British people, who are very fair-minded and have a liberal disposition to those who are disadvantaged for whatever reason.

We do not want to become a society of sneakers and snoopers, but I endorse the sentiments of my hon. Friends that it is up to us who observe the flagrant abuse of the system to make it known. That is in the interests of genuine recipients. All of us have a part to play in this.

There is an increasing mood of revulsion in the country about social security fraud. We are in a period of high unemployment, yet there are occasions when it is difficult to obtain seasonal labour in certain parts of my constituency because the black economy has become so entrenched. Part and parcel of the Government's intention in reducing taxation at many levels was to do away with the black economy.

We should give absolutely no quarter to cheats. That is very much the sentiment in my constituency and all decent people will welcome the moves announced by the Department of Social Security. Only genuine recipients with a genuine need should receive benefits. I am comforted by my hon. Friend the Minister's earlier remark that he will do everything possible to root out fraud and abuse—root and branch.

1.9 pm

Mr. Bradley: This has been an interesting, wide-ranging and informative debate. I intend to be brief in winding up because I want to hear the Minister comment on the many points that have been made. I hope that he will allow me to intervene in his speech, if appropriate, to clarify some of his answers.

Listening to the debate, I felt that I was in a no-win situation because I thought that I had made it absolutely clear that the Labour party was as committed as the Government to rooting out genuine fraud. I identified organised fraud as the major problem on which we need to concentrate. Many of the Government's initiatives have centred on organised fraud. Conservative Members who spoke earlier in the debate accused me of being a revisionist within the Labour party for taking that view. However, as the debate unfolded, it appeared that I had not made the position clear and that Conservative Members, especially the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland), thought that I was soft on fraud. Clearly, my words were not worth the paper on which they were written.

May I therefore reiterate, on behalf of Her Majesty's Opposition, that we are committed to rooting out genuine fraud wherever it occurs, whether it is perpetrated by individuals or organised gangs. Whether it is against the social security system—the Government have set a target of £1 billion—or involves tax evasion, totalling £4 billion, it is a loss to the public purse and the taxpayer and means that essential services such as social security are consequently underfunded. I hope that I have made that clear.

Lady Olga Maitland: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Bradley: I shall happily give way to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam so that she can confirm that she hears what I say, has watched my lips, and will now accept the Labour party's position on the matter.

Lady Olga Maitland: Will the hon. Gentleman clarify the importance of chasing, with all the energy that it deserves, the multiple number of petty criminals? By their sheer numbers, their scale of fraud is every bit as important as the small number of major fraudulent claimants.

Mr. Bradley: I could not have been clearer in stating the Labour party's position on clamping down on fraud, wherever it may be, but—I was accused earlier of not saying "but" so I shall stress it now—the hon. Lady is wrong because most fraud is organised rather than perpetrated by individual claimants. If she can quote figures to the contrary, I shall accept a further intervention, but mere supposition is not good enough. Would she like me to give way to her on that point?

Lady Olga Maitland: No.

Mr. Bradley: Right.

Mr. Bendall: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Bradley: If the hon. Gentleman wishes to intervene on that specific point, I shall give way.

Mr. Bendall: I remind the hon. Gentleman that I gave him some specific figures.

Mr. Bradley: I do not wish to enter a dialogue across the Chamber, because I am sure that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, would quickly intervene, but the hon. Gentleman's figures did not undermine my basic contention that the vast amount of fraud throughout the social security system—housing benefit, council tax and social security benefits—is organised. That is what the Government have been concentrating on recently.

I have made it clear that, wherever that abuse comes from, the Labour party is determined to tackle it in the same way as the Government, and I hope that the Government will accept that position.

I have listened to the debate with interest. I shall put aside the rather insulting comment by the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam about our GP service, but she must justify many of the points that she raised. I welcome the fact that the hon. Lady has agreed to write to me about those matters. I was surprised when she said that the evidence for the abuse that she was claiming came from her local benefits agency. If that was the case, it may have clamped down on the abuse, which may no longer exist. I look forward to receiving information from the agency on the exact numbers and extent of the abuse in the context in which the hon. Lady mentioned it.

I do not want to concentrate too much on the hon. Lady's speech, but I was pleased that she was able to tell the House that her local authority is achieving its initiative targets. The success rate is patchy throughout the country and I look forward to the Minister making further comments on that. The patchiness is not due to lack of initiative or effort on the part of local authorities, many of which are finding it difficult to reach the lower end of the target scale, let alone the upper end. Therefore, they cannot benefit from the incentive of receiving 100 per cent. of the money retrieved. That creates difficulties when transferring resources into the fraud sections of local authority departments and ensuring that those authorities receive the money for the effort that they make. I am pleased that the Sutton and Cheam authority is achieving its targets.

We have had an interesting and wide-ranging debate. We have made the Labour party's position clear—we welcome many of the initiatives already undertaken and some of the new ones mentioned by the Minister today. I stress the support that the Labour party gives to the excellent work being undertaken throughout the country through a multi-agency approach with local authorities, benefits agencies, police and other agencies working together in rooting out fraud. They have made immense strides in the short time given to them to organise and establish internal organisations and to ensure that they work as effectively as possible. I hope that, in time, resources will be made available to ensure that staff are properly trained so that matters can be dealt with sensitively and efficiently.

I repeat my concern that when the Government attempt to root out fraud, they apply the same effort and commitment to ensure that those eligible for benefits, whatever they may be, receive their just entitlements. It is particularly important that, at a time when the poor are getting poorer, and the rich richer—there is no question but that that is true, as all the statistics show—we ensure that poor people receive the meagre benefit payments to which they are entitled. I hope that the Government, through their own publicity and by supporting the excellent work of welfare rights officers and local authority social services departments, will continue the take-up campaigns to ensure that individual claims are dealt with efficiently and claimants receive the money to which they are entitled.

A number of hon. Members mentioned the clampdown on new age travellers. It is an understandable move, but it has caused great anxiety among the public. We must not confuse that subject with the view that people are not actively seeking work. All the surveys carried out, whether by Government Departments, advisory committees that advise the Government or independent research, clearly show that the overwhelming majority of unemployment benefit claimants actively seek work. It is only a tiny minority who do not—I am pleased to see the Minister nodding in agreement and I know that the Secretary of State has made the same point. The overwhelming majority of claimants are genuine and are actively seeking work.

The latest report on the subject, issued this year by the Low Pay Unit, written by Alex Bryson and John Jacobs, and entitled "Policing the Workshy"—I commend it to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam—clearly showed that people are actively seeking work and are prepared to revise their initial hopes of finding a certain type of job, given the limited number of opportunities available in the climate of high unemployment. These people are sometimes not well advised by the unemployment officers with whom they deal, who should explain to them more clearly that it would be in their best interests to reduce their expectations.

Perhaps one of the greatest impediments to seeking work is the fact that people have to fill in so many forms and complete a great many interview references showing that they have been going out looking for work. That time might be better spent actually looking for work. Still, the results of the research are clear: the vast majority of the unemployed are actively seeking work and the only reason why they claim unemployment benefit is that they cannot find a job of any kind.

The Opposition are committed to ensuring that the social security system enables all who are entitled to them to receive the benefits that they so justly deserve. Although we need to look at fraud, we should bear in mind that there is also fraud that needs stamping out in the tax system and in public life generally, whereupon the money can be used in everyone's best interests.

In the pages of the Financial Times, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, writing about attempts to control public expenditure, implied that one reason for the massive hike in the social security budget was the success of the Government's take-up campaigns, urging people to apply for benefits. I seek an absolute assurance from the Minister that in the public expenditure review—we shall return to it in the autumn, when I am sure the Government will give us plenty of opportunities to debate their attempts to curb the social security budget—there will be no suggestion of the Government's undermining people's just entitlement to benefit. The Government must ensure that benefits that are still not the subject of 100 per cent. take-up are publicised by Government and local authorities. Only thus can we be certain that the people who deserve our support through the social security system will actually receive it.

Mr. Burt: This has been a most interesting and enjoyable debate, as these Friday mornings often are. We have attempted to shoot one or two stereotypes. The Government have been at pains to confirm that we pay as much attention to ensuring that those entitled to money get it as we do to curbing fraud and abuse. The Opposition spokesman has been equally determined to show that the Labour party is as rigorous about fraud and abuse as it is about ensuring that everyone gets his just deserts. Back Benchers have united to condemn Her Majesty's absent Liberals. So we have all had an enjoyable morning.

We have done some serious work along the way. I shall reply to the speeches of my hon. Friends before dealing with matters raised by the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley). I thank all hon. Members who have taken part in the debate.

I am thankful for the help that we have received from members of the London cab drivers club and the Licensed Taxi Drivers Association. I pay tribute to them for their assistance in dealing with the matter raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Mr. Bendall) of trying to uncover fraud in the taxi business. We welcome their co-operation. We work closely with them and will continue to do so. The members of those bodies work with some other Departments and the matter raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North about the operation at Heathrow is for the Department of Employment.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North could have raised another issue, but, perhaps because of his position, he decided not to do so. I shall raise it for him. It is that those who drive taxis and register as unemployed, thus taking money to which they are not entitled, are helping to drive out of business those whom my hon. Friend seeks to help. They are taking their jobs. My hon. Friend was right to mention the efforts of the taxi drivers who, day in and day out, look after people in this place. Their honesty and integrity is impugned by those who break the rules and we welcome their efforts to assist us in trying to discover the culprits.

My hon. Friend spoke about housing benefit and payments to landlords. He has been kind enough to write to me on the subject. I shall make clear the rules relating to the direct payment of landlords. Local authorities are required to make direct payment of housing benefit to landlords when direct payments for service charges and rent arrears are already being made from income support. Secondly, it is paid in cases where tenants have arrears that are equivalent to eight times or more the weekly rent, unless it is in the overriding interest of the tenant that the benefit should not be paid directly to the landlord.

Local authorities may use their discretion to make direct payments of housing benefit to landlords when the tenant consents to it or requests it. They can also be made without the tenant's consent if that is considered to be in the interest of the tenant and his family. Such payments can also be made without the tenant's consent if he has left the accommodation to which the benefit relates and there are rent arrears at that address, but the amount paid directly must not exceed the arrears.

I share the worries of my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North. The Department encourages closer liaison between local authorities and landlords. I was interested in his idea of a registration scheme to control fraud. It has attractions and I will bring my hon. Friend's suggestion to the attention of my colleagues in the Department of the Environment. The day-to-day administration of housing benefit is the responsibility of local authorities and we are cautious about imposing additional burdens on them. The issues that my hon. Friend raised are precisely those that the cross-London steering group will address. I shall say more about that group in my speech.

My hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson), who was supported by my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Mr. Sykes), spoke about the problems of those who live and work in tourist areas. Such problems arise because of the movement of people and the claiming of benefit, sometimes inappropriately. We must maintain a balance. Where people live is largely a matter of individual choice, and the free movement of people is an essential feature of an efficient labour market. The Government do not wish to restrict that.

It would be wrong to impose controls through the benefits system on the area or type of accommodation to which people wished to move. To go down such a restrictive route in a democratic society would be fraught with difficulty. It is better to ensure that the conditions of entitlement to benefit are rigorously satisfied and that those who abuse the system lose all claim to financial support from the taxpayer.

That is why I was pleased that my hon. Friend spoke of Operation Sea Breeze and that my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) spoke of the recent operation in Preston. Only by making it clear and public to people that those who abuse the social security system will be caught shall we be able to make progress.

We will continue to bear in mind the problems of tourist resorts when we are targeting our clampdowns, and I hope that my hon. Friends will be reassured by that. We will also look at the suggestion of improving the contact between the Benefits Agency and the public in disclosing fraud. We also now have the national service level agreement with local authority associations, designed to improve inter-agency liaison and co-operation, particularly in relation to housing benefit frauds in tourist areas, to which my hon. Friends referred. We will continue to develop those relationships further to improve our record in catching those who abuse the system. I hope that those measures will be of assistance to my many hon. Friends who represent tourist areas and associated places.

The speech of the hon. Member for Belfast, North (Mr. Walker) reminded us of the problems over the water. I was pleased that he did so, and am grateful for his attendance this morning. I listened to him with care. Just the other week, I was fortunate enough to visit the Province, in connection with the launching of the Child Support Agency there. I enjoyed my visit—I always enjoy my visits there—and I look forward to making more. I will ensure that his remarks, which fall more appropriately in the remit of my right hon. and hon. Friends in the Northern Ireland Office, are brought to their attention.

My hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) made an interesting and powerful speech. He was kind enough to apologise to me because he is unable to stay for the winding-up speeches. He reminded us most importantly that the money that the social security system distributes is not its own money. It does not belong to the Department, to the Chancellor or, sadly, to me. It is money which we have taken from people, who have earned it, to ensure that public services and the needs of others are looked after. That reiterates the point that Ministers have made from the Dispatch Box many times. Those who abuse the system are not getting back at the Tory Government but robbing their friends and neighbours. My hon. Friend made that point extremely clearly.

My hon. Friend also made an effective point about the attitudes of working people towards fraud. He made a clear distinction between those attitudes and the attitudes that we sometimes hear from those who represent left of centre parties. The hon. Member for Withington made his party's view clear, and I respect and understand that. However, some Opposition Members have said things that have caused us worry, and may have caused the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) to make his comments, which have been quoted today, about molly-coddling and the Labour party's past associations. We should welcome a break with those associations, but they have been at least part of the reason why the Labour party has seen such a slide in its support in the past decade.

The hon. Member for Withington, like others, spoke about new age travellers. Without necessarily condemning the life styles of those who seek to be alternative, many of us feel strongly that they should not support that by claiming from the rest of society. The concern about new age travellers is not that they want to be different—many people want and are entitled to be different; the question is whether they are entitled to be different at other people's expense. Unfortunately, new age travellers symbolise those who want their alternative life styles to be supported by the very people whose attitudes they mock and deride. That is why it has been necessary to take action.

Nevertheless, the Department must always remember that any measures it takes cannot be directed at individual groups on the basis of, "We don't like your face, John." We must draw up rules that apply to all, which is what we have done in toughening the regulations on the requirement actively to seek work, about which my hon. Friends feel so strongly. The Employment Service ensures that all those who register for unemployment benefit are taking reasonable steps to find employment. Regulations were introduced in December 1992 to remove entitlement to income support from unemployed people and childless couples who do not actively seek work.

Measures have also been taken to ensure that benefit claims by new age travellers do not inconvenience ordinary members of the public. One or two of my hon. Friends referred to the trestle tables set up to pay benefits on one occasion last summer and said that that was awful. I understand their point, but, on behalf of the Benefits Agency, I must explain that it must bear in mind the care and consideration that it owes to other claimants. If a large group of new age travellers descends on a particular office, that can be intimidating for the staff and for other claimants. On past occasions, we have been requested by the civil authorities to find an alternative way to pay benefits to new age travellers and that has been the driving force, rather than any desire to give preferential treatment to new age travellers or others who descend en masse on a particular office.

We have tried to ensure that it is clearly understood that new age travellers must satisfy the same conditions for entitlement to benefit as everyone else by proving that they are both available for and actively seeking work. We maintain close co-operation with the police to minimise any disruption to other benefit claimants and to prevent new age travellers from making fraudulent benefit claims.

The Benefits Agency has established a central contact point to enable police intelligence units to share information so that district managers can be forewarned of approaching groups of travellers. That will help the agency to handle benefit claims in the most efficient way, with due regard to the needs of its other claimants. It is well aware of the need to clamp down on any fraudulent claims.

I hope that that explanation has put the matter in context. I recognise that, in total, new age travellers constitute a small proportion of those claiming income support or unemployment benefit. However, in the areas where they congregate they can cause considerable disruption to ordinary people who are going about their business and are frightened by the presence of people who are identifiably different. Of course, the fact that a person's appearance is different is not the issue, but it is wrong when such people use their numbers to be intimidatory. The Benefits Agency is entitled to feel uncomfortable about that, on other people's behalf. My hon. Friends have made their position clear and I am happy to assure them that the agency takes the matter seriously.

The hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) reminded me of bygone days. A decade ago, I served with the hon. Gentleman on Haringey council. It was wonderful in the early days. If it had not existed, the Sun would have had to invent it—it did everything that was expected from a loony left Labour council. It was marvellous. There were three political parties on the council at that time—[Interruption.] Perhaps the hon. Member for Withington will give me a little leeway. That council was comprised of the Labour party that ran the council, the Conservative opposition, and the Labour party that did not run the council. The degree and intensity of debate between the two Labour parties was of the greatest concern and interest to us all. I must leave it to the hon. Member for Islington, North to say which side of the counter he was on in respect of that debate. At least I learnt at first hand the difficulties of looking after a London borough and of providing the housing and other benefits that are now part of my brief.

The hon. Member for Islington, North referred to the cross-London boroughs team. We acknowledge the initiative involved in bringing that team together and its effect, and we shall strongly support it. The hon. Gentleman spoke of his recent visit to Centrepoint. Some months ago, I visited Centrepoint in Vauxhall. We have made, and continue to make, strenuous efforts to ensure that young people who are entitled to receive benefit do so. I was struck by the number of youngsters at Vauxhall who had come from disturbed backgrounds. They move about a lot and it is difficult for them to obtain information—and for benefit staff to keep track of them and to help. We have sought to improve our information procedures. The hon. Member for Islington, North did not acknowledge that or give credit where it was due.

As to hardship payments, we have improved the information available, to make it clear that more people are eligible than was originally thought. We have produced a booklet to help young people and their advisers. Each Benefits Agency office has a special officer with responsibility to liaise and deal with young people. We have made strenuous efforts to help. Sometimes, we have been hindered by comments by Opposition parties to the effect that no young people can claim benefits—period—and that income support cannot be paid to any 16 or 17-year-olds. That is not true. In particular circumstances, 16 and 17-year-olds can receive income support. However, we have often reiterated our general policy that that is not the best option for them. Sixteen and 17-year-olds should be in continuing education, training or jobs. We will not change that policy, because we believe it is right. Where people fall through the net and are vulnerable, the Department stands ready to support them. We are trying hard to get the balance right.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) made a spirited and determined contribution to the debate and gave a variety of examples of fraud being tackled in different circumstances. She gave a catalogue of the savings that can be achieved by a determination to detect and to root out fraud.

The point that I most drew from my hon. Friend's speech relates to attitudes. She indicated how attitudes to fraud and to similar crimes have changed. Some people feel that if they are taking money from the Department of Social Security, they are taking money from the Government and are somehow being clever or getting their own back. That is not true. My hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge spoke of our belief that all crime is indivisible. I condemn City fraud and sharp practice as determinedly as anyone, and as the hon. Member for Withington would expect. Just as crime is indivisible, so, too, are attitudes to dishonesty. If people think that obtaining something from the Government by subterfuge is all right, we shall be on a slippery slope. Perhaps we are many years down that slippery slope.

One reason why we face the high benefits fraud bill that we do is that attitudes have changed in the way suggested by my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam. The spirit of honesty for which she called must be rekindled, but that cannot be done solely by the Department—or by the House in the attitudes that it displays, although that can help. Neither can it be rekindled solely by the Government. The spirit of honesty and fair dealing of one towards another is a matter which society must take strongly. The various opinion formers, whoever they may be, must support all those who profess adherence to values that are decent, honest and timeless. The comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam were timely today and I thank her for them.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam also referred to the progress that we have sought to make on order books. I am pleased that she welcomes our efforts. We have made strides in ensuring that order book fraud will be more difficult. It costs a great deal of money, so I am grateful for my hon. Friend's comments and for her support for those who have done so much work to take that process forward.

Both my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam and my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) referred to the difficulties caused by the thin borderline between legality and abuse. That has been marked by some newspaper articles about some who have come to this country from the European Community and who appear to be taking advantage of our benefits system. That is a genuinely difficult issue because we have treaty obligations to those in the European Community, and we are determined to stand by and to support those obligations.

However, I agree strongly with those who have expressed concern about the apparent ease with which people from other EC member states can claim benefit here. We have already tightened up the income support rules that apply to people who come from other member states to seek work here. My hon. Friends were right to raise points about that matter.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds was especially concerned about housing benefit. Overseas students are not treated more favourably than home students. Most are excluded on the ground of nationality. Only certain vulnerable students may claim housing benefit, and overseas students who have overstayed their period of leave, who are subject to a deportation order or who are judged by the immigration authorities to be illegal immigrants are excluded from housing benefit, even if they are in a vulnerable group.

As the House appreciates, there is a distinction between persons from abroad and persons from the EC, to whom different legislation applies. We have carefully tightened up this week on particular abuse that was prevalent among persons from abroad. Most of them come to this country on visas that provide that they will not be in receipt of public funds while in this country. It has become the practice for some 10,000 a year to apply, towards the end of their stay, for leave from the Home Office to vary that restriction. The law was that if people applied for such leave, benefits became available at that stage. Few who made a request to change the visa in the particular circumstances that they described would have their visas changed. Accordingly, this country found itself paying £17 million of benefits a year to people who had no hope of having the visa restriction changed. This week, therefore, we have moved to close that loophole and we believe that were right to do so.

I can confirm to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds that we keep the position on asylum seekers pretty well under review. However, I make it clear to the House generally that the restriction I have just mentioned does not apply to genuine asylum seekers. This country has a long and proud tradition of being able to receive those who, for various reasons, are unable to continue their activities abroad. That tradition goes back to the Huguenots and many others.

However, we must be careful in these modern days, especially because of the problems of economic migration which my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds made clear, to ensure that that hospitality is not abused. There is a difficult line to find, as debates in the House over the past two or three years have made clear. The Department of Social Security will faithfully back up the view of the Home Office in its distinctions on particular cases. I assure the House that we look carefully at the matter, but that we intend to ensure that those genuinely claiming to be refugees will get through under the new system far more quickly. They need not fear; they will continue to be covered. I hope that, by doing so, we strike the right balance between this country's proper hospitality and abuse.

Mr. Bradley: Although I agree with what the Minister has said, will he confirm, so that we do not again get matters out of context, that the numbers of people who apply for political asylum are small, so that the amount that we are talking about is equally small?

Mr. Burt: Yes, indeed. Applications for asylum in the United Kingdom totalled 22,000 in 1990. In 1991, they shot up to 44,000. The Home Office took certain action and, by 1992, the figure had come down to 24,000. That shows how volatile the numbers can be in particular circumstances, but they illustrate that we are talking about small numbers.

It is interesting, however, for those who look after purses to note that small numbers add up to a lot. The hon. Gentleman is constantly on at me and my colleagues about small amounts of money that we might be able to use to improve the benefits system in a particular way. We have to tell them that we are sorry, but we do not have the money. The £17 million that I have just referred to and false claims can add up to the sort of money that we might be able to use for just those things on which we want to spend money. That is why small amounts are important.

The hon. Member for Withington referred to take-up. I tried to make it clear in my speech that I had set my remarks about fraud in the context of this Government's determination to ensure that those who are entitled to benefits get them. The total amount unclaimed is estimated to be £1·7 billion, but that sum has to be set in the context of the amount actually claimed. We must remember that almost £9 out or every £10 is claimed and that four out of five who are eligible to make a claim do so. It also tends to be the smaller amounts that people do not claim, rather than the larger amounts. We want people to claim what they are entitled to, but we cannot force them to claim. Nevertheless, we have taken action, though various campaigns, to try to improve information about benefits. I mentioned earlier the £15 million that we spend annually on trying to make sure that people know what is available.

As for the Chancellor of the Exchequer's remarks, my right hon. and learned Friend was not suggesting in any way that the Department of Social Security should discourage the claiming of benefit. What he was seeking to do, and what the Government have sought to do in recent weeks, was to make it clear that the whole of the social security budget has to be looked at in terms of trends for growth. My right hon. and learned Friend was looking at the trends in the number of people making claims.

Reference has already been made to the impact that these trends have had on invalidity benefit. Concern has been expressed about who is truly eligible for invalidity benefit and who is not. It was in that context that the Chancellor made his remarks, but the Department and the Government are determined to ensure that those who are eligible to claim do so. There was no suggestion in my right hon. and learned Friend's remarks that that will not remain the case.

The hon. Member for Withington referred to the perceived threat to post offices. I was able to say a few things at that time. May I reiterate, however, that the anticipated growth of automated credit transfer is likely to be more than offset by an overall increase in the volume of DSS transactions with the Post Office over the next few years. We are committed to ensuring that our contractual arrangements with the Post Office continue to promote a viable and national network of post offices. We have already given that commitment. I am happy to reiterate it.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the National Audit Office report. We welcome that report in general. It reinforces a number of messages that we have been trying to get across about the need to bear down on fraud and abuse. It highlighted the extent of instrument of payment fraud—the order books. The report was complimentary about the results achieved. It highlighted a number of areas for improvement: more effective allocation of resources, improved intelligence gathering, greater security of order book delivery and the need to change the style, design and content of order books.

We have already taken action. Reference has been made to the work that we have done on order books, the result of which was introduced this week. We are also committed to investing in better intelligence sharing and in specific action with the Post Office to help to improve the delivery of order book transactions.

The hon. Member for Withington referred to the need for secrecy about the report. I hope that I can reassure him. We have two things principally on our minds in relation to the restriction of information. The first is the need to protect our investigative staff. It should be noticed that yesterday's raid, which involved the seizure of benefit books and the possible saving of many millions of pounds —one national newspaper today suggested £36 million— had to be carried out with armed police available. People who are involved in criminal operations that could net such large sums will go to great lengths to protect themselves and stop at very little to get away with their crimes. It is essential that we protect our staff, so we have to be cautious about information in some cases.

Secondly, and as the hon. Gentleman recognised, we also have to bear in mind the risk of copycat fraud, so we sometimes have to be a little careful about the information that we can relese to the public. Knowing him as I do, I am sure that, in our private conversations, we can come to proper arrangements about any information that he might legitimately need for his work. There is no problem about that.

We spent a little time talking about local authorities and their involvement in helping us with housing benefit fraud. I pay tribute to their work. We have found them enormously helpful in many ways. I regularly meet representatives of local authority associations to discuss their housing benefit work, and I have found it one of the best examples of co-operation between national and local government that I have come across in my time in the House.

The hon. Member for Withington raised an issue mentioned to him by organisations such as citizens advice bureaux. They wonder whether, in view of the speed of the changes, we provide enough training. We try to ensure that we do. We provide free fraud training for local authority fraud investigators, and we have been able within our own budget to secure additional funding for that purpose. More than 80 per cent. of the investigators who attended the training in 1992 felt confident that they could usefully apply what they have learnt. We monitor the training to ensure that it is adequate. We thus take full account of the concerns of people outside and inside the system.

I have already mentioned the cross-London fraud working group, which is a very helpful initiative. The Department has agreed to support actively this newly formed London-wide team of local authority specialists, which has been set up to tackle organised housing benefit fraud. I am happy to support that team and have already agreed that DSS officials should attend its meetings. That should ensure the contintuation of the good relationship between central and local government. In answer to a specific point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North, I am sure that he will find the team very helpful in dealing with the problems of hopping from borough to borough.

The hon. Member for Withington referred to the new system of subsidies and the changes that we have made. He expressed concern about the setting of targets. As I said, I have spent considerable time discussing such subjects with local authority representatives. The development of systems to encourage local authorities to uncover housing benefit abuse takes time, and we keep that development under review. We believe that the baseline targets that we have set have been appropriate. They are not too difficult to achieve, but we will keep them under review. We in no way intend to create disincentives for local authorities that have achieved a high level of performance. We shall review the baseline setting methodology in the light of the savings achieved in the coming year.

Mr. Bradley: How many local authorities have achieved their targets at the lower level and at the higher level?

Mr. Burt: I may have to write to the hon. Gentleman about that; it is an especially detailed point. The higher baseline represents less than 3 per cent. of expected housing benefit and council tax benefit expenditure. If local authorities provide sufficient additional resources to tackle fraud seriously, there is no reason why savings far in excess of the baselines should not be achieved.

Mr. Bradley: My question was asked in the light of the Minister's statement that the Government believe that the targets are appropriate. Clearly, we need to know how appropriate. We need to know what performance levels local authorities are achieving against the targets. I believe that an answer may now be winging its way to us.

Mr. Burt: The information provision system in this place is amazing. On this occasion, I must disappoint the hon. Gentleman because it is too early to say precisely what the achievements will be. I sought to show, by the answer that I gave—that the higher baseline represents less than 3 per cent. of expected housing benefit council tax benefit expenditure—that we have set realistic targets. I understand the hon. Gentleman's concern, but we know that from the local authorities.

The way in which we have worked with local authorities and changed the incentives—I know that the hon. Gentleman and local authorities welcome that as a response to what they have been saying to us—shows our good faith on this matter. It is to our mutual advantage that we work with local authorities and provide a system that saves the public money, but, at the same time, enables local authorities to do that little bit more. That has been the intention of finding a system that has given them an incentive to do work that then gets them extra money. That is not a bad thing for local authorities and they have appreciated our efforts there.

With that good faith in mind, we will look at the targets, because it is not our intention to penalise local authorities that are working effectively. I am not sure how I can help the hon. Gentleman further, but I am happy to listen.

Mr. Bradley: The Minister's comment slid off his lips, as we were expecting the answer from somewhere else. He said that he would write and tell me which local authorities had achieved their targets. Perhaps when he sees that information, he may be in a better position to review the targets.

Mr. Burt: I give the hon. Gentleman a commitment that when I am in a position to write to him with substantial information, I will do so. It might be a little precipitate to do that now, but I note the hon. Gentleman's point and I will write to him.

In conclusion, I shall clear up a few final points because we have covered so much. Market testing is a real issue in the Benefits Agency and the Government. The aims of market testing are clear. We are trying to ensure that good value for money is achieved. Sometimes, the best way to save money and change practices has been through the process of market testing. No firm decisions have been made on any market testing of the fraud operation.

We are carefully exploring the scope for ensuring the most efficient and cost-effective way of handling fraud investigations. A preliminary study has been carried out, which will be carefully considered by the Secretary of State. I can reassure the hon. Gentleman that, whatever arrangements might be entered into in the future, questions of sensitivity and confidentiality will remain of paramount consideration.

I turn to the point of targeting our anti-fraud effort. I can reassure the hon. Member for Withington that, as far as I am concerned, cases are dealt with on a case-by-case basis. Having said that, we cannot ignore patterns of fraud when we see them. In recognising the context of fraud, and perhaps finding an area where fraud, or a specific sort of fraud, is prevalent, individuals are treated as individuals. Benefit investigators know that. If we get that balance right, we will be able to deal with the sensitivities raised by the hon. Gentleman, which are shared by many, and ensure that we direct our efforts to recover fraud savings from the areas that are most likely to produce them.

We have had a long and useful debate on the subject of fraud. With estimated savings of £1 billion this year, that amount is a substantial part of any Government's budget, even a Department of Social Security budget of £80 billion. I am grateful for the attention and attendance of my hon. Friends, who gave us the benefit of their thoughts on this subject. They can reassure their constituents that they have a Government who are determined to ensure not only that those who are entitled to benefits receive them, but that those who are not, do not.

The warning is clear for those who seek to cheat, not me, but their fellow citizens. They will be found out and forced to repay. They may find themselves with a criminal record or a spell in gaol. We know that there are serious fraudsters about. There is nothing wrong in letting people know that other folk are diddling them. I hope that the Government's message of determination will be noted from the debate.

Mr. James Arbuthnot (Wanstead and Woodford): I beg to ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion, by leave, withdrawn.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That—

(1) this House do meet on Tuesday 27th July at half-past Nine o'clock;

(2) notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (2) of Standing Order No. 17 (Time for taking questions), no Questions shall be taken, provided that at Eleven o'clock the Speaker may interrupt the proceedings in order to permit Questions to be asked which are in her opinion of an urgent character and relate either to matters of public importance or to the arrangement of business, statements to be made by Ministers, or personal explanations to be made by Members; and

(3) at Three o'clock the Speaker do adjourn the House without putting any Question, provided that this House shall not adjourn until the Speaker shall have reported the Royal Assent to any Acts agreed upon by both Houses.—[Mr. Arbuthnot.]

Cedars Nursery, Nottingham

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Arbuthnot.]

2.5 pm

Mr. John Heppell (Nottingham, East): First, I thank the Speaker's Office for giving me the opportunity to raise this issue today.

I became interested in child care because of something that happened locally. I do not profess to be an expert on it, but I have some knowledge of Cedars nursery in my constituency, which is due to be closed. I should therefore like to address the issue on a national level and a local one.

My knowledge about child care nationally stems from what has happened locally. It seems fairly strange that, at a time when many of our major employers are banding together to try to guarantee better child care facilities in the community, the national health service should cut its child care provision. Those major employers are members of the forum, Employers Childcare, and they include the BBC, British Telecom, British Gas, the Co-operative bank, Kingfisher plc, Rover Group and the TSB Group plc. They all want to improve child care provision in the community. They are not driven to do that because child care is an equal opportunities issue or a women's issue. They are not concerned about issues that are peripheral to their business. They are not in the business of charity.

The aims of that forum are clearly set out in its statement, which says:

"The provision of quality child care will help businesses to maximise their commercial potential and make the best use of the skills and labour available."

The members of that forum want to make their businesses more efficient and effective. They want to improve the provision of child care in order to retain their highly skilled and experienced staff and to reduce recruitment costs, absenteeism and poor records on punctuality—all caused because of the conflict between child care and work. They want to stop waste and increase their profits.

The House should remember that I am talking about hardheaded business men—sometimes they are hardhearted—whose interest in child care is not founded on charity. They want to invest in it because they realise that they spend tens of thousands of pounds on training staff and that those staff acquire years and years of experience. Employers recognise that their small investment in child care makes not only common sense but good economic sense. I am pleased to note that the Secretary of State for Employment seems to support that important initiative.

There is no doubt that our record on child care is not good. We do not offer the same level of provision as that offered by our European competitors and that puts us at a real disadvantage in the market. According to a survey conducted in 1992 by the organisation, Working for Childcare, which is devoted to promoting good child care in the United Kingdom, there are fewer than 450 workplace nurseries in the United Kingdom and 50 per cent. of them are in London or the south. That amounts to some 12,000 full-time day care nursery places, which represents just one place for every 300 children who require it.

Although I welcome the tax relief proposals that the Government made in 1990, they will have little effect because 60 per cent. of workplace nurseries are in the public sector and cannot benefit from tax relief. Only 16 per cent. of such nurseries are in the private sector. Joint schemes between the public and private sectors represent some 20 per cent. and may be the best way to improve child care. I do not wish to be dogmatic because I am happy whether workplace nurseries are run privately, by the public sector or by a partnership between the two. I simply want more child care places to be made available.

The national health service has more workplace nurseries than any other employer. I applaud many of the district authorities' imaginative child care initiatives and congratulate them on their vision in realising the benefits of child care. However, we must put the figures in perspective. The NHS has more workplace nurseries than any other employer because it is the biggest employer in Europe, employing more than 1 million people, three quarters of whom—750,000—are women. Because the NHS is so big, its child care provision is not as good as one first thinks.

I shall quote the figures produced by the British Medical Association because those produced by the Department of Health are abysmal. The BMA's figures show that, of the women who leave the NHS for maternity reasons, only 17 per cent. return to the NHS after the first year of pregnancy. By comparison, more than 50 per cent. of women who leave their employment in banks for the same reason return after the first year. What is the Government's response to that? Clearly, something is wrong if only 17 per cent. of nurses return to work in the NHS. What are the Government doing about it? The Department of Health's response seems to be that it is doing very little and plans to do even less in the future.

When seeking answers, I deliberately narrowed my inquiry down to nurses because I thought that if I asked about all staff I would get no answers. I discovered that the Department of Health had incomplete records for 1988 and 1989 because 11 regional and district health authorities had not responded to its inquiry. The Department's 1990-91 records for the number of people who left the NHS for maternity reasons were also incomplete because 27 units either did not reply or the data that they provided were inadequate and could not be used in the statistics.

However, it became clear that thousands of nurses were leaving the NHS every year for maternity reasons. When I tried to find out how many returned to the Department of Health after maternity leave, I discovered that there was no record of that. That is abysmal. The retention saving for just one D-grade nurse is some £28,000. That makes me wonder how much money is being lost to the NHS because people still maintain health care philosophies dating back to the last century. I hope that I shall receive a positive response from the Minister about the Department of Health's national strategy. The employers forum and many major employers say that the Government need a national strategy for health care—where is it?

Compared with the private sector, the NHS has a good record, but that is not to say that it has a good record per se. I am worried that, particularly with the introduction of trust status, if no direction is given by the Secretary of State, the Department of Health will not provide any sense of direction. If there is no direction from the Department of Health, there will be no direction from the regional or district health authorities. That will create a feeling among the trusts and units being set up, which do not share the long-term economic view of child care, that they have no incentive to push for a health care strategy.

I have two questions for the Minister on the national strategy. Will he consider two of the recommendations made by the British Medical Association in its report, "Childcare for Doctors in the National Health Service"? First, will he ensure that the national health service unit conducts a comprehensive survey of child care provision on behalf of the NHS management executive? Will that survey address the specific needs of health service employees who have to work shifts and at weekends?

Secondly, will the Minister ensure that NHS and trust hospitals have an incentive to provide child care facilities through some form of subsidy equal to the tax relief enjoyed by private employers? At present, private employers benefit from tax relief, but NHS or trust hospitals cannot, which leaves them without an incentive. Had those two recommendations been in force, the local incident which I am about to describe would not have occurred.

I refer to the closure of Cedars nursery. It is an excellent nursery which I have visited on several occasions, and I have talked to staff, parents and people involved in it. The Minister may ask why the nursery is to close. I think that he has some reasons for its closure, but I hope to persuade him otherwise. The nursery is not going to close because there is no need for it in the district; there is a definite need —the health authority has 15,000 employees and the nursery has 30 places. At best, it can provide places for 40 children from 40 different families. Therefore, it is obvious that there is a need for it.

The nursery is not going to close because staff and parents do not want it to remain; they do. It is not going to close because it is unsuccessful; it has been an enormous success. There are two reasons why the nursery is to close: first, the district health authority did not have the foresight to plan properly to ensure that the nursery survived, and, secondly, many of the senior management in the NHS are not committed to child care.

Cedars nursery was set up 20 years ago. A few Saturdays ago, I went to its anniversary celebrations. If I or anyone else had any doubts about how successful and prestigious the nursery was and how much support it enjoyed among people in the district, those doubts would have been wiped away by the anniversary celebrations. So many people responded to the invitations that there had to be two celebration cakes. As I walked about the 30-place nursery, all I heard from the hundreds of people who attended the anniversary celebration—including parents, children, past parents and past children—was praise for the nursery. I have heard praise for the nursery from everyone who has had any involvement with it. It is echoed by everyone I talk to in the NHS—every trust, unit and hospital. They all say that it is a marvellous nursery and a great success.

In correspondence on this issue with the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell), the chairman of the health authority said:

> "Managers here at the Health Authority, in conjunction with the providers in Nottingham—whether it be directly managed units or NHS Trusts—will continue to explore all options which will allow us to maintain what I am pleased to note is acknowledged as an 'excellent nursery education' in a way that is equitable to all those parties involved."

That is hardly faint praise—the man means it. The problem is that he goes on to identify the reasons why the nursery is to close.

It is astounding that the nursery should be closed for the reasons given. Now that the units are going their separate ways because they want to achieve trust status —some have already achieved it—Nottingham health care unit, which itself is in the process of going for trust status, feels that it has been left holding the baby; indeed, it feels that it has been left holding a number of babies. It has been left with the funding and running of a nursery which predominantly caters for the children of staff who work in the other units, which have now become trusts. The staff at the unit therefore say that the nursery is not their responsibility, because they are not using its services.

The city hospital trust and the Nottingham community health trust, with staff whose children attend the nursery, say that they were never given funding for the nursery; it went to the other units—so it is not really their responsibility either. When I tell the district health authority that the nursery is going to close, it tells me that it is now a purchaser, not a provider of facilities—so the nursery is no longer its responsibility. I do not exactly agree with that. When I write to the Secretary of State, I receive a letter from the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), saying, in effect, that it is not his responsibility either.

The facts are that the nursery is closing down, and that it is not the responsibility of the units, the trusts, the DHA, the RHA, the Secretary of State or the Department of Health—so no one is to blame for the closure. I should be failing in my duty as a responsible Member of Parliament if I accepted these explanations for closing an excellent nursery which is highly regarded by everyone in the area.

The Minister, in his letter, did attach a certain amount of blame to someone. He said:

> "Officials have contacted Nottingham Health Authority and I understand that employees have asked for future child care initiatives for health service staff in Nottingham to concentrate on the development and strengthening of holiday play schemes, which will benefit more people than the current nursery is able to help."

If that is what the Minister understands—I do not know where he gets his information from—he is wrong. Surveys among NHS staff show, depending on how the questions have been asked, that child care features prominently among women's priorities, as do workplace nurseries.

A survey carried out in my region, but not my district, by the Central Nottinghamshire health authority states, in its final paragraph:

> "More flexible working patterns and a seven-day week all-year round Creche were commonly felt to be the most important provision of the future."

The questionnaire sent by the Central Nottinghamshire health authority to its staff asks ambiguous questions. This affects my patch because it is in the area of the district health authority. People were asked about their problems with child care and the greatest response was about cost. They said that expensive child care was the biggest worry. The second concern, which was well above worries about finding suitable carers, upset children and unsympathetic managers, was the lack of workplace child care facilities.

Workplace nurseries did not come top of the replies to the question about how matters could be improved. Child care vouchers and cheques were most mentioned. However, 67 to 80 per cent. of the parents were in favour of workplace nurseries for one to four-year-olds. The Minister has been sadly misinformed if he has been led to understand that the employees want to get rid of the nursery.

The final proof that the staff are not the reason for the closure is that the union has formally invoked the grievance procedure on behalf of the staff because the nursery is closing. It lists matters such as recruitment, retention, lack of suitable alternatives and commitment to equal opportuntiies as reasons for doing that.

The nursery closure is a direct result of reorganisation for trust status. I shall not engage in an argument with the Minister to try to persuade him to stop his plans for creating hospital trusts, but I hope that he accepts that in urging hospitals to seek trust status the Government did not intend to close excellent nurseries. That is effectively what is happening because no one is prepared to take responsibility for what existed before. I hope the Minister agrees that the responsibility lies with the district health authority. Before trusts were proposed, the health authority should have made appropriate plans to ensure that the nursery was properly catered for and assured of survival.

Even at this late stage, I hope that the Minister will make representations to Nottingham district health authority about the absurdity of a Department campaigning vigorously to increase child care places and putting up about £45 million to do it, while at the same time denying such facilities to people in my area because those making the decisions about it follow the child care philosophy of three decades ago.

Those who understand the importance of child care are members of the Employers for Childcare which is campaigning for more child care. I wish that my district health authority had the same competence so that we could be assured of decent child care facilities.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. John Bowis): I congratulate the hon. Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Heppell) on having the good fortune to secure this debate. I spent six weeks prior to my appointment seeking the same good fortune but without success. My consolation prize is to respond to the debate. I also congratulate the hon. Gentleman on bringing before the House the proposal by Nottingham health care unit, which is part of Nottingham district health authority, to close the Cedars day nursery.

The letter that I sent to the hon. Gentleman clearly states:

"It is a matter for each local authority to determine and fund the provision of child care facilities for staff in the light of local need."

There is no question of not knowing who is responsible. I did not use the word "blame", because I was not apportioning blame. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman understands that I understand that those are matters wholly for the district health authority. The Secretary of State and I do not have jurisdiction. It is not like a case of hospital closure, where the community health council can appeal to the Secretary of State.

The debate gives us the opportunity to explore together the issues and decisions in the case and reflect on some of the wider points that the hon. Gentleman has made. I listened to him with interest. I welcome his acknowledgment of the initiatives in the NHS.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Question again proposed, That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Bowis: The initiatives are important. They are developing and I am sure that both the hon. Gentleman and I hope that they expand in many other parts of the NHS. I recognise the local knowledge and concern that underlie his remarks. I am sure that he is anxious to secure the best possible facilities for his constituents and shares with the management of Nottingham healthcare unit and the two Nottingham trusts—Nottingham city hospital and community health—a real concern to ensure that employees derive all possible assistance in combining a career with a balanced and harmonious family life.

The hon. Gentleman spoke about records, responsibi lity, employment and local decisions. As is the case with banks, those are not for national decisions, but for local decisions. It is not for the Department to second guess the local needs and priorities as assessed and decided upon by the local district health authority. That is its job—it knows how to do it best—and we support it as far as we can in the conclusions that it reaches.

The proposal at issue is that the Nottingham healthcare unit does not wish to run the Cedars day nursery at a financial loss, and the nursery will have to close not later than 31 March 1994. The nursery was established in 1973 as a child care facility for the children of staff employed by Nottingham health authority. It has been managed by the general hospital, which now forms part of the Nottingham healthcare unit. It is financed by fee income from parents and a joint subsidy from the Nottingham district health authority and the two trusts. The majority of registered users work at the city and community health NHS trusts. That is, 62 per cent., or 26 children, from the former and 21 per cent., or nine children, from the latter, with four children from the district health authority.

Let me stress, as the hon. Gentleman has rightly stressed, that the manager and nursery nurses at the Cedars are to be congratulated on the high standard of child care that they have provided over the past 20 years. The hon. Gentleman spoke of people echoing that fact, and I am happy to join them on behalf of my Department. That fact has not gone unnoticed and has been valued and praised by parents and hospital management alike. Despite that quality, it has not attracted the numbers to fill the nursery. Cedars offered a much-needed resource in previous years, particularly when there was little or no independent nursery provision in the area and when the child minder network was both in its infancy and very informal. Just over one third of its 30 places have been provided for children aged up to two years.

Between 1988 and 1992, the number of places in registered day nurseries throughout the country grew by 100 per cent., while the number of child minders rose by 40 per cent. There are now 90,000 places in registered day nurseries all over the country, and 106,000 registered child minders offering 240,000 places for the under-fives. Despite the tone of the hon. Gentleman's comments, I hope that he will recognise that there has been extraordinary progress to providing a multi-agency approach and giving choice of different types of provisions —the hon. Gentleman acknowledged the desirability of that—and there are the figures to show it.

Mr. Heppell: I do not dispute the fact that extra places have been made available through child minders and private nurseries. The difficulty in the recruitment of children for the nursery arose only when the health authority let it be known that it intended to close the nursery.

Mr. Bowis: There are at least 130 nursery places within a two-mile radius of the Cedars. Therefore, managers in Nottingham have asked themselves whether it is justifiable to continue to subsidise a loss-making facility with money that could otherwise be spent on direct patient care.

As a small, 30-place nursery, which is not based on a major hospital site, the Cedars meets only a very small part of the child care requirements of the 14,000-plus people employed by the health service in Nottingham. Nor is it ideally located for the majority of Nottingham health care unit staff, who typically form less than 10 per cent. of the registered users of the facility.

I understand that the decision to close the facility has not been taken lightly. Over the past five years, the future of the Cedars has been carefully considered by local managers. Currently, the facility is subsidised by the district health authority and the two trusts. However, even with parents paying a rate of £65·25 per week, which compares with a commercial rate in the area of between £65 and £82·50, there remains a subsidy to find, amounting to £4 per full session per child.

The nursery carried a deficit of £38,000 in 1992-93 and expenditure is expected to outstrip income by more than £28,000 again in 1993-94. That does not take into account the considerable capital expenditure for upgrading the fabric of the Cedars that would be required if the facility were to remain open—for instance, repairs to roofing, guttering and the ventilation system. It is believed that that money could be better spent in the health service on patient care.

A business plan for recovery of the capital costs of the upgrading, together with recovery of the existing subsidy over the next three years, would require an immediate increase of almost 30 per cent. in the weekly charge at the Cedars for current users. That would bring the charge up to almost £85 per week, which is well above the cost of places available in the commercial sector. Indeed, I understand that those 130 private nursery places nearest to the Cedars cost less than £75 per week.

Alternatively, the Nottingham health care unit estimates that it would be necessary to double the number of children using the nursery in order to make a commercial case for continuing to run it. I am told that the average occupancy at the Cedars over the past year has been 65 per cent., and I understand that the capital cost alone of expanding the nursery to accommodate twice that number would be in excess of £170,000.

I draw the hon. Gentleman's attention to the fact that there is another, expanding facility close to the Cedars —the Queen's medical centre at the University hospital NHS trust. It is within 10 minutes travelling time of the Cedars and is a 50-place, privately run day nursery. It is expanding its capacity to 78 places and has already agreed with the Nottingham health care unit that children from the Cedars can be accommodated there if the parents so wish. The charge for a full place, including meals, is about £77 a week, which is £8 less than the charge that would be required for the Cedars were it to become commercially viable.

The hon. Member will join me, I am sure, in applauding the decision of managers at both Nottingham trusts to consult with staff about future staff benefits. The city hospital NHS trust has surveyed one in four of its employees and, in the light of the results, has decided to focus its child care efforts on strengthening the holiday play scheme and finding other ways of assisting with child care responsibilities. It has appointed someone who delights in the title of human resources planning and rewards manager—I hope that he speaks in simpler terms than that title implies—specifically to examine the issues of staff benefits and appropriate child care provision. The trust has therefore decided not to continue to subsidise the Cedars after March 1994.

Nottingham community health NHS trust has discovered that a centralised day nursery facility does not meet the needs of staff working across Nottingham. Efforts will therefore be directed at developing holiday play schemes. I understand that the trust will also discontinue its subsidy of the Cedars after March 1994.

The hon. Member will be aware that nursery places in the commercial sector are available in Nottingham. There are 37 nurseries listed in the city, Broxtowe and Rushcliffe areas, and the Vernon Park day nursery, which is due to open later this year, has advertised 50 places with rates of £70 per week, only a little above the current rate at the Cedars and considerably below the figure required for the nursery to become viable commercially. Nottingham also has an inner-city task force, which has been supporting a number of nursery and child care projects.

I understand that the Nottingham health care unit has always been prepared to consider any proposal put forward by parents or staff, or both, for the future of the Cedars. However, lengthy deliberation has shown that no viable business case has yet been found for keeping the nursery open. Nottingham health care unit and Nottingham health authority agreed to a proposal by parents and staff to form a co-operative to run the nursery, but that option has not been taken up by the parents.

Mr. Heppell: The option to form a co-operative was suggested by the parents. The only problem was that staff were worried that they would have to resign from the NHS to take up posts with the co-operative. The parents asked the unit's management whether they would second the staff to the co-operative, which would have paid them— there would be no cost to the NHS. It was simply a matter of protecting the employees' rights. The unit said that it was not prepared to do that, and in effect gave an ultimatum that unless the staff resigned by 31 May, the co-operative option was off.

Mr. Bowis: I entirely understand that. I imagine that parents and staff would have had to decide on certain issues. Nevertheless, the possibility was explored, even if—as the hon. Gentleman suggests—it was not possible to pursue it for the reasons that he gave, and perhaps for other reasons.

Managers at Nottingham health care and Nottingham health authority are to be commended for recognising the great duty that they owe to the seven staff currently working at the Cedars. The managers would like to put an end to months of uncertainty and to explore re-employment opportunities within and outside the health authority. Their intention is to redeploy staff into suitable alternative posts where possible, or to assist with finding alternative employment.

I emphasise that there is no doubt about the national health service's commitment to child care provision. The Department of Health fully recognises that good child care facilities can be of considerable help—and here I echo the hon. Gentleman's remarks—in reducing staff turnover, recruiting and retaining the services of NHS staff with young children, and competing for skilled staff in the labour market.

[Mr. Bowis]

In particular, the provision of suitable child care facilities is a key factor in increasing women's participation in the work force, if they choose that following the birth of a child. As the hon. Gentleman lists equal opportunities as one of his special interests, I am sure that he will welcome progress in that respect.

In May 1991, the General Whitley Council reached agreement on new provisions for child care, which commended to health authorities the establishment of an appropriate range of facilities, including workplace nurseries, holiday play schemes and child care voucher arrangements. That is an enabling agreement, which gives each employer discretion to determine the type of assistance appropriate to local circumstances.

In 1991, the Department of Health also launched its "Women in the NHS Initiative" and subsequently joined the Opportunity 2000 campaign, to put women's issues on the NHS managerial agenda. As a result, there has been much interest generated throughout the NHS, and many authorities and trusts are looking at how they can improve their employment practices.

In reality, that has meant that local management has had to examine all aspects of employment practice, including flexible working, term-time hours, job share and, of course, child care. A survey by the NHS management executive at the end of 1991 showed that more than half the health authorities in England provided some form of help with child care. That is progress, and should meet some of the hon. Gentleman's concerns.

The NHS management executive recently produced a booklet, "School's out—initiatives for out of school child care", which focuses on the approaches that trusts and authorities have taken to improve the quality and quantity of child care available outside school hours and during holidays.

I thank the hon. Gentleman for raising those issues and for the chance to respond. I, for one, am firmly committed to the provision and development of appropriate forms of child care in the national health service in the light of local recruitment and retention needs, and in the light of the needs and wishes of local people—as assessed and responded to by local health authorities and local NHS trusts.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at seventeen minutes to Three o'clock.

HEALTH

Folic Acid

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in educating the public and health professionals about the importance of folic acid in the diets of women of child-bearing age to reduce the risk of their children being born with spina bifida.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance has been issued to all doctors, senior nursing staff, midwives and health visitors and pharmacists as well as key professional organisations. Copies of the guidance will be placed in the Library. Manufacturers have been asked to increase the range of supplements and fortified foods available. The Health Education Authority has already begun to update its publications to include the new advice. Plans are under way to issue further public education materials this summer to raise women's awareness of the importance of taking folic acid when pregnant or planning a pregnancy.

Specialties

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) specialty beds and (b) specialists there were at the latest available date in each London region for (i) neurosciences, (ii) cardiac, (iii) renal, (iv) cancer, (v) plastics and burns and (vi) children; and what are the forecast numbers in each of those categories for each of the next five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 24 June at columns 248-49. The whole-time equivalent number of consultants employed by each of the Thames regional health authorities and the special health authorities, by specialty, as at 30 September 1991, is shown in the table.

	NW Thames	NE Thames	SE Thames	SW Thames	SHAs
Neurosciences	18·2	36·3	20·9	19·0	28·8
Cardiac	11·1	16·1	27·1	14·4	35·4
Renal	17·2	31·5	28·8	16·1	8·4
Cancer	21·4	24·0	20·7	7·9	12·9
Plastics and Burns	8·9	7·4	7·8	2·8	0·9
Children	78·1	87·3	91·5	69·3	44·5

The future number of consultants will depend upon the pattern of provision of these services in the Thames regions which will be determined by a number of factors, including the strategic intentions of purchasers, the findings of the specialty reviews and those of the research reviews of the special health authorities.

Waterborne Diseases

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 June, Official Report, column 238, if she will list the infectious diseases associated with poor water supply and sewage disposal and the incidence of those diseases in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: There are many diseases which can be associated with poor water supply and sewerage disposal, few of which are commonly found in this country.

GP Fund Holding

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the total cost of general practitioner fund holding in 1991-92 to all parts of the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 26 March at column 751.

Specialty Reviews, London

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what assumptions she is proceeding in her review of London hospitals about the number of beds and specialists needed per head of population in each specialty.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for local providers working with purchasers to maximise bed usage and to determine the number of consultants and the specialities they represent in order to meet their contractual commitments.

Eye Tests

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service eye examinations have been undertaken since 1985 in each regional health authority and in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of national health service sight tests paid for by family health services authorities in each financial year is shown in the table.

[1] From 1 April 1989, NHS sight tests were restricted to certain eligible groups in the population. The figures for 1989-90 included 1·63 million sight tests paid for in 1989-90 but conducted in 1988-89 under the previous scheme.

The remaining 3·65 million were conducted and paid for in 1989-90 but do not constitute a full twelve months of the scheme. The figures for 1990-91 which do represent 12 months under the new scheme, are not therefore directly comparable with those for 1989-90.

[2] Due to rounding, the sum of the components may not equal the total.

[3] Provisional figure. An analysis by regional health authority is not yet available.

Mr. Jonathan Zito

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order a public inquiry into the circumstances which led to the death of Jonathan Zito and its implications for community care policies.

Mr. Bowis: The two regional health authorities concerned, South and North East Thames, are jointly holding an inquiry into the events which led to the death of Jonathan Zito. Any further action is dependent upon the report of the inquiry.

Dentistry

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the future of the rules governing free dental treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's review of the remuneration of general dental practitioners set out a number of options for changing the way in which we deliver general dental services. We have consulted widely on his report and shall announce our proposals in due course.

Abortions

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions have now been performed in total under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967 in the whole of the United Kingdom; and how many and what percentage of those abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Sackville: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave her on 5 May at column 44 for the total number of legal abortions and the number and percentage of those performed in emergency "to save the life of the pregnant woman", notified to the Chief Medical Officers of England and Wales under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967.

Information relating to Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. Northern Ireland is not covered by the Abortion Act 1967.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the numbers of whole-time equivalent NHS nursing and midwifery staff employed on each grade and pay point of the clinical grades, educational grades and senior nursing and midwifery pay spine in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 23 June 1993]: Figures for 1992 are not yet available. The information for 1990 and 1991 will be placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Tax

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long it is expected it will take to settle outstanding disputes over council tax banding valuations in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Circencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown) by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning on 29 June 1993 at column 416.

Construction Industry

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for a review of procurement and contracting arrangements in the construction industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have today chaired a meeting of representatives of the construction industry at which it was unanimously agreed to appoint Sir Machael Latham to undertake a review of procurement and contracting arrangements in the construction industry. We want less litigation and conflict and more productivity in the construction industry.

Sir Michael will begin work later this month and complete the review within 12 months. An interim report will be produced by the end of the year. Sir Michael will be assisted by a number of specialist assessors who will channel the views of their respective organisations. Where appropriate, groups of client and contracting organisations will stand behind the assessors and provide representative opinion on key issues.

The review will be jointly funded by the Department of the Environment, the Construction Industry Council, the Construction Industry Employers Council, the National Specialist Contractors Council and the Specialist

Engineering Contractors Group. It will be closely supported by a number of other bodies, in particular the British Property Federation and the Chartered Institute of Purchasing and Supply.

The terms of reference of the review, which have been placed in the Library, require Sir Michael to consider the current procurement and contractual arrangements, and the roles and responsibilities of all participants in a contract. Sir Michael's objective will be to present recommendations to Government and other bodies about practical reforms to reduce conflict and litigation and to encourage productivity and competitiveness.

TRANSPORT

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Norris: The approximate cost of market testing since November 1992 is £430,000 including consultancies.

Woolwich Tunnel

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which railway organisations have responsibility for considering the benefits and costs of a rail tunnel under the Thames at Woolwich.

Mr. Norris: London Transport, with the London Dockland development corporation, and consulting British Rail, are conducting further studies of the costs and benefits of a rail tunnel at Woolwich. In addition Union Railways has invited comments on its proposals for a "Union Metro", which would incorporate a rail tunnel at Woolwich.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider a rail tunnel at Woolwich.

Mr. Norris: I shall certainly consider any well-founded investment proposal for a rail tunnel at Woolwich, and I look forward to seeing comments on the Union Metro proposal.

InterCity Trains

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures British Rail will be introducing to improve the locking mechanisms on InterCity trains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is implementing the main recommendations of the "Slam Door" report issued by the Health and Safety Executive, which included the redesign and replacement of primary door locks.

In addition InterCity has recently awarded a £17 million contract to ABB Transportation Ltd. to fit secondary door locks to the InterCity fleet of slam-door coaches.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent consideration he has given to the Jubilee line extension.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend keeps in close touch with the negotiations on the private sector contribution to the funding of the extension.

Passenger Service Franchises

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which part of European Community law governs the submission of bids to run passenger service franchises by the boards of nationalised railways and their subsidiaries.

Mr. Freeman: There is no Community legislation which directly deals with the role of nationalised industries in bidding for passenger rail franchises.

British Rail Maintenance Ltd.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the report by McKinsey on the future of British Rail Maintenance Ltd.

Mr. Freeman: This is an internal BR report that was prepared in confidence for the British Railways Board. I will be making an announcement on the future of British Rail Maintenance Ltd. as soon as possible.

Passenger Rail Vehicles

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new passenger rail vehicles including locomotives, rolling stock and multiple units are scheduled for delivery to the British Railways Board during the financial years (a) 1993-94, (b) 1994-95 and (c) 1995-96.

Mr. Freeman: In addition to the answer I gave the right hon. Member in the Official Report on 12 March at column 768, delivery of new leased rolling stock is planned for 1995 and 1996 using the £150 million facility announced in the autumn statement. The number of leased vehicles will depend on which of the supplier's bids currently being assessed by BR is successful. In addition BR may undertake fuller operating leases for rail vehicles subject to recent guidance issued by HM Treasury.

BR Staff (Working Hours)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the average hours worked per week by British Railways Board train drivers during the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: During the week ending 26 June 1993, BRB train drivers, excluding those absent through sickness or other reason for all or part of the week, worked an average of 47·8 hours.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the average hours worked per week by British Railways Board signalmen during the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: During the week ending 26 June 1993, BRB staff operating signals, excluding those absent through sickness or other reason for all or part of the week, worked an average of 50·8 hours.

BR Staff (Maintenance)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Railways personnel are employed on the maintenance of locomotives and rolling stock.

Mr. Freeman: On 26 June 1993, BRB had in its employment 17,146 personnel on the maintenance of locomotives and rolling stock.

Shipping Companies (State Aid)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his oral answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 643, if he will set a target date for the diminution of state aid to shipping companies in all European Community member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: It is not in our power to set a target date. This is primarily in the hands of the Commission. But we shall continue to take every opportunity within the Community to press for the early removal of state aids which distort competition among shipowners.

Search and Rescue

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the establishment of local coastal search and rescue committees since his announcement of 9 March 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The chief coastguard has now reached agreement with the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) for England, Wales, and Northern Ireland, on the guidelines for the establishment of what will be called local search and rescue (SAR) committees. It is hoped that a similar agreement will soon be reached with the association for Scotland.

The committees, jointly chaired by HM coastguard and police, will provide a consultative body to consider co-ordination problems on the shoreline, improved liaison between interested authorities, and to assess the availability, readiness, and effectiveness of rescue resources. Such requirements are already embodied within a memorandum of understanding between HM coastguard and the police.

As far as practicable the jurisdiction of the committees will align with police force boundaries. Membership will comprise representatives of the emergency services, Royal National Lifeboat Institution—RNLI—Ministry of Defence helicopter bases, county and district council officials, harbour and port authorities, and recognised voluntary rescue services such as the Royal Life Saving Society—RLSS—and the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents—RoSPA. Additional members may be co-opted from time to time as necessary.

Local search and rescue committees will be independent of my Department's district marine safety committees but will liaise as necessary with them on matters of mutual interest and concern.

A copy of the joint coastguard and police document, "Guidelines for the Establishment of Local Search and Rescue Committees" will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Railways (Disabled Passengers)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make provisions for disabled passengers in the code of practice to be issued to the new railway operators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have introduced an amendment to the Railways Bill, currently before the House of Lords, which will place a duty on the regulator to prepare and promote a code of practice for protecting the interests of disabled passengers, and to consult the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee—DPTAC—in preparing or revising the code. This will be a published code of practice available to all new railway operators.

Pilots

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the maximum age at which a pilot is permitted to fly an aircraft for a commercial flight in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: Under schedule 8 of the Air Navigation Order 1989, the holder of an airline transport pilot's licence shall not at any time after he attains the age of 60 years, act as pilot in command or co-pilot of any aeroplane for the purpose of public transport, if the aeroplane's maximum total weight authorised exceeds 20,000 kg.

For aeroplanes below that weight, the licence holder may continue to fly an aircraft after he attains the age of 60 years, up to a maximum of 65 years, if the aeroplane is fitted with dual controls and carries a second pilot who holds an appropriate licence entitling him to act as pilot in command or co-pilot of that aeroplane.

M27 Aircraft Crash

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the age of the pilot who flew the aircraft which crashed on the M27 motorway on Wednesday 26 May.

Mr. Norris: I understand that the pilot is 63 years of age.

Sheehy Committee

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent he envisages that the recommendations of the Sheehy committee will apply to the British Transport police.

Mr. Freeman: As my hon. Friend is aware the terms of reference of the Sheehy inquiry did not extend to non-Home Department forces, but we nevertheless await the Home Secretary's response with interest. In the meantime we will study the report carefully and consider its recommendations in the context of the British transport police. I look forward to a further meeting in due course with my hon. Friend and representatives of the British Transport Police Federation to discuss this matter.

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to invite British Rail to bid for all franchises.

Mr. Freeman: Under clause 22 of the Railways Bill, British Rail could not be a franchisee; under clause 23(3) the franchising director could not therefore invite it to tender.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Palace of Westminster (Fire Safety)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 259, if he will make available the report of Her Majesty's fire service inspectorate following its visits to the Palace of Westminster to monitor progress on the agreed programme of work over the past 10 years; and if he will list the specific points which have required the other visits to which he refers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The record of visits to monitor progress on the programme of works leading to fire certification is not kept in the form of a report. The other visits have been numerous, usually to provide advice on a variety of fire safety matters such as the enclosure of stairways, fire doors, signs, and the appointment of in-house fire safety specialists. In both cases the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were disciplined by the Police Complaints Authority in 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. Responsibility for discipline lies with chief officers. The Police Complaints Authority may recommend that disciplinary charges are brought and did so in relation to 56 charges in 1992.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were dealt with by the Police Complaints Authority in 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the different categories of cases dealt with by the Police Complaints Authority in 1992 is contained in chapter 10 of its annual report for 1992, available in the Library.

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what criteria are followed by his Department in approving the transfer of a prison inmate from a closed prison establishment to an open prison establishment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many prison inmates in prisons in England and Wales requested a transfer to a prison nearer their home during the last six months for which figures are available; and how many such requests were granted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 4 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the criteria for the transfer of prisoners from closed to open prisons, and the number of prisoners who requested transfers to a prison nearer their home during the last six months.

The principles which apply to the decision whether to downgrade an inmate's security categorisation are set out in Circular Instruction 7/1988, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library. Account is taken of a number of factors including time left to serve, attitude, positions of trust held and behaviour in any periods of temporary release. Any prisoner who has successfully completed a period of home leave is considered for transfer to an open establishment.

Requests made by prisoners seeking transfers to establishments nearer their homes are dealt with locally and information is not collected centrally.

Police Batons

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether officers of the North Wales police force will be equipped with side-handled extendable batons for the purpose of testing their effectiveness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 21 June at column 2.

Housing Estates (Crime)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the delays in enforcing the law concerning criminal behaviour on housing estates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As far as I can ascertain, no representations on this subject have been received recently. The deployment of resources to investigate crime is an operational matter and is therefore the responsibility of chief officers of police.

Police

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the Sheehy inquiry report will be distributed to branches of (a) the Police Federation and (b) the Police Superintendents Association.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Sheehy inquiry secretariat supplied two copies of the report to the Police Federation and Police Superintendents Associations headquarters. In addition, the Home Office distributed 60 copies to the Police Superintendents Association.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had since 28 April with bodies representing London borough councils concerning his proposals for policing in London as contained in Cm 2281.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend met with the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 17 June and again on 28 June. Copies of my right hon. and learned Friend's statement of 28 June and that of his predecessor, announcing the Government's intentions, and copies of the White Paper were sent to the local authority associations, including the Association of London Authorities, the London Boroughs Association and the Outer London Districts Metropolitan Police Consultative Association.

Asylum

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been denied access to the United Kingdom's asylum procedures on third country grounds in the past 12 months and been subsequently removed from this country; and how many of these were subsequently returned by the third country to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1992, 441 port asylum applicants—excluding dependants—were removed from the United Kingdom following refusal of their application on the ground that they had arrived from a safe third country. Information on cases subsequently returned by the third country is not recorded.

Pepper Sprays

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to evaluate the use of pepper sprays for police purposes.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We are assessing the information which is available about these products, in relation to their possible use by the police against dogs.

Central European Time

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reached a decision with regard to moving the United Kingdom to central European time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer the hon. Member to my reply on 24 June to a question from the hon. Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Dr. Wright), columns 255-56).

PRIME MINISTER

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what charges are made for the use of 10 Downing street for charitable or other fund-raising events; and what use is made of the catering and other facilities of 10 Downing street at such events.

The Prime Minister: Where charitable or other non-official events are held at No. 10 Downing street, the organisers are responsible for all catering and staff costs, as well as other miscellaneous direct costs. Organisers may use the kitchens or other facilities at No. 10 Downing street.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what are the rules governing the use of No. 10 Downing street for non-official purposes;

(2) if he will give details of the rules governing the use of 10 Downing street for the purposes of fund raising for political parties.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 June 1993]: Ministers under this and previous administrations have been allowed—at their own or party expense—to host non-official or party receptions or functions in Downing street. All catering, staff and other direct expenses must be met by the organisers of the event. Appropriate arrangements are required for security clearance.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister how many functions to raise money for political parties have been held at No. 10 Downing street since 1980.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 June 1993]: Under this and previous Administrations, a variety of functions have been held at No. 10 Downing street where the costs have been met by political parties. The purpose of such functions is not a matter for the Government, but I can confirm that since November 1990, there have been no functions at 10 Downing street at which funds have been raised for political parties, or for which tickets have been sold for the benefit of political parties.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what charities benefited from functions organised in No. 10 Downing street in each year since 1984.

The Prime Minister [holding answers 22 and 23 June 1993]: Since November 1990, there have been a total of 25 receptions, dinners or other functions at No. 10 Downing street for charities or voluntary bodies. The organisations concerned have been:

NSPCC
Surrey County Cricket Club Youth Trust
Lords Taverners
MENCAP
EUREKA
Wordsworth Trust
Huntington's Disease Association
Action Research
Anthony Nolan Bone Marrow Trust
National Council of Hospice and Specialist Palliative Care
Crossroads Care[1]
Animal Health Trust
ORT
Youth Clubs (UK)
ChildLine
Silver Trust
Marie Curie Cancer Care
Excalibur Scheme
Motability
Westminster Foundation for Democracy
London Community Cricket Association
International Spinal Research Trust
Cambridge Arts Theatre Trust

[1] two functions

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give details of the functions attended by Mr. Asil Nadir in No. 10 Downing street since 1984.

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister how many times in the last 10 years Mr. Asil Nadir has attended functions in No. 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 June 1993]: I understand that Mr. Nadir attended six functions in No. 10 Downing street between 1984 and 1989. These were a dinner and a reception for the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children; a reception for the Harold MacMillan Trust; a lunch for the President of Turkey; and two lunches for industrialists.

Vietnam

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise the issues of the extent of religious freedom in Vietnam, and the continued imprisonment of persons in that country for their faith, with the Prime Minister of Vietnam during his forthcoming visit.

The Prime Minister: I intend to raise our concerns about human rights in Vietnam with the Vietnamese Prime Minister, Mr. Vo Van Kiet, during his forthcoming visit to the United Kingdom.

Plaques

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister if inscriptions on plaques which are unveiled in the course of visits by foreign Heads of State are viewed in advance by representatives of Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: We would agree in advance any inscriptions on plaques unveiled at official engagements. We would not expect to be consulted about private engagements.

Republic of Ireland President

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister if proposals by the person holding the position of President of the Irish Republic to visit the United Kingdom are communicated to Her Majesty's Government by the office of the President of the Irish Republic.

The Prime Minister: Proposals for visits to the United Kingdom by the President of the Irish Republic are communicated to Her Majesty's Government by the Government of the Irish Republic.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister what information he receives from the office of the President of the Irish Republic on thanks received in respect of visits by the person holding the position of President of the Irish Republic.

The Prime Minister: None.

Heads of State

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the private visits to Northern Ireland by foreign Heads of State in each of the last three years.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:
16 December 1990—President Robinson
4 February 1992—President Robinson
22 May 1992—President Robinson
6-7 September 1992—President Robinson
18-19 June 1993—President Robinson

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister what criteria are used to distinguish between private and official visits to the United Kingdom by foreign Heads of State.

The Prime Minister: Official visits are those undertaken at the invitation of the British Government.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the public engagements which have been fulfilled by Heads of State during private visits to Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

16 December 1990
President Robinson attended the Installation of Archbishop Daly at Armagh and visited the Armagh Observatory.

4 February 1992
President Robinson met women's groups at the EOC Offices in Belfast; had lunch with the Law Society; met voluntary groups and cultural traditions groups in the Linenhall library; and attended a reception in Stormont castle.

22 May 1992
President Robinson, as part of "Impact 92" in Londonderry, lunched with Church leaders, visited Foyle day care centre, opened "The Craft Village", visited community groups, and attended a civic reception and pageant.

6-7 September 1992
President Robinson attended the "Beyond Hate Conference" in Londonderry; opened Belcoo enterprise unit; lunched with Enniskillen Rotary; and met community groups in Enniskillen library.

18-19 June 1993
President Robinson visited the Northern Ireland Voluntary Trust, Down museum, and West Belfast community groups; attended the Solicitors' Association annual dinner; and visited Coalisland enterprise centre and Ballance house, Glenavy.

All the above visits were private. President Robinson attended each engagement at the invitation of the organisers.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Prime Minister which of the undertakings given by the Federal Yugoslav Government at the London conference on 26 and 27 August 1992 have been fulfilled; what assessment he has made of changes in their policy and actions towards the crisis in the former Yugoslavia; what changes he considers to be still required; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The London conference established principles and a negotiating structure as the basis for a settlement of the problems of the former Yugoslavia and set out specific steps to secure an effective and durable cessation of hostilities. The Yugoslav authorities have failed to co-operate satisfactorily with the efforts of the international community to achieve peace in Bosnia and to resolve the problems of minorities in Croatia and Serbia. The international community is committed to the rigorous enforcement of United Nations sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro until the conditions for their lifting have been met.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Prime Minister when the question of sanctions against the Republic of Croatia was last considered by Her Majesty's Government; and what plans he has to raise this matter again with the international community in the future.

The Prime Minister: Policy towards Croatia is regularly reviewed in the light of Croatian Government co-operation with the efforts of the international community both to ensure a peaceful resolution of the problems in the Krajinas and to achieve a lasting and equitable peace in Bosnia. Croatia was put on notice by the 8 June meeting of EC Foreign Ministers that restrictive measures would be initiated against Croatia if the situation so requires.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Prime Minister to what extent the Croatian Government have complied with its obligations, as outlined in the London conference; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The London conference established principles and a negotiating structure as the basis for a settlement of the problems of the former Yugoslavia and set out specific steps to secure an effective and durable cessation of hostilities. The Croatian Government are expected to do more to co-operate with efforts to achieve peace in Bosnia. Croatia was put on notice by the 8 June meeting of EC Foreign Ministers that restrictive measures would be initiated against Croatia if the situation so requires.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Prime Minister which of the undertakings made by the Serbian Government at the London conference on 26 and 27 August 1992 have been fulfilled; to what extent there have been changes in their policy and actions towards the crisis in the former Yugoslavia; if he will list the changes still required; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The London conference established principles and a negotiating structure as the basis for a settlement of the problems of the former Yugoslavia and set out specific steps to secure an effective and durable cessation of hostilities. The Belgrade leadership has failed to co-operate satisfactorily with the efforts of the international community to achieve peace in Bosnia and to resolve the problems of minorities in Croatia and Serbia. The international community is committed to the rigorous enforcement of United Nations sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro until the conditions for their lifting have been met.

Unemployment, Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside and the deputation representing the unemployed in Liverpool.

The Prime Minister: I met the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside with a number of other people from the area on 16 June. I will be writing to him shortly about points raised at the meeting.

Mr. Shabir Shan and Mr. Yasin Malik

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 27 May, Official Report, column 663, what further information he has received about the detention in India of Mr. Shabir Shah and Mr. Yasin Malik; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Our high commission in New Delhi is in regular touch with the Indian Ministries concerned, but have received no further information on the cases of Shabir Shah and Yasin Malik since receiving the aide memoire from the Indian Home Ministry which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs forwarded to the hon. Gentleman under cover of his letter of 30 June.

Mr. Gazanfer Ali

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 8 June, Official Report, column 226, what further information he has received about court proceedings in Pakistan relating to Mr. Gazanfer Ali; and if he make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs wrote to the hon. Member for Bradford, West on 24 June with information on the two cases involving murder charges against Mr. Gazanfer Ali. Both cases have been further adjourned.

EDUCATION

Class Sizes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the class sizes in January in Lancashire in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average sizes of single teacher classes in maintained primary and secondary schools in Lancashire local education authority for the years 1983 to 1992 are given in the table.

Average sizes of classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in Lancashire Local Education Authority[1] 1983-92 (Position as at January each year)

	Primary Schools	Secondary Schools
1985	26·5	21·1
1986	26·9	20·8
1987	27·0	20·3
1988	26·7	20·2
1989	27·2	20·0
1990	27·5	20·2
1991	27·7	20·7
1992	27·6	20·7

[1] Figures for 1990, 1991 and 1992 include self-governing schools.

Delegated Funding

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will show, for each local education authority and for each year since 1989 for which information is available, the proportion of the potential schools budget delegated to schools, listing local education authorities by rank order of the proportion delegated in the most recent year for which information is available and showing the rank order in each year.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

Table showing the proportion of the potential schools budget (PSB) delegated to schools: 1990-94

Notes:

1. All 109 local education authorities (LEAs) in England have local management schemes in operation and are required to publish budget statements showing planned expenditure, under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988. The figures above are derived from those statements. The LEAs are ranked according to the percentage of funds included in schools' budget shares in 1993-94, with those including most at the top of the list. All percentages are rounded to one decimal place; where more than one LEA is shown as having the same percentage, the rank order takes account of the unrounded percentage. In the case of the inner London LEAs (other than Westminster), the introduction of statutory local management schemes was deferred until April 1992; the 12 LEAs concerned are listed separately.
2. The potential schools budget (PSB) in each LEA consists of the general schools budget (GSB)—ie all planned spending on schools—less planned spending on certain excepted or centrally held items: capital expenditure; expenditure supported by central government and EC grants; and expenditure on home to school transport, school meals, cleaning and grounds maintenance, and other transitional exceptions. With effect from April 1993 (April 1995 in the case of the 12 inner London LEAs shown separately), the total of schools' budget shares must account for at least 85 per cent. of each LEA's PSB. Where figures for 1993-94 are said to be not available (n/a), the LEA's budget statement had not been received in the Department by the end of June 1993; in relation to 1990-91, n/a indicates that no statutory local management scheme was yet in operation for the LEA concerned. Percentages and ranking order numbers are given for previous years.

Education Assets Board

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many recommendations from the Education Assets Board are awaiting a decision by his Department; and if he will list them and the time they have been with his Department.

Mr. Robin Squire: There are 14 cases awaiting final determination by my right hon. Friend. These are:

Institution	Date received
Grant Maintained Schools
Dartford Grammar School for Girls, Kent	December 1992
Epsom and Ewell High School, Surrey	March 1993
Great Barr School, Birmingham	August 1992
Kingsley Park School, Northamptonshire	September 1992
Pate's Grammar School, Gloucestershire	November 1991
Reading School, Berkshire	April 1993
Stratford School, London	May 1992
Thamesview School, Kent	March 1993
Wilson's School, Sutton	June 1993
Wymondham College, Norfolk	December 1992
Higher Education Institutions
Falmouth College of Art and Design	September 1991
University of Greenwich	September 1991
University of West of England; Bath College of HE	November 1991
Further Education Institutions
Somerset College of Arts and Technology	June 1993

Disabled Students

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of disabled people, in (a) full-time and (b) part-time education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: There were 11,000 full-time and 32,000 part-time students with learning difficulties and disabilities in further education colleges in England in 1991-92. Approximately 165,000 children had statements of special education needs maintained by local education authorities in England in 1991-92. Numbers of people with disabilities and learning difficulties in other sectors of education are not collected centrally.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to allow part-time disabled students to claim disabled students' allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Disabled students' allowances are payable as part of a mandatory award. The Education Act 1962 restricts mandatory awards to designated full-time courses, and to certain part-time initial teacher training courses. Local education authorities can make discretionary awards for other part-time courses, including such allowances as they think fit.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will update the table given in his answer of 6 November 1992, Official Report, column 513, giving the number of copies distributed and the cost in each case of the booklets (a) "School Governors, How to Become a Grant-maintained School", (b) "Grant-maintained Schools—Questions Parents Ask", (c) "Grant-maintained Schools—What it Means for Staff", (d) "Grant-maintained Schools—Questions Staff Ask", (e) "Grant-maintained Schools—Experiences During the First Year" and (f) "Education into the Next Century".

Mr. Robin Squire: The total numbers of booklets which have been printed to fulfil expected demand and the current costs of producing each booklet are as follows:

Total printed	Current cost per booklet
(a) 300,000 since April 1992	0·23
(b) 1,635,005 since March 1990	0·08
(c) 193,000 November 1990—September 1992	[2]0·09
(d) 225,000 since September 1992	0·07
(e) 470,000 since June 1991	0·09
(f) 2,750,000 since August 1992	[1]0·0592

[1] Estimate
[2] Booklet is no longer produced; it has been superseded by (d). This was the cost when it was last produced.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for each local education authority, the date when his Department received a local management of schools budget statement made under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988 for the purpose of calculating grant-maintained schools' budgets for the financial year 1993-94, the date when an acknowledgement was sent, if that budget statement formed a satisfactory basis for the calculation of annual maintenance grant for the grant-maintained schools in the authority's area, and the date by which he expects that his Department will have informed (a) 30 per cent., (b) 40 per cent., (c) 50 per cent., (d) 60 per cent., (e) 70 per cent., (f) 80 per cent., (g) 90 per cent. and (h) 100 per cent. of grant-maintained schools of their final annual maintenance grant budget figure.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows the date the section 42 statement was received from LEAs with grant-maintained schools within their area and the date receipt was acknowledged by the LMS unit of the Department. LEAs were advised in February that provided they submitted complete and final budget details by 31 March such data would be used to calculate annual maintenance grant. Information from the following LEAs did not meet the required standard:

Bromley
Hounslow
Humberside
Liverpool
Newham
Oxfordshire
Somerset
Tameside
Warwickshire

Certain points on Leicestershire's budget statement remain to be clarified before a decision can be taken on whether it provides a satisfactory basis on which to determine annual maintenance grant.

By 30 June 61 per cent. of grants had been finalised. I expect 70 per cent. to have been finalised by 23 July; 80 per cent. by 31 July; 95 per cent. by the end of August; and the remainder in September, although it is possible that one or two exceptional cases might take a little longer.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Know-how Funds

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the most recent analysis of the Government's know-how funds.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A review of the know-how fund covering activities in 1992-3 is being prepared and will be published later in the year. A copy will be placed in the Library in due course.

PHARE Funds

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries are currently eligible for PHARE funds.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Countries currently eligible are Albania, Bulgaria, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Slovakia and Slovenia. The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia also receives assistance from the PHARE programme.

Technical Assistance Funds

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what have been the priority areas of technical assistance under the PHARE and TACIS funds; and what proposals there are to change these.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: PHARE priorities and programmes are described in an EC publication summarising PHARE activities in 1992 already placed in the Library. Member states agreed revised guidelines in December 1992 for the period 1993-97; a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. A revised TACIS regulation for 1993 and beyond was agreed in March, subject to the views of the European Parliament which are still awaited. The full texts are available in the Library, but in summary they cover:

PHARE:
- Restructuring and privatisation of state enterprise in industry and agriculture
- Support for the private sector
- Modernisation of the financial system
- Development of a social safety net
- Nuclear safety
- Regional co-operation

TACIS
- Human Resources Development
- Enterprise restructuring and development
- Infrastructure
- Energy, including nuclear safety
- Food production, processing and distribution

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the EC about improvements in the administration of the PHARE and TACIS funds.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary and the Minister for Overseas Development have discussed the question of improvements with Sir Leon Brittan. We welcome the programme of improvements which Sir Leon announced on 9 June, and I have placed a copy of his speech in the Library.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer on aid and trade provision to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) of 17 June, Official Report, column 679, which creditworthy low-income countries will now qualify and which countries which have benefited during the last five years will be disqualified.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Creditworthy low-income countries which are currently eligible for aid and trade provision support are China, Indonesia, India, Ghana, Lesotho, Pakistan, Philippines, Sri Lanka and Zimbabwe.

Countries which have benefited over the last five years from the ATP but which are not included in those listed above are Botswana, Colombia, Egypt, Kenya, Malaysia, Morocco, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey and Yemen.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what authorisation has been given to the Commonwealth Development Corporation to operate in additional countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following a request from the corporation, approval has been given for the CDC to operate in Vietnam. It expects to give priority to promoting private sector development.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Colombia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what human rights issues he plans to raise with President Gaviria of Colombia when he visits Britain in July.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will raise with him the concern felt in this country about human rights in Colombia and the overall level of violence there.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance his Department gives to the Colombian security services.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Since Colombia's appeal in 1989 for help in combatting drugs, the Department has provided assistance worth £9·1 million, with a further £0·3 million planned for this financial year. This has covered non-lethal equipment technical expertise and training to the Colombian law enforcement authorities. Areas of assistance have included bomb search and disposal, protection of VIPs, communications and riverine patrolling.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect of legislation introduced to deal with drugs and terrorism in Colombia on human rights and freedom of expression.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Such legislation is necessary to defend the democratic rights and freedoms of Colombian citizens and should be impartially implemented and enforced.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to deny entry visas to Colombian military officers suspected of serious human rights violations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Colombian citizens do not need visas to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect of activities by the Colombian security servies on human rights.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We remain concerned by reports of human rights abuses in Colombia. We have urged the Colombian Government to bring to justice those responsible. We support the Colombian Government's efforts to promote greater understanding of, and respect for human rights, within the security forces, whose efforts to combat drug trafficking and terrorism make a major contribution to the protection of the human rights of the majority of Colombians.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures the British Government will be taking to ensure that British investment in Colombia does not contribute to environmental damage and social unrest in Colombia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: British investors are required to observe the relevant Colombian legislation relating to environmental protection. Investment in Colombia should encourage economic and social development.

Conventional Arms Transfer Register

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about returns, in addition to that by the United Kingdom, to the United Nations conventional arms transfer register; if he will place a copy of such information in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: To date, we understand that 62 countries have submitted data to the United Nations register of conventional arms. The United Nations Secretary General will report to the United Nations General Assembly in the autumn on the returns received. A copy of this report will be placed in the Library of the House in due course.

Bosnia

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the dates of interception of the violations of the United Nations no-fly zones in Bosnia since October 1992.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: NATO enforcement of the no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina began on 12 April. Between then and 23 June—the latest date for which United Nations reports are available—NATO fighters intercepted 28 violators in total, on the following dates —one violator on each date unless otherwise indicated:

13 April

Diplomatic Service (School Fees)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost to public funds of school fees for children of persons working in the diplomatic service in each year for the last 10 years.

Mr. Goodlad: The cost to public funds of boarding school fees in the United Kingdom, and day school fees at posts overseas, for children of diplomatic service officers in each year since 1983-84 has been:

1983-84	6·94
1984-85	7·46
1985-86	7·63

	£ million
1986-87	8·11

1992-93	9·82

Nigeria

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent election in Nigeria.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 1 July at column 589, to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter).

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the information held by his Department (a) on the results in each state of the Nigerian presidential election on 12 June 1992 and (b) on the turnout figures.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The results and turnout figures for each state of the Nigerian presidential election held on 12 June 1993 have been published in Nigeria and are as follows:

Presidential election: 12 June 1993

South Africa

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government following the recent outbreaks of right-wing extremism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 26 June the European Community and its member states issued a statement condemning the attack on 25 June on the world trade centre in Johannesburg.

The South African Government are well aware of our total support for the negotiation process, and of our view that it represents the only possibility of achieving a peaceful transition to democracy. We have frequently expressed our total condemnation of violence, and our conviction that those who use violence in an attempt to derail the negotiation process must not be allowed to succeed.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Waldegrave: The cost of market testing the Office of Public Service and Science, including its agencies, HMSO and COI, since November 1992 has been around £589,000. As a result of market-testing activities during this period, savings of £1,769,000 have been made.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritae how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage has spent £80,690 on its own market-testing programme since 1 November 1992. The Historic Royal Palaces agency and the Royal Parks have spent £9,000 and £37,200 respectively on their market-testing programmes since November 1992.

BBC

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what replies he has received to the Government's consultation document about the future of the BBC.

Mr. Brooke: By 31 May, we received more than 6,200 replies from members of the public and 300 responses from organisations. I have placed in the Library a copy of a report by Research International Advertising Media, analysing the replies from the public, and a list of the organisations which responded.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in respect of how many estates notified for probate, valued at (a) over £1 million and (b) over £2 million, no tax was paid in each year since 1988.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimates for the numbers of estates applying for grants of representation and estates paying no inheritance tax where death occurred in the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 are given in the table. Figures for more recent years are not yet available.

Year of death	(a) Net estate over £1 million		(b) Net estate over £2 million
	Number of estates applying for grants of representation	Number of estates not taxed	Number of estates applying for grants of representation	Number of estates not taxed

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the yield to the Treasury from excise duty on Scotch whisky for 1992-93 in cash terms, and as a percentage of total excise duty revenue; and what is the estimate of the corresponding figures for 1993-94.

Sir John Cope: Estimated figures are as follows:

Business Exapansion Scheme

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total cost to the Exchequer of the business expansion scheme tax relief on (a) all loan-linked investments where shares were issued before 16 March 1993 and (b) those loan-linked investments where shares were issued after 31 December 1992 and before 16 March 1993.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 25 June 1993]: It is not yet possible to provide a reliable estimate of the amount of money raised through loan-linked business expansion scheme investments. A tentative estimate is that approximately £650 million was raised, almost all of which was invested in newly built and second-hand residential property. Tax relief on this sum is estimated to amount to £250 million. Over £500 million was raised between 31 December 1992 and 16 March 1993; tax relief on that sum would be approximately £200 million.

Scrip Dividends

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the revenue which would have been raised by the Exchequer in 1992-93 if scrip dividends had been liable to advanced corporation tax at the same rate as dividends paid in cash.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 1 July 1993]: The Exchequer effects are very difficult to estimate. They would depend on the decisions taken by companies about what sort of dividends to pay. The main effect would have probably been a small cash flow benefit to the Exchequer from higher advance corporation tax largely offset by a reduction in subsequent mainstream tax payments.

WALES

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Redwood: The estimated cost of the Welsh Office market-testing programme, since November 1992, is £335,000. It has, of course, produced savings and improvements, which are expected to be substantial when the programme is complete.

Radiography

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full-time radiographers there are currently practising in Wales; how many there were in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information available centrally relates to staff directly employed by the national health service and is not reliable for years prior to 1984.

Full-time radiographers (numbers) in post as at 30 September

	Number
1984	469
1985	486
1986	490
1987	523
1988	520
1989	543
1990	545
1992	570

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to make available a national health service bursary for training in radiography in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Bursaries are available for pre-registration radiography training. Post-registration and post-graduate training is a matter for the employers.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase the funding for graduate and post-diploma training in radiography; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply of 29 June to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) at column 479.

IACS Forms

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints he has received from Welsh farmers about the integrated administration and control systems forms; what structure has been set up to deal with these complaints; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received several complaints which have been answered at an appropriate level within the normal departmental structure. I shall be keeping future requirements for form filling under close review.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

THORP

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which nuclear power stations were designed to use reprocessed fuel; and in which power stations the reprocessed fuel from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant is to be used.

Mr. Eggar: No special design features are required in most water-moderated nuclear reactors to enable them to use reprocessed nuclear materials in their fuel. The use of reprocessing products arising in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant is a matter for the customers of British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what radioactive materials or radio-isotopes are already on site, or have been delivered for use at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant for commissioning or other purposes, excluding consignments or irradiated fuel, within the last three months, or are expected to be delivered before 31 July;

(2) if any of the completed or outstanding commissioning work to be undertaken at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant has resulted in any radioactive contamination of the plant;

(3) what has been the cost of all commissioning of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant undertaken and completed to date; and if he will specify those areas and items of plant completed so far.

(4) what is the approximate cost and timescale for each element of outstanding commissioning work on the thermal oxide reprocessing plant; and what areas or items of plant have yet to be completed.

Mr. Eggar: This is an operational matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consignments of radioactive materials or radio-isotopes have been or are to be transferred within the Sellafield site for the thermal oxide reprocessing plant centre.

Mr. Eggar: The majority of the irradiated fuel to be reprocessed during the first 10 years' operation of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant has already been delivered to storage ponds on the Sellafield site, including the receipt and storage facility attached to the THORP plant.

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the initial estimates for the cost of constructing and maintaining the THORP at Sellafield and the actual cost of construction and maintenance.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 June 1993]: For the costs of constructing the thermal oxide reprocessing plant, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 17 December 1992 at columns 468-69. The plant's maintenance costs are an operational matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Post Office (Pension Payments)

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the public sector occupational pensions that formerly had facilities for payment through Post Office Counters Ltd. which have been withdrawn in the last 18 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: Those public sector occupational pensions administered by the Paymaster General's Office —that is, the national health service, England and Wales; national health service, Scotland and the principal civil service pension scheme—had this facility withdrawn on 1 April 1993. Fifty-nine thousand pensioners were affected.

However, special arrangements were made to open a Girobank account for those pensioners who wished to continued to draw their pension at a post office.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications for loans under the loan guarantee scheme have been made since the Budget; how many have been successful; and what were the figures in the same period in 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of applications made under the loan guarantee scheme between the Budget and 25 June 1993, the number of successful applications and the corresponding figures for the same period in 1992 are as follows:

	1992	1993
Applications Received	738	644
Loans Guaranteed	738	637
Applications under consideration	0	6

The changes in the Chancellor's Budget statement which came into effect on 1 July include a measure that allow small firms which have been established for two years or more to obtain loans up to a maximum of £250,000 with a guarantee of 85 per cent.

Cable Television

Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to be able to award a licence for cable television services in the Worcester area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I was pleased to be able to grant a Telecommunications Act licence on 28 June 1993 to Comment Cablevision Worcester Ltd. to install and run a broadband cable service in the Worcester, Redditch and Droitwich area. I look forward to the licensee offering the residents of Worcester and surrounding areas a wide range of TV and other telecommunications services.

Steel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy concerning the dumping of steel in the United Kingdom by east European producers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Action against dumping is a matter for the European Commission, which is ready to investigate any evidence which the steel industry may put to it. As regards other trade measures, the Community has already agreed for 1993 some import restrictions in the form of quotas or tariff quotas on certain steel products from the Commonwealth of Independent States, Georgia, Bulgaria and the Czech and Slovak Republics.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has as to overcapacity among east European steel producers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: According to figures produced by the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, East European production of crude steel in 1992 amounted to 29·4 million tonnes, compared to capacity of 48·9 million tonnes, equivalent to an excess in capacity of almost 70 per cent. over production.

Postal Services

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the quality of the postal services.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department regularly receives representations about a range of postal issues, including quality of service. Royal Mail continues to make significant improvements in this area. Nationally, in 1992-93, 91·9 per cent. of first-class mail was delivered the next working day and 98·4 per cent. of second-class mail was delivered within three days.

Video Copyright

Lady Olga Maitland To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures the Government are taking to stop the infringement of copyright by illegal video duplication.

Mr. McLoughlin: Copyright owners have considerable powers under the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act, 1988 to take appropriate legal action themselves against those infringing their intellectual property rights. In addition, this legislation provides for significant criminal penalties for those who make or trade in unauthorised copies of audiovisual works, demonstrating the importance that the Government attach to combatting this illegal activity. The Patent Office's promotional literature and associated audiovisual aids continue to play a major role in increasing the general awareness of the rights existing in these works.

Research and Development

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what details he has of investment in research and development and innovation by industry in the west midlands region based in north Staffordshire.

Mr. Sainsbury: The details requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set targets for Government investment in research and development for industry in the west midlands region based in Stoke on Trent.

Mr. Sainsbury: It would not be appropriate for the Government to set such targets: it is industry's responsibility to innovate. Moreover, since DTI schemes usually involve matching funding, targets would require assumptions to be made about the proportionate contribution local industry would be willing to provide.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a full copy of the Energy Minister's speech on nuclear power to a London conference on 29 June.

Mr. Eggar: I have placed in the Library of the House copies of the press notice issued following my speech to the British nuclear industry forum on 29 June.

Public Houses

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the European Commission last reviewed the block exemption of tied public houses.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In June 1990 the European Commission announced the results of a review it had undertaken of competition in the European Community beer market. This concluded, inter alia, that no change should be made to the block exemption which expires in 1997.

Beer

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 294, what percentage of beer was sold through (a) tied public houses and (b) untied public houses in each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The available information is as follows:

Beer sales since the Beer Orders (per cent. by channel)

	1989	1990	1991	[1] November 1992
On-trade:

Brewery Industry

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what part the Office of Fair Trading has played in his investigations into issues raised with him about Inntrepreneur leases in the brewery industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In considering whether any competition issues have been raised in the representations made to my Department about Inntrepreneur leases and related matters, my officials have worked closely with the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received from lessees of Inntrepreneur Estates complaining of the conditions of its tenancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Since the beginning of the calendar year, my Department has received over 100 letters from, or on behalf of, Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. lessees.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with Sir Alan Sheppard, chairman of Grand Metropolitan plc, about Inntrepreneur leases in the brewery industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has had no discussions with Sir Allen Sheppard, chairman of Grand Metropolitan plc, about Inntrepreneur leases. Officials have met recently with Mr. R. G. Williams, chairman and managing director of Grand Metropolitan Estates Ltd., which administers the property portfolio of Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd., to discuss a number of specific issues relating to Inntrepreneur leases.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 23 June, Official Report, columns 293-94, what significant improvement has been achieved for the tenants of Inntrepreneur Estates as a result of his intervention; and what course of action he has urged upon such brewery companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: As I made clear in my answer to the hon. Member on 7 June at columns 161-62, the negotiation of individual leases is a commercial matter for determination between landlords and tenants. Nevertheless, in 1991 Ministers did secure certain assurances from the national brewers about treatment of tenants when introducing changes to leasing arrangements. I believe that these assurances have had some effect in helping to smooth what has been a difficult period of transition for brewers and tenants. I am, for instance, aware that a number of tenants nearing retirement have been offered more flexible lease arrangements. It would be wrong, however, to have expected these assurances to resolve all commercial differences between a brewer and its tenant.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria are used by his Department to assess the corporate plans produced by BNFL.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 June 1993]: When assessing the corporate plans of BNFL, my Department applies commercial criteria in line with current Government policy.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his Department last received a copy of the forward corporate plan produced by BNFL.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 June 1993]: DTI receives copies of all British Nuclear Fuels plc corporate plans following their approval by the board of the company.

Furniture (Safety)

Mr. Michael: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress was made at the European Council on 14 June concerning the conclusion of the draft directive on the fire behaviour of upholstered furniture.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 30 June 1993]: On 14 June 1993 the Commission stated that the proposed directive on the fire behaviour of upholstered furniture had not been included in the 1993 legislative programme because of the difficulty in preparing adequate standards, particularly with regard to the safety of fire retardent treatments. Subsequent to this, at the Copenhagen European Council the Commission produced a list of items, in the context of discussions of subsidiarity, for which no legislation is now planned. The safety—flammability—of foam-filled furniture is included in this list.

Textile and Clothing

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will make a statement outlining progress which has been made in his negotiations with the United States of America on tariff peaks in the textile and clothing sector;

(2) what recent representations he has received from (a) the Apparel, Knitting and Textiles Alliance, and (b) others, about the need for an agreement to reduce United States tariff peaks on textiles and clothing as a prelude to wider multilateral negotiations with all other GATT signatories on wider tariff harmonisation, consolidation and removal;

(3) if he will state his policy on the level of the United States of America's tariff peaks on textiles and clothing.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 July 1993]: I have recently received correspondence from the Apparel, Knitting and Textiles Alliance about the need to reduce United States tariff peaks on textiles and clothing as a prelude to wider multilateral negotiations with all other GATT signatories on wider tariff harmonisation, consolidation and removal. It is the European Commission which negotiates on behalf of the European Community on tariffs. It remains United Kingdom and EC policy to obtain substantial reductions in peak United States textile and clothing tariffs in the course of the GATT Uruguay round market access negotiations. The EC is currently negotiating with the United States on the elements of a market access agreement which would include a substantial reduction in US textile and clothing tariff rates.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mental Health Act 1983

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland have been detained under section 2 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: The Mental Health Act 1983 does not apply in Northern Ireland. The equivalent legislation is the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 of which article 4 applies to admissions to hospital for assessment. The number of admissions from 1986 are as follows:

Year	Number of admissions
1986	691
1987	539
1988-89	788
1989-90	771
1990-91	566
1991-92	642
1992-93	635

The numbers are of admissions, not persons, as a person could be admitted more than once during the year. Data for 1988-89 onwards are on a financial year basis.

Leadhill Primary School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new admissions of pupils there have been to Leadhill primary school in each of the past five years; how many new admissions are expected in September; how many classrooms were lost in June 1982 as a result of vandalism; when it is planned to replace those classrooms; and at which primary schools in the borough of Castlereagh there will be capital expenditure for the provision of new classrooms during the next three years.

Mr. Ancram: Admissions to Leadhill primary school in each of the last five years and expected admissions in September 1993 are as follows:

Year	Number
1989	25
1990	26
1991	25

Four classrooms at Leadhill primary school were demolished following an arson attack in June 1983. They were replaced by three temporary classrooms.

There are no plans at present for major capital expenditure for the provision of new classrooms at primary schools in the borough of Castlereagh, but the South Eastern education and library board regularly reviews the need for capital development at controlled schools in its area.

Abortion

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the terms of the inquiry currently being undertaken by the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights on abortion law in Northern Ireland; and what steps were taken by the commission to alert right hon. and hon. Members representing constituencies in Northern Ireland prior to announcing the inquiry.

Mr. Ancram: The Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights is not undertaking an inquiry. It has published a paper on abortion law in Northern Ireland, inviting a wide range of bodies and individuals to respond on ways in which the law could be clarified. Northern Ireland Members of Parliament have been invited to contribute their views.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from right hon. and hon. Members representing Northern Ireland constituencies on whether the Abortion Act 1967 should be extended to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement providing details of representations which he has received on the proportion of (a) people of Northern Ireland, or (b) the medical profession in the Province would support the extension of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: In the past 12 months, five representations have been received indicating that a majority of people in the Province would support the extension of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland. Twenty-one representations have been received indicating that a majority of people would be opposed to such an extension and one that a majority of the medical profession would likewise be opposed.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those churches or religious organisations from Northern Ireland which have expressed to him a view that the Abortion Act 1967 should be extended to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: No churches or religious organisations have expressed such a view.

Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what authority the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights is established; who are its current members; who is its chairman; upon what basis and for what terms he appoints individuals to the commission; what is the annual cost of the commission; and if he will make it his policy to bring forward proposals for its abolition.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The commission is constituted in accordance with section 20 of the Northern Ireland Constitution Act 1973. Members are selected on the basis of their legal or other relevant experience. They are appointed for a period of two years and their appointments may be renewed. The commission's membership on 1 July 1993 is as follows:

Chairman:
Mr. Charles Hill, QC

Members:
Mrs. J. Harbison, CBE
Mrs. M. Clark-Glass, CBE
Mr. R. T. Mullan
Mr. F. A. Mackle, OBE
Mr. A. L. Sherrard
Mr. D. Nesbitt
Mrs. J. Corr
Professor S. F. Lee
Mrs. J. Smyth
Ms G. Keegan

Ex-Officio Members[1]:
Mr. R. G. Cooper, CBE
Mrs. J. McIvor, QSM

[1] The 1973 Act stipulates that the commission's membership must include ex-officio the chairman of the Fair Employment Agency, and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints and the Northern Ireland Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. Mr. Cooper is chairman of the FEA and Mrs. McIvor holds both commissioner posts.

The annual cost of the commission for the period April 1992 to March 1993 was £240,200 (provisional figure).

I greatly value the independent advice of the Standing Advisory Commission of Human Rights and the Government have no plans to bring forward proposals for its abolition.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Uprating

9. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was spent on uprating benefits in April.

Mr. Lilley: The uprating of all the main benefits in April this year by 3·6 per cent. cost an additional £2·5 billion.

Invalidity and Sickness Benefits

12. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the adult male population receives (a) invalidity benefit and (b) sickness benefit.

Mr. Scott: In March 1991, the latest date for which these figures are available, about 4·5 per cent. of the adult male population received invalidity benefit, and about 0·4 per cent. received sickness benefit.

Available information is in the table.

	Males in receipt of benefit on 30 March 1991[1]	As a percentage of the adult male population[2] per cent.
Sickness benefit	85,000	0·4
Invalidity benefit	976,000	4·5

[1] Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants, rounded to the nearest thousand.

[2] Provisional estimate for mid-1991 of 21,542,000 males in Great Britain aged 16 and over; based on early 1991 census results.

16. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any proposals for changing entitlement to sickness and invalidity benefits.

Mr. Scott: I refer to the reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) earlier today.

Medical Appeal Tribunal

14. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many domiciliary medical appeal tribunals there were in England and Wales in (a) 1992 and (b) 1982.

Mr. Burt: The president of the independent tribunal service advises that in 1992, 242 domiciliary medical appeal tribunals were held in England and Wales. The Department no longer has the figures for 1982.

Pensioner Owner-occupiers

15. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the proportion of pensioners who are owner-occupiers and have paid off their mortgages.

Mr. Hague: Over half of all pensioners now own their own home—of these, 94 per cent. own their homes outright with no mortgage commitments.

Back to Work Initiative

17. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many inquiries there have been to the family credit helpline since he announced the back to work initiative in April.

Mr. Burt: Since I launched the helpline, which fulfilled our manifesto commitment, well over a quarter of a million inquiries have been answered.

Disability Working Allowance

18. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the number of people receiving the disability working allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Some organisations of and for disabled people have commented on the take-up of this benefit. Disability working allowance has been widely welcomed in principle and we are working with organisations to ensure that more of the people who could take advantage of it are aware of the new opportunity which it presents.

Social Security Review

19. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will announce the completion of his review of social security.

Mr. Burt: The timetable for the expenditure review is long term. We will shortly publish background analytical material to the review with the intention of stimulating public debate about the future of the social security system. At this early stage, I cannot say what the long-term timetable will be.

Social Fund

20. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total value of payments made by the social fund since its introduction.

Mr. Scott: Since the social fund was introduced in 1988, over 16·3 million social fund awards have been made worth more than £1·5 billion, including maternity, funeral and cold weather payments as well as awards from the discretionary scheme.

Family Credit

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families in the north-west were in receipt of family credit at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: At 31 October 1992, the latest date for which information is available, there were 63,000 families in the north-west region of England receiving family credit.

Housing Benefit

24. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further consideration he has given to the introduction of a universal housing benefit scheme covering both rent and mortgage payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 18 January, at column 101.

Pensioners (Income Support)

25. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many low-income pensioners have gained from the extra increases in income support that have taken effect since the start of 1991.

Mr. Hague: More than 1·5 million pensioners and their partners have gained from these increases since 1991. In addition, a large number of other pensioners have gained from consequential rises in the other income-related benefits.

Sick and Disabled People

26. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the most recent figure for the average increase in spending on long-term sick and disabled people since 1979; and what were the comparable figures for the period 1974 to 1979.

Mr. Scott: During 1992-93 we spent almost £15 billion on benefits for long-term sick and disabled people. This represents an annual increase of £700 million per year since 1979 at 1992-93 prices, double the annual increase between 1974 and 1979.

Pensions

27. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much total pension incomes have increased between 1979 and 1992; and what was the equivalent figure between 1974 and 1979.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 7 June at columns 139-40.

Personal Pensions

28. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the results of his Department's policies to encourage personal pensions.

Mr. Hague: The Government's policy in encouraging personal pensions has proved to be highly successful with over 5 million people currently being personal pension holders.

Invalidity Benefit

29. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of invalidity benefit in January 1990; and what are the latest available figures.

Mr. Scott: On 31 January 1990 there were, 1,196,000 people receiving invalidity benefit[1]. The estimated average number receiving invalidity benefit at any one time during 1992-93 was 1,490,000.[2]

Notes:

[1]Source—1 per cent. sample of claimants, rounded to the nearest thousand.

[2]Source—Departmental Report.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of people in receipt of invalidity benefit have additional income from (a) an occupational pension, (b) a spouse earning less than £44·65 and (c) a spouse earning more than £44·65 a week, giving figures separately for men and women.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available follows.

Using information from the 1989, 1990 and 1991 family expenditure surveys, we estimate that around 45 per cent. of men and 25 per cent. of women in receipt of invalidity benefit received an occupational pension.

Information is not kept on the number of invalidity benefit recipients whose spouse earns above the earnings limit. However, at 30 March 1991, there were some 4,000 reduced rate adult dependency increases in payment arising from claims made before 16 September 1985. At that time, such increases were reduced because of earnings rather than not paid about a given level as is the present rule.

Information about invalidity benefit recipients at 30 March 1991 who received an adult dependency increase is in the table.

	Number of beneficiaries	Adult dependency increase in payment	Per cent.
Total	1,306,000	415,000	31·8
Men	976,000	412,000	42·2
Women	330,000	2,000	0·7

Note:
1. 30 March 1991 is the latest date for which information is available, figures based on a 1 per cent. sample of incapacity benefit claimants, and rounded to the nearest thousand.

Students (Income Support)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will restore income support to students who fall ill during the long vacation.

Mr. Burt: Since September 1990, financial support for most students has come from the education maintenance system, not the social security system. We have no plans to restore income support to students.

Family Support

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual spending from family credit; and what was the spending on family income supplement in 1979.

Mr. Burt: Family credit expenditure for 1992-93 was £864 million. This is 36 times more than the £24 million spent on family income supplement in 1978-79 in cash terms and 13 times more in real terms.

Claimants (Co-located Facilities)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions he has had about co-locating facilities for claimants and the unemployed.

Mr. Burt: Officials from the Departments of Social Security and of Employment have examined ways of improving the interaction of employment service and Benefits Agency functions in order to improve the service provided to unemployed people. Recommendations which have been taken forward include better liaison between offices in the same area and moves towards standard opening hours. In addition, a number of measures are being piloted; for example, family credit advice and calculations for newly unemployed people, and locating BA staff in ES offices to give immediate advice about income support claims. The results of the latter pilot are now being evaluated.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Murder Cases

41. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will ensure that, in murder cases where hon. Members have raised the conviction with members of the Government, transcripts or notes of the trial are retained longer than the five-year norm.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Five years is the rule but if there is an appeal then the transcripts and statements made available for the appeal are retained indefinitely by arrangement with the Public Record Office.

Conciliation Services

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about conciliation services.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government greatly value the work undertaken by local mediation and conciliation services in many areas of the country.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Women Priests

33. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what estimate has been made of the reduction in the number of stipends payable to clergy as a result of clergy retiring or leaving the Church on the grounds of the ordination of women.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners have made no such estimates because they have no means of knowing how many clergy may actually resign. They are, of course, discussing the possible financial implications with dioceses using a benchmark of cost per 100 men.

Redundant Church Buildings

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what proportion of redundant church buildings have been transferred to housing associations and local authorities for social housing provision.

Mr. Alison: Since 1969 more than 100 or about one third of the sites of demolished redundant churches have been transferred to housing associations or local authorities, mainly for social housing purposes. Conversion of standing redundant church buildings present more difficulties, but, over the same period, 11 have been transferred to housing associations or local authorities for social housing purposes while terms have been agreed in a twelfth case.

Women Priests (Pensions)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what are the proposed rules relating to the payment of a widow's pension for the husband of an ordained female cleric who dies in an incumbency.

Mr. Alison: Pensions for the widowers of female members of the scheme for those in the ministry—currently deacons, deaconesses and licensed layworkers—were introduced under the Church of England Pensions Measure in 1988. These pensions are calculated in exactly the same way as pensions for widows of male members of the scheme.

SCOTLAND

Refugees and Asylum Seekers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what money is currently spent from the urban aid programme in Scotland on work specifically with refugees and/or asylum seekers.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: No projects specifically for refugees and/or asylum seekers are currently being funded. Such individuals may, however, benefit from other projects being funded in the areas in which they live.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance, in cash, his Department has given, or plans to give, to assist the resettlement of Bosnian refugees or asylum seekers in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary is responsible for the funding of reception and resettlement arrangements for former detainees and their dependants from concentration camps in Bosnia whom the Government have agreed to accept in the United Kingdom at the request of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The Scottish Office provides financial assistance to support the Scottish Refugee Council in its overall work with refugee communities in Scotland including asylum seekers from Bosnia. In 1993-94 grants totalling approximately £91,000 have been awarded.

Homelessness

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons aged between 16 and 21 years were turned away from temporary accommodation in the latest year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on those turned away from temporary accommodation is not collected centrally.

Care of the Elderly

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many trained and untrained nurses, physiotherapists, speech therapists, and occupational therapists work in care of the elderly within each health board area.

Mr. Stewart: The whole-time equivalent figures for qualified and unqualified nursing staff as at September 1992 are detailed in the table. Data on the number of qualified and unqualified physiotherapy, speech therapy and occupational therapy staff working in the care of the elderly are not held centrally.

Scotland: nursing staff in care of the elderly: by qualification status and health board: as at 30 September 1992

Damp Housing

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when, at current and planned levels of capital allocation, he expects to eradicate dampness from public sector housing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All local housing authorities have been asked in their next housing capital programmes due to be submitted to the Scottish Office by 31 August, to set out a strategy for tackling damp housing in their areas, including quantified targets which can be used as a basis for assessing progress.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there has been any change in Government policy about the use of urban aid funds for work with the ethnic minorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The urban programme remains a source of grant assistance for ethnic minority projects in eligible areas. Applications for all types of projects throughout Scotland compete on their merits for the available resources. Funds are not earmarked for particular client groups. There is in addition a separate ethnic minority grants scheme, introduced last year, which is not confined to particular areas.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the guidelines about the use of urban aid are interpreted flexibly in the case of projects involving the ethnic minorities; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The urban programme is targeted on eligible areas of deprivation. The Scottish Office recognises, however, that the spread of ethnic minority populations can make it difficult for local authorities and voluntary organisations to devise projects which fully comply with the programme's geographical targeting requirements. Accordingly discretion is exercised in this respect when ethnic minority projects are considered.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what projects for work with ethnic minorities have been approved under the urban aid budget in the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Notes:
New projects are approved on the basis of capital costs and four years' running costs. 25 per cent. of the costs shown are met by the sponsoring local authority, the remainder by the Scottish Office.
Supplementary applications seek additional funding until the end of the previously approved period.
Extension applications are approved for a further three years after the initial four years' funding has expired. This applies only to projects run by voluntary and community groups.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what arrangements he intends to put in place to secure the emergency carriage by air ambulances in Scotland of blood and other emergency medical products; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what were the medical qualifications of the Scottish ambulance service staff who dealt with the request for the transport of emergency blood products by air ambulance to Shetland on 17 June;

(3) what arrangements were in place on 17 June for persons to contact the medical director of the Scottish ambulance services by telephone out of office hours, and what changes are proposed in these arrangements.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 June 1993]: It is for the Scottish blood transfusion service to supply blood or blood products requested by hospitals and to decide on the appropriate transport arrangements for delivery of these both for routine situations and in emergencies.

Air ambulances are primarily tasked to collect or carry patients to hospital at the request of clinicians and are equipped accordingly. In a life saving situation and where it would be sensible and cost effective to do so, there is no reason why an air ambulance should not be used to carry blood or blood products for emergency medical treatment. This is a matter for arrangement between the Scottish blood transfusion service and the Scottish ambulance service which are divisions of the Common Services Agency.

A protocol has now been agreed to the effect that the Scottish ambulance service will transport blood or blood products by air ambulance when in the opinon of any clinician in the Scottish national blood transfusion service there is a serious risk to life and there is no other sensible or reasonable option available. The ambulance service will give such requests priority subject only to the emergency evacuation of patients.

Ambulance control staff do not have any medical qualifications but are able to seek medical advice when required from the medical director of the Scottish ambulance service who is an accident and emergency consultant and is on call 24 hours a day by radiopager.

In the event that he is unavailable, there is an arrangement with the accident and emergency department at the Aberdeen Royal infirmary to provide medical advice to the air desk controller. The arrangements on 17 June were in accordance with these procedures. No further changes are currently proposed but the position is kept under review.

Forestry

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution to the United Kingdom economy is made by the timber trade.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 July 1993]: The total value added by the timber trade, including the forestry and wood processing industries, is about £8,000 million annually; this represents about 1½ per cent. of the gross domestic product. The wood processing industry accounts for about 6½ per cent. of manufacturing industry.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce a country certification scheme to prove to potential purchasers of British-grown timber United Kingdom forests are sustainably managed.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 July 1993]: The Forestry Commission has already laid the basis for a certification scheme. Permission to fell trees is given by the commission's forestry authority arm only if the felling proposals are "in accordance with the Government policy to promote the sound management of woodlands as a renewable natural resource".

A statement to this effect is included in plans of operation approved under the commission's woodland grant scheme and will soon be included in felling licences.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on allowing the independent inspection and certification of the United Kingdom's forest management policies implemented by the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 July 1993]: The forestry authority arm of the Forestry Commission implements the Government's forestry policy in Great Britain, regulates the forestry industry, and monitors forestry standards. There is therefore no need for any other organisation to carry out inspections or certification.

Coastal Planning

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to revise the 1974 "Coastal Planning Guidelines for Oil and Gas Development".

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 July 1993]: In line with the undertaking given in "This Common Inheritance" (Cmd 1200), all our planning guidelines are subject to review. The 1974 coastal planning guidelines for oil and gas development have already been supplemented by the 1977 national planning guidelines for petrochemical developments and by the 1981 national planning guidelines on priorities for development planning. Further refinements will also be included in a new national planning policy guideline on business and industry, which I hope to issue shortly.

Uranium-tipped Shells

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions uranium-tipped armour piercing shells have been fired into the water from the Kirkcudbright ranges during tests.

Mr. Aitken: I have been asked to reply.

Firing of DU shells from Kirkcudbright started on 29 March 1982. Since that date about 4,000 shells have been fired into the Solway firth from the range.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many IACS forms have been submitted late in total and in each category of lateness specified in the IACS rules.

Mr. Jack: A total of 331 IACS forms have been received in England after the 15 May deadline. Of these 305 were received by 4 June and will attract a late claim penalty, and the remaining 26 have been received after 4 June will not qualify for any payment. The late claims represent a very small proportion of the 87,300 forms received.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of IACS forms were returned by the closing date in each EC member state.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 30 June, Official Report, column 564.

Set-aside

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will set out the mechanisms for resolving set-aside disputes.

Mr. Jack: If an applicant is unhappy about any aspect of the way in which their claim for arable area and set-aside payments has been handled, they will always be offered an opportunity to discuss their concerns with a senior officer in the regional organisation of MAFF.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has had to introduce an appeals procedure for set-aside disputes along similar lines to the milk quota tribunals.

Mr. Jack: None.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received regarding the hormone bovine somatotropin; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We continue to receive a number of representations from both individuals and organisations about the possible availability of bovine somatotropin (BST).

No licences for BST products may be issued in member states under the moratorium agreed by the Council of Agriculture Ministers in 1990. This was extended to 31 December 1993 to allow the EC Commission time to prepare and present its report on the implications of licensing BST by the end of June 1993. The report is now expected to be available later this month. We will be considering the contents and recommendations of the report very carefully, taking into account the many divergent views we have received on the subject, in coming to a view on the future of the moratorium.

Days-at-Sea Limitations

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the boats registered at Lowestoft now subject to days-at-sea limitations, together with the comparative track record in each case upon which the limits have been determined; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Provisional days-at-sea allocations were issued in respect of 240 fishing vessels administered by the Lowestoft district fisheries office. The vessels' recorded half-days in 1991 and their provisional allocation are as follows—in order to protect commercial confidentiality the name and PLN number of the vessels are not included:

PA Management Consultants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the projects undertaken by PA Management Consultants for her Department in the last three years.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 15 June 1993]: PA Management Consultants were used on the following projects, during the last three financial years up to March 1993:

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (prior to becoming an Executive Agency):
- Project Costing and Management
- Computerised Management Information System
- Computerised Accounting System

Development of computer system sub-strategies for the Food Science, Economics and Statistics, Animal Health Group and Horticulture areas of the department.

Animal Tracking Computer System.

Design of Food Related Computer Data Base.

EMPLOYMENT

Passive Smoking

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposal he has to amend health and safety legislation to provide a remedy for employees whose health is threatened by passive smoking at work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 1 July 1993]: Adequate legal protection for employees against risks to health from passive smoking at work is already provided by section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. No amendment is therefore necessary.

Smoking

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how progress towards the "The Health of the Nation" goal of a large majority of employers implementing a no-smoking policy by 1995 is being monitored; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 1 July 1993]: Achievement of "The Health of the Nation" aim is being promoted by voluntary means, through encouraging employers to introduce sensible policies on smoking in discussion with their workforce. Early results from recent surveys indicate continuing progress towards realising this aim.

"that the large majority of employees are covered by a no-smoking policy by 1995"

Holidays

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to introduce the proposed legislation to give employees a statutory right to four weeks' paid annual holiday; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holiday answer 1 July 1993]: The Government have no plans to introduce legislation providing for four weeks' paid annual holiday. The Government's policy is that annual holiday entitlements, like other terms and conditions of employment, are a matter for employers and employees to decide.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fraud Prosecutions

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to speed up the process of prosecution in fraud cases.

The Attorney-General: Prosecution of the most serious fraud cases, handled by the Serious Fraud Office, is already very much faster than before that office came into being. Currently the average period between the SFO taking on a case for investigation and the transfer of the case to the Crown court, is 15 months.

Long criminal trials are the subject of an inter-departmental working group, which issued a consultation paper at the end of the last year, and of examination by the Royal Commission on criminal justice, whose report is expected very shortly.

In assessing what steps should now be taken to expedite the trial process in serious fraud cases I, together with the Lord Chancellor and the Home Secretary, will consider the responses to the consultation paper and the views of the working group together with the report of the royal commission.

DEFENCE

Pathfinder Initiative

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to implement the Pathfinder initiative.,

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 5 July 1993:

In today's written answer, the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to your question about the Pathfinder Initiative.

The Pathfinder initiative which I launched last year is aimed at establishing closer alignment between the DRA and industry in order to bring about an earlier and more effective transfer of technology from ourselves to those who can carry it forward into development and production.

There are 3 elements to Pathfinder—strategic alignment briefings at senior level, an annual conference, and a formal bidding process in which industry can put forward proposals for inclusion in our own research programme. All 3 elements are now very much under way. A first round of briefings took place last year, as indeed did the first conference, and we are about to announce the outcome of the initial tranche of industry bids. The process will be continuing this year with further briefings, a second conference planned for November 1993, and a second round of bidding by industry.

So far both industry and academia have shown considerable interest and I am confident that the Pathfinder Scheme will yield the benefits that I envisaged when it was first devised.

European Future Large Aircraft Project

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what resources Her Majesty's Government will commit to the European future large aircraft project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Government do not consider it necessary to commit defence resources towards the development of the European future large aircraft, since existing technology is adequate to meet short-term requirements for military transport aircraft. The future large aircraft will be considered as a candidate to meet future Royal Air Force requirements, if it is available at the appropriate time.

Underground Nuclear Tests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of whether further underground nuclear tests are required to ensure the (a) credibility, (b) reliability or (c) safety of (i) the Trident system and (ii) the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb; and what criteria are employed by his Department for assessing each of these factors in each case.

Mr. Aitken: We are confident in the safety and reliability of the WE177 free-fall bomb and that subject to completion of the necessary assessments—which do not require further underground testing—Trident will enter service as a safe and reliable system. We are similarly confident in the credibility of our nuclear deterrent, current and planned. We need, however, to ensure that we are able to maintain the highest levels of safety assurance over time. Testing has played a central role in this in the past; the development of alternative techniques is now a high priority.

Nuclear Test Sites

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost since 1963 of the clean-up and restoration, in historic and present prices, of the radioactive and toxic contamination at the nuclear test sites at (a) Christmas island, (b) Malden islands, (c) Monte Bello islands, (d) Emu Field and (e) Maralinga.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Britannia

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contributions were received in the latest available year from the Governments of other countries to the running of the Royal Yacht Britannia.

Mr. Hanley: HMY Britannia's operating costs are funded entirely from the defence budget and no contributions are made by Governments of other countries.

RMAS Golden Eye

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who acquired RMAS Golden Eye when it was disposed of by the Royal Navy.

Mr. Aitken: At the request of the purchaser this matter is regarded as commercially confidential.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Royal Navy disposed of RMAS Golden Eye.

Mr. Aitken: RMAS Golden Eye was handed over by the Royal Navy to the successful tenderer during the week commencing 16 December 1991.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what payments have been received from the United Nations as danger money for the United Kingdom troops with UNPROFOR in Bosnia; if this money has been paid to the men and women concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The United Nations does not pay danger money for any United Kingdom personnel serving in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his counterparts in France and Canada regarding payment of a United Nations supplement to the UNPROFOR force in Bosnia; what was the outcome of such discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There have been no such discussions.

Depleted Uranium Ammunition

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what precautionary measures were taken to minimise the dangers of inhalation of radioactive particles from depleted uranium ammunition by British troops during the Gulf war.

Mr. Hanley: Special instructions were issued to personnel undertaking explosive ordnance disposal whose work involved a direct risk of exposure to particles of depleted uranium. Advice was also issued to those involved in the transportation and storage of the ammunition.

Submarines

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral response to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) of 24 June, Official Report, column 507, what are his plans for the four submarines, Churchill, Dreadnought, Swiftsure and Revenge, in light of his decision to allocate the Trident refitting and decommissioning work to Devonport.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 29 June 1993 at columns 492-93.

Radiation Compensation Scheme

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department will join the radiation compensation scheme operated by the civil nuclear industry.

Mr. Aitken: We intend to do so, subject to negotiations with British Nuclear Fuels plc and the Atomic Energy Authority and with the departmental trades unions.

MOD Police

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are issued to MOD police concerning their powers towards trespassers on MOD establishments; and if he will place copies of such instructions in the Library.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 29 June 1993]: Ministry of Defence police deal with trespassers on Ministry of Defence property on behalf of the Secretary of State on the direction of the commanding officer or head of establishment. The police officer will first ask the trespasser to leave MOD property. If the person refuses to do so he or she will be ejected using the minimum force necessary to effect the removal.

If an incursion on MOD property is in contravention of byelaws, offenders may be arrested by MDP officers, who have constabulary powers, and prosecuted for breach of byelaws.

As is the case in respect of other civil matters and criminal offences, all MDP officers, during their initial and refresher courses are trained in the use of their powers to deal with all aspects of trespass. The use of any of these powers is a matter on which the individual police officer must exercise his judgment at the time and according to the circumstances. His actions are subject to scrutiny by his supervising officers and the courts.

The chief constable MDP believes that it would be impractical to issue force-wide written instructions to cover the police response to all aspects of the operation of the law of trespass. From time to time written guidance is included in local operation orders to provide an appropriate response arising from special events or in special circumstances.

Vexatious Litigation

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times in the past five years his Department's police have been declared vexatious litigants and charges not proceeded with; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 30 June 1993]: I am not aware of any of my Department's police ever having been declared a vexatious litigant.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Butte Mining plc

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the director of the Serious Fraud Office's investigations into the flotation of and share dealings in Butte Mining.

The Attorney-General: The SFO investigation relating to Butte Mining plc is not yet concluded. It is my practice not to give details about investigations which are still in progress.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Gerontology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the breakdown of the £600,000 spent on basic aging research or gerontology.

Mr. William Waldegrave: The Medical Research Council—MRC—is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related research in the United Kingdom. The MRC do not recognise the figure to which the hon. Gentleman refers, but in 1991-92—the last financial year for which figures are available—the MRC's expenditure on projects relevant to aging and the elderly was £9·8 million.

This research refers to work on cognitive performance, hearing, dementia, osteoporosis, Parkinson's, nutrition, cardiovascular, stroke and cancer research. Additional work is also carried out on understanding the processes underlying aging; and on molecular mechanisms in the clonal deletion of auto-reactive T cells by programmed cell death. Because much of this research is interlinked, the financial breakdown of this research would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Office of Public Service and Science

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the total amount of expenditure on provision within the responsibility of the Office of Public Service and Science in (a) England, (b) Greater London and (c) the south-east, excluding Greater London, for each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93, estimated, distinguishing between current and capital expenditure, though excluding local authority credit approvals/capital allocations.

Mr. David Davis: I am able to provide the following information about the Department's expenditure on the administration of public service and science and on the science programme.

(i) Expenditure on the Administration of Public Service and Science

The major part of the Office of Public Service and Science's offices and staff is located in London and the south-east, but the Occupational Health Service, which has its headquarters in Edinburgh, has a small regional network, and the Government Centre for Information Systems has offices in Norwich.

Total expenditure by the Department and its predecessors on administration in the period 1982-83 to 1992-93 was as follows:

£ millions

Year	Current Expenditure	Capital Expenditure	Total
1982-83	53·0	5·6	58·6
1983-84	63·4	1·9	65·3
1984-85	76·1	3·4	79·5
1985-86	79·1	4·3	83·4
1986-87	75·5	8·7	84·2
1987-88	90·6	10·6	101·2
1988-89	98·0	9·6	107·6
1989-90	96·5	7·3	103·8
1990-91	104·3	11·0	115·3
1991-92	123·6	9·1	132·7
1992-93	134·0	11·0	145·0

(ii) Expenditure on the Science Programme

Information on capital and current expenditure from the science budget by the research councils, the Royal Society and the Royal Academy of Engineering is not available in the form requested prior to 1992-93.

The expenditure figures for England are as follows:

England

£ millions

	Current Expenditure	Capital Expenditure	Total
1982-83	n/a	n/a	n/a
1983-84	319·4	68·4	387·8

WALES

Rabies

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken at Welsh ports to prevent rabies entering Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: People who bring in unlicensed animals and those who allow their animals on deck in harbour will be committing an offence and may face imprisonment in addition to heavy fines. Local authorities have the chief role in enforcing these provisions, supported by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise officers, port health officers and the police.

Keen surveillance is maintained over vessels from abroad, both commercial shipping and small boats and yachts which are mainly privately owned. This surveillance is supported by the co-operation of harbour-masters, marina owners, yacht clubs and many other members of the public whose work or recreation is connected with ports or sailing.

All-weather noticeboards are provided for use at harbours, ports and marinas, both in the United Kingdom and on the continent. These state, in appropriate languages, that the landing of animals is prohibited, emphasise the danger from illegally landed animals and the penalties for contraventions. A great deal of importance is attached to maintaining general rabies awareness and the present publicity campaign is targeted at the small boat owner.

Rio Declaration

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he has taken to prepare an action plan to guide implementation of the Rio declaration.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are committed to making a report to the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development by the end of this year. The Welsh Office is closely involved in the compilation of this report, which will take full account of the Rio declaration.

Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the chairman of Welsh Water plc to discuss the fluoridation of drinking water supplies in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so at the present time.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it a requirement that NHS hospital trust annual reports should list the salaries of the chief executive and all board members.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: NHS trusts are required to provide information on the emoluments of their board members, excluding pension costs, as part of their annual accounts and this information must include the emoluments of the chairman, the highest-paid member and the chief executive —if not the highest-paid member. They are also required to provide similar information in their annual reports in order to conform with the provisions of the Companies Act 1985, as amended. The information provided in the annual report should be consistent with that provided in the annual accounts and, if there is any less detail, the annual report must make it clear that the full set of accounts is publicly available upon request.

Out-of-Town Developments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many out-of-town large commercial developments were initially refused planning permission by the local authority, but were granted permission on appeal to the Welsh Office since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Comprehensive information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost, but 11 major retail developments have been approved on appeal against refusal of permission since the end of 1979.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open Government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens' charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office sponsors 17 executive non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs. Details are available in "Public Bodies" and in the Department's 1993 annual report. The functions and responsibilities of each NDPB are specified in its founding legislation or charter. The Secretary of State is responsible and accountable to Parliament for the resources provided for NDPBs, and the general framework within which they are required to operate. For most NDPBs, the chief executive is designated as the accounting officer and, together with the departmental accounting officer, is liable to appear before the Public Accounts Committee to account for the use of public funds.

(a) and (d): I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 15 June Official Report, columns 544-45.

(b) The NDPBs in Wales subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are:

Sports Council for Wales
Wales Tourist Board
Development Board for Rural Wales
Cardiff Bay Development Corporation
Housing for Wales
Countryside Council for Wales
Agricultural Wages Committee

(c) Executive NDPBs in Wales are generally audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General: where the Comptroller and Auditor General is not himself responsible for auditing a particular body, he retains certain rights of inspection.

(e) All NDPBs in Wales have or are developing performance indicators for their own internal management and to enable the Department to monitor their performance.

(f) All NDPBs in Wales are expected to adopt the principles of the citizens charter in their dealings with the public.

Members of NDPBs in Wales are expected to declare any potential conflict of interest.

Welsh Office

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the Government's response to the first report of the Welsh Affairs Committee, Session 1992-93, House of Commons Paper 259, on the "Work of the Welsh Office".

Mr. Redwood: I am pleased to announce that the response to the Welsh Affairs Committee report on the work of the Welsh Office has been published today as Command Paper 2276. Copies are available in the Vote Office.

Mapping

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals to ensure that the whole of Wales is mapped on a scale of 1:2,500; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 5 July 1993]: No. The Ordnance Survey is responsible for the official surveying and topographic mapping of Great Britain. Following the advice of a review committee, the Government require Ordnance Survey to survey and map all conurbations at a scale of 1:1,250, all small towns and cultivated rural areas at a scale of 1:2,500 and all mountain and moorland areas at a scale of 1:10,000. This requirement covers Wales.

Housing Capital Receipts

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was held by local authorities in Wales, as at 31 March 1992, in respect of housing capital receipts reserved for debt redemption.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As at 31 March 1992, local authorities were required to set aside specified proportions of the capital receipts which they acquire for the repayment of debt, to meet payments on credit arrangements, such as finance leases, or in lieu of capital expenditure. Authorities are also required to make minimum provision from their revenue resources to meet credit liabilities. Such capital charges may be met in part by the interest gained on capital receipts, but the individual sources of such provision are not distinguished in the information collected centrally. In addition to the requirements for the application of capital receipts and revenue resources to meet credit liabilities, authorities may choose to apply the unspecified portions of their receipts which are available for new capital expenditure as well as revenue allocations to this end. At 31 March 1992, the outstanding housing loan debt for which provision would be required stood at £1,800,000,000. The scheduled amount of housing capital receipts assigned to meet credit liabilities stood at £180,000,000 at that date but, in addition, part of the £28,300,000 of unreserved housing receipts could also be applied to such use by authorities.

SCOTLAND

School Information

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about school information to be made available for parents under the parents charter.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Having carefully considered the responses made to the consultation paper "Better Information for Parents", my right hon. Friend is today laying regulations before Parliament which provide for the collection and publication of school information covering: attendance and truancy rates; examination results and awards; school leaver destinations; and school costs. A circular which explains in detail the provisions contained in the regulations is also being issued today.

We received more than 300 responses during the consultation period. I am very grateful to all those who responded for their helpful and constructive suggestions. Providing information to parents about the schools their children attend is a central element in the parents charter and something this Government consider to be of the utmost importance. As a result of our consultations, we have clarified and revised the earlier provisions in a number of respects. In particular, the regulations now require that:

school handbooks are to be issued by 15 December in each year;

regional and national average figures by category will include education authority schools and grant-aided schools but not special schools for which results are to be given separately;

attendance and absence rates for pupils in stage S6 need not distinguish between authorised and unauthorised absence; examination results for SCE are to be shown as percentages of of the number of pupils on each individual school's roll at the start of their S4 year—and a measure of the staying-on-rate to stage S5 is now also to be given; and awards for national certificates and other SCOTVEC awards are to be shown by stage.

We have also taken all possible steps to minimise the workload on schools which will result from the provision of this information. For example, calculations on examination results will be carried out as far as possible directly by the Scottish Office Education Department and discussions have already taken place between the Department, the Scottish Examination Board and the Scottish Vocational Education Council to this end. The basic information on school leaver destinations will also be collected by the careers service.

Councillors (Mileage Rates)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the methodology used to determine the rates of mileage expenses paid to councillors in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The motor mileage rates are based on the average price at the pump for unleaded petrol over a 12-month period as applied to the schedule of annual running costs produced by the Automobile Association which covers tyres, oil, servicing and repairs.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the current rates of mileage expenses paid to councillors in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The rates of mileage expenses were reviewed with effect from 1 January 1993. A similar annual uprating exercise will be carried out towards the end of this year.

Secondary School Reorganisation

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date he expects to publish the Scottish Office Education Department's responses to comments on the Howie committee's recommendations for upper secondary school reorganisation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Decisions have not yet been taken in response to comments on the Howie committee's recommendations for upper secondary reform. I am unable, therefore, to give the date of an announcement.

Coastal Pollution

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the current cleanliness, safety and freedom from pollution of beaches and coastal waters.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 July 1993]: The water quality survey of Scotland 1990 which my Department published in March 1992 assesses the cleanliness and freedom from pollution of Scottish coastal waters. The survey demonstrates that a high proportion of Scottish waters are of satisfactory quality. River purification boards monitor water quality at many beaches and I produce annually a report on monitoring of 23 bathing waters identified for the purposes of EC directive 76/160/EEC. That report is in the House of Commons Library and for 1992 showed that 15 beaches achieved the directive's water quality standards.

Individual local authorities take responsibility for the cleanliness and safety of beaches in their area. However, Keep Scotland Beautiful has assessed the standards achieved at some of the most popular beaches including the nine beaches in Scotland that successfully obtained a seaside award this year.

NHS Property Sales

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the companies and individuals who have purchased NHS property to the value of £250,000 or more over the past five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1993]: The information, for the period from 1 April 1988 to date, is set out in the table.

Refugees and Asylum Seekers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what central Government funds are available in Scotland for specific grants to aid the resettlement of refugees and asylum seekers.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1993]: My right hon. Friend does not have the power to pay specific grants for this purpose. If Scottish local authorities faced additional expenditure commitments as a result of resettling refugees and asylum seekers this would be taken into account, in consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, in the determination of the level of aggregate external finance.

Water Supplies

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average amount of water used daily per household in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 July 1993]: A recent study in Scotland indicated that the average domestic consumption for each household was 368 litres per day.

Public Places (Disabled Access)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve access for people with disabilities to museums, galleries, theatres, libraries and sports arenas.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 July 1993]: It is for the management of each organisation to consider how its buildings and, in the case of museums, galleries and libraries, its collections can be made accessible to disabled people. The Government have close links with a range of statutory, voluntary and private sector bodies which are active in encouraging such organisations to increase access for disabled members of the public.

The Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990 require access for disabled people to the ground floor of all buildings other than dwellings and buildings used for storage purposes. These provisions, which were first introduced in 1986, apply to all new buildings and to alterations and extensions to existing buildings. Proposed amendments to the current regulations were the subject of public consultation. They would require access for disabled people to the upper floors of all buildings except dwellings and storage buildings. These amendments should come into force in Scotland in the new year and would apply to all new buildings and to alterations and extensions to existing buildings.

As far as sports stadia are concerned, ground managements are equally responsible for ensuring adequate access. I particularly welcome the provisions for the disabled being made at those stadia currently being redeveloped in terms of Taylor report requirements.

Coastal Planning

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take to implement the Government's response—Cm 2011—to the Environment Committee's second report of 1991-92. "Coastal Zone Protection and Planning in Scotland"; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 July 1993]: The House of Commons Select Committee on the environment report on coastal zone protection and planning examined coastal issues as they relate to England and Wales only. In their response, the Government accepted that the issues raised have a relevance to the United Kingdom as a whole and should be addressed according to the circumstances in different parts of the United Kingdom.

The Scottish Office is considering how best to take forward the Government's proposals in relation to Scotland and as a first step has commissioned a review of Scottish coastal issues.

The Scottish Office is represented on the interdepartmental group which is responsible for the continued development of coastal policy on a United Kingdom—wide basis.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was given to Scottish further education colleges in 1992-93 to prepare them for incorporation; and what provision was made in the conditions of grant for bonuses to senior staff.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 July 1993]: Grants totalling £2·3 million were made to further education colleges in 1992-93 to meet costs associated with the incorporation process. It was for college councils to determine to what use the grants were put within their statutory powers as set out in the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with President Clinton the effects of the imposition of the United Nations sanctions on disease and infant mortality in Iraq.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is in close touch with President Clinton about policy towards Iraq. We and the United States agree that Security Council resolutions 706 and 712 provide the best scheme for financing the United Nation's humanitarian operations in Iraq. Iraq has refused to accept the scheme.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Royal Parks Agency

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what sums are being spent out of public funds by the Royal Parks Agency on the building and equiping of the agency's new stables for constabulary and working horses in Richmond and Hyde parks, on purchase of horses and equipment, on the police riding manège at Richmond and on maintaining public buildings in Richmond park.

Mr. Sproat: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Royal Parks agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given and I shall place a copy of his reply in the Library.

Letter from David Welch to Mr. Harry Greenway, dated 2 July 1993:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your Written Parliamentary Question below.

> What sums are being spent out of public funds by the Royal Parks Agency upon the building and equiping of the Agency's new stables for constabulary and working horses in Richmond and Hyde Parks, upon purchase of horses and equipment, upon the police riding manège at Richmond and upon maintaining public buildings in Richmond Park?

No new stables were built at Richmond Park. The existing derelict stables and yard were renovated and equipped at a cost of £63,242. New stables at Hyde Park were built and equipped at a cost of £38,342.

There have been 4 or 5 patrol horses for the last 40 years or so in Richmond Park, with the Metropolitan Police providing mounted officers at Hyde Park until 1 April 1993. There is now a total of 10 patrol and 2 shire horses in Hyde and Richmond Parks, the additional horses being purchased and equipped for £49,000.

The police riding manège at Richmond Park cost £15,000 and maintaining the public buildings (stables) in future is estimated at £3,000 per annum.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed by his Department to quasi autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which the former hon. Member represented;

(2) if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage does not currently hold the information requested centrally and this could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

National Lottery

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy, in evaluating tenders from bidders for a clause 5 national lottery licence, not to exclude consortia which include an organisation, whether from the United Kingdom or overseas, which is engaged in existing gambling activity.

Mr. Sproat: The responsibility for evaluating tenders and awarding the licence will lie with the director general of the national lottery.

TRANSPORT

Night Flights

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has reached conclusions following the consultations on night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: On 28 January this year I published proposals for night restrictions at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted. These followed a wide-ranging review of how we might best maintain the policy of continuing to protect local communities from excessive exposure to aircraft noise at night.

Our existing policy has brought very considerable benefits to local communities by controlling movements of most jet aircraft at night. At the same time industry has made great strides in phasing out older noisier aircraft. There has been a substantial reduction in the number of people affected by daytime aircraft noise above the recognised disturbance threshold. This trend will continue, and I have separately laid regulations before the House which will ensure that the noisier, chapter 2 jets will be phased out by 2002. These regulations are in line with international agreements which we have worked hard to deliver.

The central element of our consultation paper was a new system to maintain the protection offered to residents around Heathrow and Gatwick and extend similar protection to those around Stansted. Additional features were to move away from restricting numbers of movements to a system of quotas that would further encourage the use of quieter aircraft. Each aircraft type would be assigned a quota count (QC) for take-off or landing in line with certificated noise performance. The noisiest aircraft (QC8 and QC16) would not be allowed to be scheduled at night. We also proposed that there should be a QC0 category for all aircraft with certificated noise levels less than 90 EPNdB to provide a further incentive to airlines to accelerate changes in their fleets and scheduling in favour of the quietest aircraft. Our proposals also include harmonisation of the night restrictions period and other measures to make the system fairer all round.

Responses to the consultation have clearly demonstrated the importance local people attach to night restrictions. At the same time, it is clear that they have benefited from the introduction of quieter aircraft. Industry respondents for their part broadly accepted much of what was proposed although they argued that the threshold for QC0 could have been set higher. Some airlines also stressed the need for modest growth in quota to meet anticipated increases in demand over the next five years. However, leaving the movement of QC0 aircraft unrestricted raised concerns among local people that there could in theory be a major and uncheckable expansion in night flights.

I have concluded that local concerns would best be met by extending the quota system with a new QC½ band to cover larger aircraft below 90 EPNdB. Although the aviation industry will lose some of the benefits of the previous QC0 proposal, they will still be able to use the flexibility of the quota system in scheduling their movements. At the same time local people will have the assurance that the quota will cover all relevant aircraft movements, with a reduction in the types that are currently exempt. This provides an additional measure of protection and meets local concerns about the perceived threat of uncontrolled growth.

I have given careful consideration to whether I should increase the proposed quotas in order to accommodate the introduction of the QC½ category. On balance I concluded that the relatively small number of such movements at Heathrow could be accommodated within my previous proposal but that enhancement of the quotas would be appropriate at Gatwick and Stansted, because of the larger number of QC½ movements particularly at the latter where there is a significant number of mail and empty positioning flights.

I have put a full statement on the new quotas in the House Library.

I pay particular tribute to the commitment of BAA plc in establishing noise and track-keeping systems at the three airports. These systems will complement our new arrangements providing further monitoring—further protection for local people. They will also provide a comprehensive basis for the reviews that I am asking the aircraft noise monitoring advisory committee (ANMAC) to carry out on current noise limits by night and day and the aircraft noise classification system. The noise and track-keeping systems also give industry a ready means to check on its own performance.

In my decisions I have sought to maintain the essential balance between the aviation industry and local people. The aviation industry makes an important contribution to the economy and it is essential to preserve employment and business opportunities not only for the 100,000 people who work in the industry but also for the wider contribution it makes to the local and national economy. It will be tough on industry and is a challenge to them to maintain progress at introducing quieter aircraft. It is just as important to ensure that local people should be able to enjoy a good night's sleep.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage BR and the relevant private sector interests to seek help from the European investment bank for the upgrading of the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: It is not normally appropriate for BR to borrow from the European investment bank (EIB), as it can borrow more cheaply from the Government.

I have recently announced a scoping study to examine how the private sector can be involved in upgrading the west coast main line. The source of finance for the private sector is a matter for any eventual private sector partner in the upgrading project. But the benefits of EIB funding are widely appreciated, and the WCML would almost certainly be an eligible project.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Department of Transport is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens' charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Norris: Details of the four executive non-departmental public bodies in which the Department of Transport has an interest are listed in "Public Bodies 1992", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The functions and responsibilities of the three General Lighthouse Authorities are specified in their founding legislation. My right hon. Friend is responsible for the operation of the General Lighthouse Fund which funds the authorities. The Traffic Director for London is appointed by my right hon. Friend and is responsible to him. The answers to the other points raised are:

(a) None of the bodies is subject to surcharge. (The concept of surcharge as used in the Local Government Finance Act 1982 applies only to local authorities.)

(b) The bodies subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner are:

Trinity House
Northern Lighthouse Board
Traffic Director for London

(c) Information on audit arrangements is set out in Public Bodies 1992.

(d) No. The provisions of the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985 apply only to those local authorities specified in the Act.

(e) Performance indicators have been set for the Traffic Director for London and a system of indicators for the lighthouse authorities is under discussion.

(f) All bodies are being encouraged to follow the principles of the Citizen's Charter.

No requirements regarding declarations of interest have been imposed by my right hon. Friend on members of the three lighthouse authorities, the majority of whom he does not appoint. The Traffic Director for London does not have a board but he is required by the terms of his appointment to be alert to the possibility of any conflicts of interest and to consult my right hon. Friend in any case of doubt.

South Rock Light

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether fishing boats in Northern Ireland are required to pay light dues to the Commissioner of Irish Lights; who operates the South Rock light on the most easterly point of Ireland; what navigation aids the South Rock light provides to fishing boats sailing to Portavogie harbour; and if he will make a statement about the future of the South Rock light.

Mr. Norris: The Commissioners of Irish Lights are funded from the General Lighthouse Fund established by Section 1 of the Merchant Shipping (Mercantile Marine Fund) Act 1898. The fund's principal income is from light dues levied on shipping using ports in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. Fishing vessels using United Kingdom ports are liable for light dues. In the Republic of Ireland light dues are determined by the Irish Government, who have not extended light dues to fishing vessels using ports in the Republic. The South Rock lightfloat is operated by the Commissioners of Irish Lights. The lightfloat is moored 3·6 miles from Portavogie and is used by all craft for the purposes of marking landfalls, marking coastal passages and as a turning mark for vessels navigating on the north-east coast of Ireland. It clearly marks the dangerous waters to the west and is important for vessels entering or leaving Portavogie. There are no plans to make any changes to the South Rock lightfloat.

Rail Services (Clapham to Willesden)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached from his study concerning the practicality of introducing a frequent urban passenger service on the newly electrified railway line between Clapham and Willesden junctions; what would be the estimated cost of re-establishing the intermediate stations at (a) Wormwood Scrubs, (b) Shepherds Bush, (c) West Brompton, (d) Kings Road, Chelsea and (e) York Road, Battersea.

Mr. Norris: The study's main conclusions were that the West London line provides the opportunity to introduce a new inner London rail service at relatively low capital cost, and that the project might be suitable for a joint venture initiative. Analysis of potential usage was inevitably subject to a wide margin of error, but suggested that, while not justified in financial terms, the project's estimated benefits/costs ratio would be about 1·8, excluding station investment. Detailed estimates of costs for individual stations were not made.

Local Authority Transport Companies

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from employees of local authority public transport companies about the security and comparability of their pension arrangements should their companies pass into private sector ownership.

Mr. Freeman: I have received representations from PTA company employees, the TGWU and ALBUM (the Association of Local Authority Bus Undertaking Managers). I know that this is an important issue and I will take account of the proposals in respect of pensions in each case at the time consent to the sale arrangements is sought under section 75 of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to allow those local authorities which currently do not have an arrangement with his Department to enable their public transport company employees to remain in the local government superannuation scheme after transfer to the private sector to make such an arrangement.

Mr. Freeman: The guidelines on future membership of public pension schemes, such as the LGSS, were set out in a policy statement of July 1991. I am sending a copy to the hon. Member. We have no plans to extend the arrangements referred to.

Channel Tunnel (Rail Freight)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, columns 403-4, what is the Government's policy on the desirability of early construction of rail freight terminals to take advantage of the opening of the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: Our authorisation of BR investment exceeding £400 million in preparation for channel tunnel freight services is indicative of the importance we attach to this new market. Terminal facilities are under development and BR expects to be able to meet forecast demand when the tunnel opens.

Roll on/Roll off Vessels

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the outcome of recent negotiations within the International Maritime Organisation on the safety of life at sea convention in regard to the risks posed by roll on/roll off ships and ferries; and what was the United Kingdom's position on the policy matters discussed.

Mr. Norris: Despite some support, the United Kingdom's proposal to amend the convention that would have applied the SOLAS 90 standard to existing ferries within a reasonable timescale did not receive the requisite number of votes at the Maritime Safety Committee. The United Kingdom's position was to obtain similar safety standard for all ferries. This continued to be our objective at the meeting held recently with our European neighbours, which had a more positive outcome.

Motorways (Charges)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans currently exist to put tolls on the motorway network.

Mr. Key: Draft orders were published last month for the construction of the Birmingham northern relief road. This will be this country's first privately built, operated and tolled overland motorway. The Green Paper, "Paying for Better Motorways", was published on 26 May in order to stimulate a public debate on the principle of introducing direct charging on the existing motorway network in Great Britain.

Noise and Pollution

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce measures to reduce the noise and pollution resulting from projected levels of road traffic.

Mr. Key: Increasingly tight noise standards have been introduced for all types of vehicle. Since 1980 the noise from the heaviest lorries has been virtually halved. And tighter limits are now being negotiated in the European Community. These new standards will include for the first time standards for tyre noise.

The annual MOT and HGV and PSV tests include an inspection of the exhaust system. Vehicles can also be subjected to roadside checks. We hope to increase the level of these checks by collaboration between police, DoT inspectors and local authority environmental health officers.

We assess the impact of noise on residential property among other factors which influence the alignment of new roads. And the spread of noise is minimised by the use of cuttings, earth mounds and noise barriers. Quieter road surfaces are being developed.

Compensation is offered to householders where property values are diminished due to new road schemes. We are conducting research on whether the level at which this compensation is triggered is the right one.

Tighter controls on the amounts of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and the oxides of nitrogen which can be emitted by petrol and diesel engined cars have been agreed in the European Community. These mean that new petrol-engined cars are now fitted with catalytic converters, reducing by about 75 per cent. emissions of the pollutants mentioned above.

A further directive has just been adopted which will bring emissions from light duty goods vehicles into line with those for passenger cars. It will apply to light vans first registered on or after 1 October 1994. The EC Council of Ministers is now discussing a draft directive for stricter limits on emissions from cars leading up to the year 2000.

In 1991, the Council agreed new tighter emission standards for diesel engined lorries and buses, to be implemented in two stages. From 1 October 1993, new vehicles will have to meet a substantially tighter limit on NOx emissions. There is also to be a limit for the first time on particulate emissions. From 1 October 1996 the NOx limit will be reduced to about half its present value, and the particulate limit will have a level of stringency similar to that to be applied in the United States from 1994. Limits for the year 2000 will soon be discussed within the EC.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which system of motorway charging he proposes to introduce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Green Paper "Paying for Better Motorways" is a consultation document. The Government have taken decisions neither on the principle of introducing direct charging on existing motorways nor on the method of doing so, other than to rule out conventional tolling with toll plazas and barriers.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost of introducing motorway tolls; what consideration he has given to ways of meeting these costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Green Paper, "Paying for Better Motorways" (Cm 2200) describes a number of possible systems of direct charging. Their costs of introduction would vary and would be influenced by the detailed design chosen. It is not possible at this stage to estimate reliably the cost of introducing motorway charges.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the amount of money which could be raised by introducing tolls on the motorway network.

Mr. Key: We estimate that an electronic toll of around 1½p per mile for cars and light goods vehicles and an average of around 4½p per mile for other vehicles would generate revenue of some £700 million a year. A permit priced at, say, £50 a year for cars up and to £500 a year for the heaviest goods vehicles would raise some £500 million a year.

Traffic Calming

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many members of his staff are employed currently (a) full-time and (b) part-time solely to promote traffic calming (i) in Marsham street and (ii) in each of his Department's regional offices.

Mr. Key: Traffic calming is a very important area of work in the Department because of the significant safety and environmental benefits it can bring. A substantial amount of effort is devoted to carrying out research and practical studies and to developing regulations, guidance and advice to help local authorities implement successful and cost-effective schemes on their roads. No staff spend all their time on this work, as it overlaps with the wider subjects of traffic management and road safety.

Quangos (Appointments)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment and the party which the former hon. Member represented;

(2) if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Norris: Detailed information on past and present appointees to non-departmental public bodies—formerly known as quasi autonomous non-governmental organisations—is not held in the Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, from such limited information as is available on present members of NDPBs, there is no evidence that any individual falls within the categories listed at (a), (b) or (c). As regards (d), it is known that two serving members of the Disabled Persons Advisory Committee have been party candidates for Parliament. These are Sir John Hannam, MP and a former Labour Member of Parliament, Mr. Lewis Carter-Jones. Both were re-appointed as members of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee in December 1992 for a three year period to December 1995. Committee members are not paid a salary, but the Department meets their travel and subsistence costs.

Rail Users' Consultative Committees

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often the franchising director will be required to attend the rail users' consultative committees hearings to answer questions.

Mr. Freeman: We have made it clear that the franchising director will be expected to liaise with the rail users' consultative committees and we will be covering this in the Secretary of State's published objectives for him. I expect that the franchising director will attend meetings of both the central and regional committees from time to time as part of this liaison.

ENVIRONMENT

Dangerous Activities (Convention)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will sign the Council of Europe convention on civil liability for damage resulting from activities dangerous to the environment.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have no plans to do so.

Carbon

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the cost to the economy of the measures announced to date for achieving a saving of 10 million tonnes of carbon per annum.

Mr. Yeo: Most of the measures announced to date as part of the United Kingdom's CO_2 programme are aimed at improving the efficiency of energy use in the economy, with a net benefit to the economy.

Savings are also expected to be achieved through an increase in the objective for renewable energy. This is part of the Government's continuing strategy to promote the development of new sources of energy to the point at which they become economic and can compete in the market place.

Drinking Water

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 to impose a maximum permitted concentration of cryptosporidium oocyst contamination in drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 already require that for water supplies to be wholesome they must not contain any organism at a concentration which is detrimental to public health.

Waterways Ombudsman

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce the new ombudsman to deal with issues in relation to the British waterways network.

Mr. Yeo: This is principally a matter for the chairman of the British Waterways Board, but I understand that British Waterways hopes to make an announcement within the next month.

Peatlands

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what safeguard he has proposed for the preservation of lowland peatlands.

Mr. Yeo: A working group on peat extraction is preparing advice for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The Government's strategy for peatlands will be announced after receiving their advice and considering all the relevant information. Meanwhile, the future of peatlands has been secured by: their notification as sites of special scientific interest; purchase; the arrangements between English Nature and Fison's and the co-operation of the members of the Peat Producers Association, whose members have agreed not to make any planning applications to work existing or proposed peatlands SSSIs without the prior agreement of the appropriate nature conservation agency.

Coastal Policy

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the purpose of the inter-departmental group on coastal policy; what issues it will consider; when its formation was announced; when it has met; and if he will list the names of those persons present on each occasion and the Departments they represent.

Mr. Yeo: The inter-departmental group on coastal policy was formed in 1991, prior to the start of the inquiry into coastal zone protection and planning undertaken by the Environment Select Committee. It is composed of officials from all relevant Government departments including Treasury, DoT, DTI MAFF, MoD, DNH, Home Office, Scottish, Welsh, Northern Ireland, Crown Estate and other representatives. Its existence was announced in the Government's response to the inquiry in July 1992.

Key issues being considered by the group include the control of development below the low water mark, coastal management planning and links to implementation of the EC habitats directive.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to publish minutes of the meetings of the interdepartmental group on coastal policy; what recommendations have been made; and what response he has issued following the meetings of the group.

Mr. Yeo: The results of the work of the inter-departmental group on coastal policy will be published in discussion papers later this summer. There are no plans to publish minutes of the meetings of this group.

Waste Management

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) of 29 April, Official Report, column 470, on the waste management licensing timetable, what representations he has received about a new timetable.

Mr. Yeo: I have received a joint representation on behalf of the Institute of Wastes Management, the National Association of Waste Disposal Contractors, and the local authority associations concerned with waste regulation. I shall meet them on 15 July to discuss the matter. I have also had correspondence from a number of individual waste regulation authorities; and I have met representatives of UK Waste Management Ltd.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider proposed waste management licensing to avoid sites accepting very small quantities of hazardous waste and civic amenity sites having to pay higher rates.

Mr. Yeo: The charging scheme's financial objective is to ensure full recovery of waste regulation authorities' relevant costs on the inspection and monitoring of licensed sites. The Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 define as "special" waste which is so dangerous or difficult to treat, keep or dispose of that special provision is required for dealing with it. The higher rates of subsistence charge proposed for sites authorised by their licence to accept special waste were intended to reflect the higher level of inspection and monitoring required of such sites. As such, they would be necessary to ensure fulfilment of the scheme's financial objective. In response to consultation on the charging scheme, we have received a number of representations about the treatment or keeping of certain special wastes destined for recovery, notably the contents of waste car batteries. We shall consider these representations before making the final scheme.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will implement the proposed new legislation for waste management licensing.

Mr. Yeo: As the then Minister for the Environment and Countryside announced on 29 April at column 470, the introduction of waste management licensing has had to be postponed pending further consideration of the impact of European Community measures dealing with waste management. On 18 May at column 101, the then Minister gave further details of the particular technical problems we need to solve. We are working to solve these problems as quickly as possible. As soon as I am in a position to give a revised date for the implementation of licensing, I shall do so.

Limehouse Link Road

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of the costs of the funfair which formed part of the Limehouse link road celebrations on 16 May including any rent waived; how much revenue was raised from funfair ride charges; and how much was raised for the community fund by (a) the funfair and (b) the sponsored walk through the Limehouse link tunnel.

Sir George Young: The London Docklands development corporation gave free use of a site for the funfair. The Isle of Dogs community trust was responsible for the sponsored walk and I have no information about the money raised. The costs of, and revenue earned by, the funfair are matters for its operator, as is any contribution made to the community fund.

Waste Framework Directive

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the European Councils waste framework directive 91/156/EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The EC framework directive on waste (91/156/EEC) came into force on 1 April this year. Much of it is already implemented in the United Kingdom through the Control of Pollution Act 1974, the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989, and those parts of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 which have already been brought into operation. The Government are considering what further measures are needed to implement the remaining provisions of the directive. Some of these will be included in the proposed regulations to bring into force the new waste management licensing provisions in part II of the Environmental Protection Act.

Aggregates

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the Government are taking to actively increase the use of recycled and waste materials as aggregates.

Mr. Baldry: The Government are committed to making greater use of waste and recycled materials in construction. An extensive research programme is in hand to support this. Research has identified the availability of these materials and on how to increase usage. A current project is examining steps to encourage greater recycling of demolition materials. We are also participating in an EC priority waste streams project on recycling building and demolition wastes. The revised Minerals Planning Guidance Note 6 on aggregates, which is currently in draft, will also set out policies to increase the use of recycled and waste materials. Final guidance is expected later this year.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department takes to ensure enforcement of section 33(1)(c) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 in relation to the disposal of waste ozone-depleting substances by releasing them to the atmosphere.

Mr. Yeo: The disposal of waste ozone-depleting substances by releasing them to the atmosphere is an offence under section 33(1)(c) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Enforcement of this section is principally a matter for waste regulation authorities. Further guidance on the effect of section 33 will be issued when section 33 is brought into force in its entirety.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions and convictions there have been so far under section 33(1)(c) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 in relation to the disposal of waste ozone-depleting substances by releasing them to the atmosphere.

Mr. Yeo: Information on the substances involved in particular cases is not held centrally.

London Docklands (Exhibition Centre)

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account was taken in the decision to develop a new exhibition centre in London docklands of the effect on other major exhibition centres within 150 miles of London.

Sir George Young: The London Docklands development corporation will wish to decide whether to continue its promotion of a new exhibition centre in the light of a market-testing exercise now being undertaken.

Air Pollution

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to expand the air pollution detection network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My Department will be issuing a consultation document in the summer on the extension of national air quality monitoring by the further integration of local authority and central Government funded monitoring.

Construction Industry

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to enhance his Department's sponsorship of the construction industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Following an initiative taken by my predecessor, a review of my Department's sponsorship function of the construction industry has been completed. The review looked at the current strengths and achievements of the Department's construction policy directorate and how these could be developed to meet the present and future needs of the industry. I will announce the conclusions of the review on 7 July and copies of the final report will be available in the Libraries of the House from 11 am on that day.

Forestry

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he took of purchasing policies in the United Kingdom regarding the specification of certain species of timber on environmental grounds when he signed the "United Nations Principles on Forestry" at the Earth summit in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 1 July 1993]: Purchasing policy was not addressed specifically in the discussions on the principles on forestry, the main objective of which is to ensure that the world's forests are managed sustainably. Nevertheless, we believe that it is important that consumers should be able to distinguish between timber from sustainable and unsustainable sources. We are therefore supporting the development of standards for forest management and timber labelling schemes.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in selling the Building Management Businesses.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his answer, 24 June 1993, col. 247]: I am pleased to be able to announce the exchange of contracts for the sale of the PSA building management business BM Scotland. The business has been sold to Serco.

This sale will benefit taxpayers, staff and customers. The next step is for staff to choose individually whether to transfer to the privatised business. The future of the business now lies in the private sector and I hope many staff will choose to transfer with it. Completion of the sale is expected at the end of August.

Serco will pay the Government £3·5 million for the business. The Government will, in addition, meet the costs of redundancies, should they be necessary, up to an agreed figure in the first five years following completion of the sale. The redundancy entitlement of transferring staff will be guaranteed by the Government for five years after the sale. Further details cannot be released until all the sales have been completed.

Serco is a leading company in the facilities management field. I am confident that the combination of its commercial skills with the strengths of the BM Scotland work force will give the business a sound future in the private sector.

I hope to make further announcements soon about the sales of the other two BM businesses.

Buckingham Palace

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the number of additional Royal Parks Constabulary police officers that will have to be deployed and the number of officers that will have to be redeployed consequent upon the opening of Buckingham palace to the public; and what assessment he has made of the cost implications.

Mr. Sproat: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given and I shall place a copy of his reply in the Library.

Letter from Mr. D. Welch to Andrew Mackinlay, dated 30 June 1993:

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for National Heritage has asked me to reply to your Written Parliamentary Question asking:

> what assessment has been made of the number of additional Royal Parks Constabulary police officers that will have to be deployed and the number of officers that will have to be redeployed consequent upon the opening of Buckingham Palace to the public; and what assessment he has made of the cost implications.

The Royal Parks have been in close contact with Buckingham Palace about their arrangements for opening to the public. The Royal Parks Constabulary already police St. James's Park and we do not envisage that any additional manpower will be required.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Haiti

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation in Haiti.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support the efforts of the Organisation of American States and the United Nations to bring about a political settlement. We supported the adoption of UN Security Council resolution 841 on 16 June and are implementing legislation to give it effect in the United Kingdom and dependent terrorities. We welcome the convening of talks between President Aristide and the coup leaders and hope they may lead to a lasting settlement.

Nepal

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent disturbances in Nepal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following controversy following the death in a road accident of Madam Bhandari, the secretary general of the Unified Marxist Leninist Party, protest action by this party and other left-wing factions led to violent disturbances in Kathmandu and the surrounding area on 25 June. These became increasingly serious, and resulted in an official death toll of 10 in the following few days. The situation is now relatively calm.

We regret the violence and loss of life. We hope that all parties involved will now resolve any differences peacefully and in the spirit of the parliamentary traditions Nepal has adopted.

Lord Owen

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the basis on which the salary and allowances of Lord Owen as a peace envoy relating to former Yugoslavia is fixed and on the United Kingdom's contribution.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Lord Owen's remuneration and other terms of service are the responsibility of the presidency of the European Community—currently Belgium—and the international conference on the former Yugoslavia—ICFY.

The United Kingdom contributes 7·19 per cent. to the total ICFY budget, which includes Lord Owen's remuneration and all other costs directly related to the Conference. The United Kingdom's contribution for the period 1 March to 31 August 1993 was $194,850.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to oppose the lifting of the arms embargo against any participants in the Bosnian civil war until an effective and lasting settlement to the crisis is in place and operating.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The arms embargo was imposed on the former Yugoslavia under United Nations Security Council resolution 713 on 25 September 1991, and is applied equally to all republics. There has been considerable recent debate in international fora on the lifting of the arms embargo for the Bosnian Muslims. We have repeatedly made it clear that this option is not ruled out, but we believe that in present circumstances this would do nothing to assist the achievement of a peace settlement—indeed it could make it less likely and threaten the vital humanitarian relief efforts.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds exist from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Serbia to pay monthly sums to Serbian families who agree to accommodate refugees and displaced persons; what is the total of such monthly payments; what guarantees have been given to UNHCR about how long such funds will be available; and what comparable data he has on funds available on a similar basis in (a) Croatia, (b) Slovenia and (c) Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UNHCR is paying cash grants to host families in Croatia, Slovenia and Macedonia. The UNHCR's 1993 programme envisages payments of US$ 27 million, US$ 5,055,000 and US$ 2,115,600 respectively. Full implementation of the programme will depend on the availability of funds: so far only a small proportion of the sums envisaged has been paid. The cash grant scheme does not operate in Serbia or Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports his Department has received of activities in the village of Gladovici in Bosnia-Herzegovina during the past 12 months; and if he will list the source of such reports and the action which has been taken as a result.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have seen a report from the UNPROFOR press office in Zagreb concerning the bombing of Gladovici and Osatica on 13 March. There is evidence to suggest that the aircraft were operated by the Bosnian Serbs. Since the adoption of United Nations Security Council resolution 816 enforcing the no-fly zone over Bosnia, there have been no reports of further combat raids.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information Her Majesty's Government have received to confirm that no arms have been included in supplies to Gorazde distributed from NATO transport planes; if Her Majesty's Government have been apprised of the loading and inspection procedure for such missions; and what complaints have been made regarding supplies to Gorazde.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are established loading and inspection procedures for NATO aircraft leaving Rheinmain in Germany on humanitarian air drop missions. Monitors from all three sides of the Bosnian conflict are present when the aircraft are being loaded to check that they contain only aid supplies. We are aware of allegations to suggest that ammunition has been transported, but have seen no evidence to substantiate this.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs from what source Her Majesty's Government first received information regarding the bombing of Gladovici on 13 March; on what information a view was taken as to where the aircraft involved took off and landed; what further information has since come to light; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information concerning the bombing of Gladovici was first received from United Nations personnel, and published in an UNPROFOR press release of 16 March 1993. The aircraft were observed flying across the River Drina into Serbia, which would be consistent with the use of Serbian air space to lose altitude prior to landing. No further information has since come to light.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times Her Majesty's Government or her representatives have met President Slobodan Milosevic since January 1991; and what was the purpose of each meeting.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our representatives have met President Milosevic and his staff on numerous occasions since January 1991, most recently on 18 June 1993 when Her Majesty's chargé d'affaires in Belgrade delivered a letter from the Prime Minister to President Milosevic expressing his concern at the arrest and detention of opposition leader Mr. Draskovic, and requesting his immediate release. The main purpose of our representations has been to press President Milosevic to co-operate fully with the efforts of the international community to achieve lasting and equitable settlements to the conflicts of the former Yugoslavia, particularly in Bosnia, and in the Krajina and Kosovo, based on the principles established by the London conference.

Tibet

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions Her Majesty's Government have taken to secure the release and safety of those arrested in the recent demonstrations in Lhasa.

Mr. Goodlad: We and our EC partners have urged the Chinese authorities at a high level in Peking to release all those detained in Lhasa and to allow EC diplomats in Peking early access to them meanwhile. The EC has also issued a public statement reiterating these points. We continue to press the Chinese authorities to guarantee full respect for human rights throughout China, including Tibet, in keeping with their obligations under the United Nations charter.

Entry Clearance Applications (Sana'a)

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the level of consular staff in Sana'a to cope with applications for entry clearance to the United Kingdom from Sana'a and Djibouti.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Entry clearance staffing in posts overseas, including Sana'a is determined by the volume and nature of the demand. The lack of resident career representation in Djibouti inevitably imposes constraints on the service available there. If the hon. Member is aware of any particular problems, I would be glad to have them looked into.

Tunisia

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the torture and imprisonment of women in Tunisia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have raised human rights issues on several occasions with the Tunisian Government who are well aware of our concerns.

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government and the EC towards Burma (i) overall and (ii) in respect of trade sanctions and arms embargoes.

Mr. Goodlad: We and our Community partners have closely co-ordinated policies on Burma. We take every opportunity, bilaterally and as the Community, to urge the Burmese authorities to respect their human rights obligations and the results of the democratic elections in May 1990.

There has been an EC embargo on arms sales to Burma since July 1991. We have also severed defence links. Wider trade sanctions against Burma do not command the necessary international support.

British Council

Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of operations by the British Council in the Nordic countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The council's long-standing operations in Sweden, Norway, Finland and Denmark have helped to creat the current extensive network of bilateral contacts.

Recently, in order to release resources—human and financial—the council has reduced its staffing and overheads in the area while maintaining programmes as far as possible.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open Government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Goodlad: The non-departmental public bodies—(NDPBs)—sponsored by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are responsible to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

The answers to points (a) to (f) are as follows:

(a) No.

(b) The British Council.

(c) Yes, where the non-departmental public bodies has a budget.

(d) Not applicable.

(e) Yes. Financial management and polices of non-departmental public bodies are subject to review every five years.

(f) All non-departmental public bodies are subject to the citizen's charter. Chairpersons and members of boards are required to declare an interest.

The Crown Agents and Commonwealth Development Corporation are public corporations of a trading nature, rather than executive non-departmental public bodies. Their classification in the publication "Public Bodies" will be corrected in the 1993 edition.

Colombia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the EC report on the human rights situation in Colombia.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have seen no such report.

Hong Kong

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what legislation and which agency covers the prudential annual supervision of (a) company and (b) bank accounts in the case of companies and banks registered in Hong Kong; and in what form and to which representative assembly such agencies report.

Mr. Goodlad: Requirements on the incorporation, management and winding up of companies are set out in the companies ordinance, administered by the Registrar of Companies. The banking supervision department of the Hong Kong Monetary Authority is responsible for the prudential supervision of banks in Hong Kong in accordance with the provisions of the banking ordinance. Members of Hong Kong's Legislative Council may ask questions and conduct investigations on any matter of concern to them in respect of regulation of banks or companies.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what agency is responsible for the supervision of the tax affairs of (a) residents of Hong Kong, (b) companies registered in Hong Kong and (c) banks registered in Hong Kong; and in what form and to which representative assembly such agencies report.

Mr. Goodlad: The Inland Revenue Department of the Hong Kong Government is responsible for the collection of tax on Hong Kong residents, and on companies and banks registered in Hong Kong. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue reports to the Financial Secretary who is a member of Hong Kong's Legislative Council.

North Korea

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on North Korea's recent suspension of its intention to withdraw from the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Hurd: We welcome this announcement and the news that the North Korean and United States Governments have agreed to continue their discussions. We hope that these will lead to a permanent solution of the problem of North Korea's nuclear intentions. We urge North Korea to folow this positive step by reaffirming its commitment to the non-proliferation treaty and complying fully with its safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

We also call on North Korea to reaffirm its commitment to the north/south bilateral nuclear agreement with the Republic of Korea.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Anti-abortionists

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what preparations he is making to control the entry into the United Kingdom and the activities in the United Kingdom of American anti-abortionists visiting the United Kingdom in September and to protect clinical staff and women seeking legal abortions from intimidation and harassment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Citizens of the United States of America are subject to immigration control and must qualify to enter under the terms of the immigration rules. My right hon. and learned Friend may direct exclusion if a person's presence would not be conducive to the public good. Considerations will be given to any evidence which may justify the exclusion of individuals identified as members of the group intending to visit the United Kingdom in September.

Enforcement of the Public Order Act 1986 as it relates to behaviour which may cause harassment or fear of violence is the responsibility of chief officers of police.

Firearms

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992, Official Report, columns 411-14, if he will update the table for homicides involving shotguns in domestic incidents.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is given in the table.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Wolds prison severe incident of 28 and 29 June was reported to him; and what and who was involved in this incident.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about an incident at Wolds remand prison on 28 and 29 June.

The incident occurred late on 28 June. The Controller at Wolds was informed at home in the early hours of 29 June, and she in turn informed the appropriate official at Prison Service Headquarters. A report on the incident was faxed to the offices of the Home Secretary and the Minister of State soon after the start of business that morning.

Police are investigating the incident, in which two prisoners allegedly assaulted three Group 4 staff and one prisoner started a fire within a unit which resulted in smoke and water damage.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Howard: The executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Home Office are as follows:

Alcohol Education and Research Council*
Commission for Racial Equality
Community Development Foundation*
Fire Service Examination Board
Fire Service Research and Training Trust*
Gaming Board
Horserace Betting Levy Board
Horserace Totalisator Board
Office of the Data Protection Registrar
Police Complaints Authority
Police Promotion Examinations Board

* Indicates a charity

In addition, the Home Office sponsors the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, which performs some executive functions.

The readily available information on these bodies is as follows:—

Responsibility

Chairmen and members are appointed by the Home Secretary and are ultimately responsible through him to Parliament.

Surcharge

NDPB members are not subject to 'surcharge'. However, in the case of those NDPBs which are charities Trustees have potential financial liabilities under the Charities Act 1992.

Investigation by Parliamentary Commissioner

The Commission for Racial Equality, the Horserace Betting Levy Board and the Office of the Data Protection Registrar are listed in schedule 2 to the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, as amended, as among those bodies subject to investigation by the PCA.

Scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office

The Audit Commission has responsibility only for local government. The following bodies are subject to NAO scrutiny either by statute or by agreement:

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board
Community Development Foundation
Commission for Racial Equality
Gaming Board
Office of the Data Protection Registrar
Police Complaints Authority

Statutory provisions for open Government which apply to local authorities

NDPBs are subject to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984. They are not subject to legislation which specifically applies to local authorities.

Performance Indicators

NDPBs are encouraged, wherever appropriate, to develop performance indicators and associated targets and to publish these.

Citizens Charter

The Home Office is encouraging those NDPBs which offer a service to the public to adopt the principles set out in the citizens charter and to publicise how these are being reflected in their working arrangements.

Declaration of Interests

There are no statutory requirements for members or chairpersons to declare an interest. Nevertheless, in those bodies where a potential conflict of interest might arise, arrangements have been made to ensure propriety.

Pet Animals

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms Quin) of 19 November 1992, Official Report, column 295, if he has now completed consideration of the legislative changes required to enable the United Kingdom to be a party to the Council of Europe convention on pet animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Consideration of the legislative changes required in order to comply with the convention is continuing.

Criminal Justice

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the report of the Royal Commission on criminal justice.

Mr. Howard: The Government welcome the royal commission's wide-ranging report which was published today. I and my right hon. and learned Friends, the Lord Chancellor and the Attorney-General, are grateful to Viscount Runciman and his colleagues for their endeavours, and I congratulate them on completing their work on time.

The report deals with difficult questions of great long-term importance, and it will no doubt provoke much public debate and discussion. The Government do not propose that there should now be a formal consultation period, but we will welcome any early observations on the report's proposals, before reaching our own conclusions.

Although the royal commission's terms of reference extended only England and Wales, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has indicated his intention to consider the implications of the report for the criminal justice system of Scotland. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to say that, in consultation with the Lord Chancellor and the Attorney-General, he similarly wishes to consider the implications of the report in the context of Northern Ireland.

Sheehy Inquiry

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department hwo many free copies of the report of the Sheehy inquiry have been made available to the police federations of England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Two each.

Triads

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to make membership of triad organisations illegal.

Mr. Maclean: None. It is not an offence in this country to belong to any association, with the exception of certain proscribed terrorist organisations. If members of triads or other organisations are individually guilty of specific offences or of conspiracy, the police and the courts can take action against them in the same way as against anyone else.

Police Forces (Pay)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will appoint a committee of inquiry into the structure, pay and conditions of service of the non-Home Office police forces as a complement to the Sheehy report, on the same basis as the Wright report 1979, Cmnd. 7623.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This would be a matter for the Secretaries of State with responsibility for such police forces.

EDUCATION

Student Awards

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what saving there would have been in the latest year for which information is available if all students in receipt of a mandatory award had been paid at the level for living at the parental home.

Mr. Boswell: In 1991-92, the latest year for which provisional data are available, the effect of restricting all mandatory award holders to the existing maintenance grant rate for living at the parental home would—taken in isolation—have resulted in savings of some £270 million in England and Wales.

Grant-maintained Schools Centre Ltd.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will place in the Library a copy of the report from his chief accountancy adviser following his visit to the Grant-maintained Schools Centre Ltd. in February.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. This is an internal document concerning a company with a trading activity and is commercial in confidence. It has, however, been sent to the Public Accounts Committee in response to a request from the Committee.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many copies have been printed of the revised edition of the booklet, "How to Become a Grant-Maintained School", published in June; what was the cost of (a) the design and (b) the production; when he proposes to make a further revision to take account of the provisions of the Education Bill; and how many copies he expects to distribute during the summer holiday period.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 60,000 copies of the fourth edition of this booklet have been printed so far, at a cost of £4,611 for design, £9,950 for printing and £2,957 for other production costs. Distribution is predominantly in response to requests for copies of the booklet, which over the past year have averaged almost 15,000 a month. A fifth edition will be published shortly before the provisions in the present Education Bill on acquiring grant-maintained status are brought into effect.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Department of Education is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open Government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens' charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is given in the table.

Student Unions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consultations he had with (a) vice-chancellors and (b) the National Union of Students before his statement of 1 July on students' unions.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend's announcement of the Government's proposals for the reform of student unions followed an extended period of consultation with universities, colleges and students. This included discussions with vice-chancellors, both individually and collectively, and the NUS.

Standard Spending Assessments

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to alter the way in which education standard spending assessments reflect social and ethnic factors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: In consultation with the local authority associations, we are currently reviewing in the light of the 1991 census data the ways in which the education elements of standard spending assessments reflect the different social and ethnic characteristics of local authorities. The review is not yet complete. Before reaching decisions on the outcome, we shall take into account all the available relevant evidence.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the former members of this House who have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is given as follows.

Name of member	NDPB and post held	Salary	Duration of appointment	Political party
Mr. N. Bennett	Further Education Funding Council (England) Member of the Council	£4,000 pa honorarium	3 years	Conservative
Mr. M. Fallon	Higher Education Funding Council (England) Member of the Council	£4,000 pa honorarium	2·5 years	Conservative

School Leavers

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the expected number of school leavers who will join the labour market in each region in England in July/August.

Mr. Boswell: Information on intended destinations of school leavers is no longer collected by the Department. However, the estimated results from the 1992 schools examination survey indicated that 147,000 school leavers in England intended to enter employment, including youth training. The estimated figures for the individual regions are as follows:

	Thousands
Northern	13·74
Yorkshire and Humberside	19·24
North Western	23·80
East Midland	12·68
West Midland	19·29
East Anglia	3·93
Greater London	13·87
Other South East	28·26
South Western	11·79
ENGLAND	146·59

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Development Assistance

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what official development assistance was provided by the United Kingdom in 1992 as a percentage of gross national product.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: United Kingdom's official development assistance in 1992 amounted to 0·31 per cent. of GNP. This more than maintains Britain's average performance over recent years of 0·30 per cent.

The ratio includes Britain's official development assistance to developing countries. It does not include assistance to countries in eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, which are not included on the Development Assistance Committee list of developing countries, or contributions to the global environment facility and the Montreal protocol multilateral fund.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Trinidad Terms

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government intend to press for the full implementation of the Trinidad terms.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom has an excellent record of helping those developing countries with debt problems. It was a direct result of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's initiative for the poorest and most indebted countries following International Monetary Fund-sponsored programmes of reform, that the Paris club of major creditor Governments began implementing the Trinidad terms in December 1991. The recent announcement by the United States Administration of its intention to join the international consensus in implementing debt reduction on Trinidad terms is very welcome.

But the Government are aware that for some of the most desperate cases the terms as currently applied will not be enough. We are, therefore, taking every opportunity to pursue improvements to the terms with our creditor country colleagues.

Specifically, we would like to see the degree of concessionality increased to a range of 50 to 80 per cent. on a case-by-case basis for those countries that need it. We would also like to see quicker action on the stock of debt for those countries that already have a proven track record of reform with the IMF. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will be raising this issue at the forthcoming Tokyo summit.

Corporate Taxation (Shipping)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the corporate tax rates and systems of the members of the European Community as they apply specifically to the shipping industry.

Mr. Dorrell: Corporate tax systems operating in European Community member states are complex and diverse, and comparisons are notoriously difficult. Lists of all the numerous tax provisions applying to shipping industries in each country are not readily available. Information available on national corporate tax rates on profits of shipping companies in EC countries is as follows:

	Tax rates[1] (Per cent.)
Belgium	39
Denmark	[3]34
France	33⅓
Germany	[2]36
Greece	[3]0

	Tax rates[1] (Per cent.)
Ireland	[4]10
Italy	36
Luxembourg	[5]33
Netherlands	[5]35
Portugal	36
Spain	35
United Kingdom mainstream rate	33
United Kingdom small company rate	25

[1] Companies may also be subject to local income or profits taxes (eg 16·2 per cent. in Italy and averages of 20 per cent. in Germany and 10 per cent. in Luxembourg).

[2] Undistributed profits taxed at 50 per cent.

[3] Ships subject to annual tonnage tax.

[4] Rate applicable to "qualifying shipping activities"; non-qualifying activities taxed at 40 per cent.

[5] Denotes classical system—profits taxed once in hands of company and again in hands of shareholder.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on preparations for the control of drug trafficking at frontiers by 1995.

Sir John Cope: Control of drug trafficking at frontiers is the primary responsibility of HM Customs and Excise. Customs' anti-smuggling controls are founded on selective, targeted checks, based on detailed risk assessment, intelligence and the use of indicators. These controls are regularly monitored and evaluated so as to maintain, and wherever possible enhance, their effectiveness, and to allow for refinement in response to changes in the threat posed to the United Kingdom.

Taxation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many actions special office 2 of the Inland Revenue has brought for non-payment or avoidance of tax.

Mr. Dorrell: The special offices settle their investigations cases by recovery of tax lost, and where appropriate interest and penalties due under the Taxes Acts. Special office 2 settled 83 cases in the year ended 5 April 1993 and it has 176 cases under inquiry at present.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what grades of officers of the Inland Revenue are allowed to make settlement agreements in cases of possible tax avoidance; and if he will place the written guidance to officers covering such matters in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell: The agreements in these cases would normally be to settle appeals, which inspectors or other proper officers of the Crown may do under section 54 of the Taxes Management Act, 1970. The grade level of the inspector or other officer responsible would depend on the size and difficulty of the case and could vary from pay bands A to C—formerly principal inspector/grade 5 and below. The officer responsible for handling the case would also deal with any contract agreement with the taxpayer for the payment of unassessed tax, where settlement was reached in this way. There is no written guidance to officers specifically on agreements covering cases of possible tax avoidance, but technical advice is given by head office specialists on many areas of avoidance.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what internal procedures are in force to decide whether to undertake prosecutions for tax non-payment or avoidance; what grade of officer would normally decide such matters; and if he will place the written guidance to officers covering such matters in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue take proceedings in examples of all categories of serious tax fraud provided there is evidence to the standard of proof required by the criminal courts. Investigation of cases for possible criminal proceedings is the responsibility of officers in parts of the special compliance office. After legal advice from the office of the solicitor of Inland Revenue, in accounts fraud cases decisions to proceed are taken at under secretary level and in other cases at pay band A—formerly principal inspector/grade 5—level. I am arranging for a copy of the board's current order covering such matters to be placed in the Library.

Inland Revenue (Performance Reviews)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what performance review procedures are in force for special investigation offices of the Inland Revenue; what factors are taken into account in such reviews, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: For staff in the special investigation offices the same procedures apply as in the rest of the Inland Revenue: individual performance is reviewed regularly against objectives set out in the agreement made between job holder and immediate line manager at the beginning of the year. A formal assessment is made at the end of the year.

The performance of each special investigation office is regularly reviewed by senior officers from the headquarters of the special compliance office by means of analysis of management information, visits and discussions and scrutiny and quality assessment of casework.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much Mr. Ernest Stern is to be paid as vice-president of the European bank for reconstruction and development; whether United Kingdom income tax is payable on this salary; and what assessment he has made of the implications of the level of the salary for the vice-president of the European bank for reconstruction and development for the salaries of other senior managers in international institutions.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Mr. Stern has not been appointed as vice-president of the EBRD.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 455, how many full-time equivalent staff were employed by the Inland Revenue on tax evasion investigations in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Approximate numbers of staff units were as follows:—

Year	Number
1988-89	2,900
1989-90	3,100
1990-91	3,200
1991-92	3,400
1992-93	3,500

Council Tax

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many complaints about council tax valuation bandings in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency have been resolved since 1 April.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Valuation lists for council tax are maintained in billing authority areas and not by parliamentary constituencies. As at 30 June 1993, 100 proposals seeking alterations to council tax bands have been resolved in the area covered by Chelmsford borough council. With regard to the arrangements for dealing with proposals to alter council tax valuations I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning on Tuesday 29 June, Official Report, column 416.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many complaints have been received about valuations for council tax purposes in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency since 1 April.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Valuation lists for council tax are maintained in billing authority areas and not by parliamentary constituencies. As at 30 June 1993, 1,600 proposals seeking alterations to council tax bands have been received in the area covered by Chelmsford borough council. With regard to the arrangement dealing with proposals to alter council tax valuations, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning on Tuesday 29 June, Official Report, column 416.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many appeals against banding for the council tax in the area of Waveney district have been determined to date; how many are still awaiting determination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 5 July 1993]: As at 30 June 1993, 58 proposals seeking alterations to council tax bandings have been resolved in the area covered to Waveney district council and there are 1,112 proposals awaiting determination. With regard to the arrangements for dealing with proposals to alter council tax valuations, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Planning on Tuesday 29 June, Official Report, column 416.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many appeals against valuation for the uniform business rate in the area of Waveney district have been determined since its inception; how many are still awaiting determination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 5 July 1993]: As at 30 June 1993, 1,117 appeals against assessments in the non-domestic rating list for the area covered by Waveney district council have been resolved. There are 654 awaiting determination.

Capital Allowances

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the direct effect on revenue in the year 1992-93 had the clauses in chapter II, part II of the Finance (No. 2) Bill of 1993 been brought into effect from the beginning of the 1992-93 tax year.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 July 1993]: If the Finance Bill proposals for the taxation of foreign exchange gains and losses had been introduced from April 1992, corporation tax receipts in 1992-93 would not have been affected because mainstream corporation tax is not due for payment until nine months after the end of the accounting period. Accruals of tax would have started to be affected but many of the accounting periods first affected are not yet finished. Also, the tax change may itself have affected the levels of borrowing.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much corporation tax has been repaid in each year since 1986-87 by industry, classified as in table 9.3 of Inland Revenue statistics 1992.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Information on total repayments of corporation tax was given in my reply to the hon. Member on 28 June, Official Report, column 372. I regret that further information by industry is not available.

Non-domicile Tax Status

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to discover how many individuals benefit from non-domicile tax status; and how much revenue has been lost to the Exchequer through the availability of this status.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 July 1993]: The answer to the first part of the question could be calculated only at disproportionate cost. Information is not available under the present law to answer the second part of the question.

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations the holder of his office received from right hon. and hon. Members concerning the conduct of Inland Revenue special office 2's investigation into the affairs of Mr. Asil Nadir.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 July 1993]: I am not aware that any such representations have been received.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he applied when deciding whether to approve British Nuclear Fuels plc corporate plans from 1985 onwards.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 5 July, Official Report, column 36.

Japan

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received regarding access for British exports to the Japanese market.

Mr. Needham: In recent years, great strides have been made by Japan in opening her markets, but problems persist in a few areas. The Department is in regular contact with the exporters concerned. Like our EC partners, United Kingdom Ministers and officials take every opportunity to impress on Japan the need for unrestricted access to her markets.

Aid, Rochdale

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the aid given by his Department to firms in the borough of Rochdale.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the three years ending 30 March 1993, the following sums were paid to firms in the borough of Rochdale:

Regional Selective Assistance:
(This represents 103 payments made to about 55 projects).	3,090,055
Support for Products Under Research (SPUR):
One Offer of	21,187
Payment made on 5 November 1992 of	18,009
Enterprise Initiative Consultancies:
Number of Initiatives = 132	—
Number of Companies Assisted = 108	—
Cost of DTI	523,366

Company Law Reform

Mr. Cash: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a list of the members of each of the DTI working groups examining the scope for company law reform.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The following is a list of the external members of the working groups formed to date:

Financial Assistance for the Purchase of a Company's Own Shares:

Ms Rosemary Cairns, Mr. Clive Edrupt, Mrs. Wendy Gadd, Mr. Martyn Jones, Mr. William Knight, Mr. Neil Matthewson, Mr. Ronald Paterson, Mr. Stuart Russell.

Private Companies

Mr. Robin Bell, Mr. Richard Brown, Ms Rosemary Cairns, Mrs. Judith Freedman, Mr. Jeremy Pope, Mr. Derek Scott, Mr. Christopher Swinson, Mr. Piers Wolf.

Group Law

Ms Rosemary Cairns, Ms Harriet Creamer, Mr. Michael Garner, Mr. Michael Levitton, Mr. Stuart Murray, Professor Daniel Prentice, Miss Isobel Sharpe, Mr. Kevin Sweeney, Ms Pauline Wallace.

Registration of Company Charges

Mr. Trevor Aldridge QC, Mr. Peter Graham, Mr. Michael Hall, Mr. Bruce Patrick, Mr. Michael Ryden.

Company Voluntary Arrangements

Miss Mary Arden QC, Mr. W. G. Bradford, Professor I. Fletcher, Mr. I. Fletcher, Mr. Mark Goldstein, Mr. Mark Homan, Mr. J. Pollard, Mr. H. Rajak.

I intend to consult widely on proposals for reform enabling everybody concerned to have a full opportunity to comment.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money each country in the European Community has received from the European regional development fund in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The amount of European regional development fund grant received by each member state of the European Community in the years 1987 to 1991 is given in the table. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

million ecu, current prices

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991

Total	2,536	3,093	3,919	4,543	5,178

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which regions in the United Kingdom currently benefit from the European regional development fund.

Mr. Sainsbury: All regions designated for objectives 1, 2 and 5(b) of the European structural funds are eligible for the European regional development fund. Northern Ireland is designated for objective 1. The areas designated for objective 2 were listed in the Official Journal of the European Communities No. L 112 of 25 April 1989 and No. C 177 of 18 July 1990, and those designated for objective 5(b) in No. L 198 of 12 July 1989.

In addition Gibraltar and parts of London, Kent and Stoke-on-Trent benefit from the European regional development fund under article 10 of Council regulation (EEC) 4254/88.

Insurance (Commission Disclosure)

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about commission disclosure in general insurance business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received no recent representations specifically on the subject of commission disclosure in general insurance business. The Insurance Brokers Registration Council has a code of conduct, and the Association of British Insurers a code of practice, both of which require commission disclosure in general insurance business by independent intermediaries on request.

Sellafield (Incidents)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent incidents have been reported from the British Nuclear Fuels reprocessing plant.

Mr. Eggar: Details of all incidents at British Nuclear Fuels plc's reprocessing plant at Sellafield are recorded in site logs and published in widely circulated weekly site newsletters. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to a question from the then Member for Sherwood on 30 April 1987, Official Report, columns 203-4.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what Government assistance will be available to support management and employee teams bidding for the privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: Government support for management and employee teams bidding for the privatisation of British Coal will be at a maximum rate of 50 per cent. of the eligible costs of employing consultants and or advisers. Support for any team will not exceed £200,000.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on issues discussed and decisions taken at the meeting of the European Community's Foreign Affairs Council on 2 July.

Mr. Sainsbury: I attended a meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 2 and 3 July. Subject to a reservation by the Irish Republic, which at present remains outstanding, the Council reached conclusions on the regulations on the future of the European structural funds. The Council also heard a report by the Commission on the state of play in the GATT Uruguay round.

Subject to the Irish reservation, the outcome on the structural funds was as follows. It is fully satisfactory for the United Kingdom.

1. The Objective 1 regions, which receive the highest grants, will include Northern Ireland, Merseyside and the whole of the Highlands and Islands Enterprise area, including the Argyll, Bute and West Moray areas, which the European Commission had proposed to omit.
2. The clear priority of the European Social Fund will remain Objective 3, training for the unemployed, particularly the long-term unemployed and young people. Expenditure on this will be at least four times greater than expenditure on Objective 4, for training people affected by industrial change, particularly those threatened with unemployment. Moreover the majority of expenditure on Objective 4 will be for people employed in small and medium-sized enterprises.
3. The introduction of future Community Initiatives, which will be limited to 9 per cent. of the total of the Funds, will be subject to control by a new management committee of Member States. Maritime border areas will also be eligible for assistance.
4. There will be new simplified procedures for the administration of the Funds, balanced by a new requirement for cost-benefit appraisal and for strengthened monitoring and evaluation to improve value for money. Assistance will henceforth be allocated where appraisal shows commensurate benefits.

The total size of the funds, up to 1999, had already been settled by the Edinburgh European Council. If the Irish reservation is withdrawn it should be possible for the Council to adopt the reguations definitively at its meeting on 19 and 20 July. But several matters remain to be settled before the new arrangements can be implemented, with effect from 1 January 1994:

1. No firm decisions have yet been taken on the financial allocations to any region.
2. The maps of Objective 2 and 5(b) areas have to be drawn. This will be done by a new procedure based on national proposals and taking due account of national priorities. This represents a major improvement on the present system. The Government intends to launch this procedure in the United Kingdom as soon as the regulations have been adopted definitively.
3. The United Kingdom's and other Member States' plans for the future use of the Funds will have to be drawn up and approved.
4. The Council is to discuss the future content of the Community Initiatives during the Autumn.

The Commission's report on the Uruguay round covered in particular progress in the current quadrilateral talks between the Community, the United States, Canada and Japan. The Council fully supported the Commission's efforts to bring the negotiations to a successful conclusion by the end of the year.

Council of Energy Ministers

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on issues discussed and decisions taken at the meeting of the European Community's Council of Energy Ministers on 25 June.

Mr. Eggar: The Council considered several major issues and received reports from the Commission on other matters of interest. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council reached political agreement on the ALTENER programme for the promotion of renewable energy sources and the SAVE directive, an energy efficiency measure. Formal adoption will take place at an early date.

The Commission also reported on progress in implementing the Community's nuclear safety assistance programmes to the countries of eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. The Council called for the urgent implementation of practical measures to improve safety at nuclear plants in the region.

Progress was made on the Commission's proposals for a new coal state aids decisions to replace the existing one which expires at the end of this year. The United Kingdom emphasised the importance of moving towards economic viability in the light of international market prices for coal and the Council agreed on the need for the Community's coal industry to make progress in that direction through reduction of production costs and capacities in order to achieve degression of aids.

Under the heading of the internal energy market, the Council discussed the proposed directives on liberalisation of the gas and electricity markets. The Commission outlined new ideas on access to networks in response to the invitation by the Council on 30 November to modify its proposals. The Council agreed that discussions should continue while the opinion of the European Council is awaited. The Commission also gave a preview of the second report on the internal energy market. The Council discussed the hydrocarbons licensing directive and agreed that outstanding issues should be resolved with the intention of achieving a common position under the Belgian presidency.

The Council also considered the progress of negotiations on the European energy charter.

The Commission reported on forthcoming proposals for a directive on the energy efficiency requirements for household refrigerators and freezers and for guidelines on trans-European energy networks. The Presidency reported on discussions in ECOFIN on the proposed CO_2/energy tax.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to relocating Warren Spring Laboratory to share facilities with the Building Research Establishment at Garston.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 29 June 1993]: None.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what conditions of service will be offered to Warren Spring Laboratory staff who are transferred to the Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 29 June 1993]: The staff will become employees of the Atomic Energy Authority. The Transfer of Undertaking (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 will apply to this transfer. This means that those staff who transfer to AEA will take with them their current DTI terms and conditions.

Training

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many non-United Kingdom owned companies and subsidiaries of non-United Kingdom owned companies are providing training services in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.
This information is not available.

EMPLOYMENT

Market Testing

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department group's market-testing programme is being developed within existing resources.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open Government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens' charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following executive non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by this Department:

Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service
Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members
Construction Industry Training Board
Engineering Construction Industry Training Board
Equal Opportunities Commission
Health and Safety Commission
Health and Safety Executive
National Council for Vocational Qualifications
Remploy Ltd.
Wages Councils
Women's National Commission

With the exception of the special arrangements which exist in relation to the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, all are responsible to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

The Health and Safety Commission is responsible to my right hon. Friend and other Secretaries of State which have a relevant interest, and the Health and Safety Executive is responsible to the Commission.

(a) These bodies and their members are not subject to surcharge;

(b) The Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service, Commisioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members, Equal Opportunities Commission, Health and Safety Commission and Health and Safety Executive are subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner as they come within the ambit of schedule 2 to the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, as amended;

(c) the bodies either subject their accounts to full audit by the Comptroller and Auditor General, head of the National Audit Office, or, in the case of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and Remploy Ltd., provide him with access to their books and records;

(d) none of these bodies is subject to any statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities;

(e) performance indicators are agreed as part of the normal departmental planning process; and

(f) citizens charter provisions are agreed where appropriate.

No register of interests is kept by the Department.

European Social Fund

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about objective 4 of the European social fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 5 July 1993]: The Department has consulted those organisations involved in the management of projects supported by the European social fund—ESF—in the United Kingdom about the reform of the European structural funds, including the proposed new objective 4. Most respondents shared the Government's view that the European social fund should continue to be concentrated on assisting the unemployed, particularly the long-term unemployed and young people. The reform of the European structural funds was discussed at the Foreign Affairs Council on 2 July where, subject to an Irish reservation on the overall package, it was agreed that training for the unemployed should remain the priority for expenditure under the ESF.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any proposals to secure the future funding of voluntary organisations following the proposed reduction in the European social fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Across the European Community resources allocated to the European structural funds, including the European social fund—ESF—are set to increase by 40 per cent. over the period 1993-99. Training and employment measures supported by the ESF are selected on an open and competitive basis to ensure value for money.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the absolute number and percentage of the labour force unemployed for (a) under three months, (b) over three months, (c) over six months, (d) over 12 months, (e) over two years, (f) over three years and (g) over four years in each OECD and European Community country since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 5 July 1993]: The available information can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Unemployment data, on the International Labour Organisation basis, for particular durations are published by the statistical office of the European Communities—EUROSTAT—in its annual "Labour Force Survey Results" copies of which are available in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Powers of Entry

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers her officials have, and are contemplating, to enter farmland without prior notification.

Mr. Jack: As far as the integrated administration and control system is concerned, the Control System Regulations 1993—SI 1993/1317—provide authorised persons with powers of entry at all reasonable hours for the purpose of carrying out control measures required to meet EC obligations. In using these powers, we shall have regard to the requirements of the EC regulation, which are designed to combat fraud, but will try to minimise unnecessary inconvenience to farmers.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed since 1988 by her Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if she will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Mr. Jack: Of the new appointments made by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food since 1988 and listed in "Public Bodies 1992", our records show that four are former members of the House of Commons. The details requested by the hon. Member are as follows:

Name	Title of post	Salary	Duration	Party
Lord Mackay of Ardbreknish (John Jackson Mackay)	Chairman[1], Sea Fish Industry Authority	£28,780 p.a.	3 years from 1 October 1990	Conservative (Argyle and Bute, 1983-87)
Sir Peter Mills	Chairman, South West Regional Panel (following reorganisation in 1992 became Chairman of new South West Panel)	None	3 years from 1 August 1988 3 years from 1 August 1991 (resigned June 1993)	Conservative (Torrington, 1964-74, Devon, West, 1974-83, Torridge and West Devon, 1983-87)
Andrew Stewart	Chairman[2], Agricultural Training Board	£15,600 p.a.	3 years from 1 October 1992	Conservative (Sherwood, 1983-92)
David Myles, CBE	Member[2], Potato Marketing Board	—[3]	3 years from 1 January 1988 3 years from 1 January 1991	Conservative (Banff, 1979-83)

[1] Appointed jointly with Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.
[2] Appointed jointly with Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales.
[3] As set by Potato Marketing Board.

Set-aside

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers have a dispute or contested claim for set-aside for the most recently available period.

Mr. Jack: A total of 28 claims under the five and one year set-aside schemes for the 1991-92 period are currently subject to dispute. Claims for land set-aside under the new arable area payments scheme are still being processed.

Equine and Bovine Tests

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action her Department is taking to ensure that the Czech and Polish authorities meet the costs before 1 August of the owners and farmers who have suffered as a consequence of the import of animals testing sero-positive to equine viral arteritis and foot and mouth disease.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My officials have met representatives of the Czech and Polish veterinary authorities on a number of occasions and there have also been exchanges of correspondence between them in respect of the importation of foot and mouth disease—FMD—seropositive animals from the Czech republic and from Poland.

The Czech authorities accept that the animals concerned must have been vaccinated against FMD and have agreed to accept the return of any of the affected animals. My officials have made clear to the Czech authorities on a number of occasions our view that they should ensure a fair and satisfactory outcome to the problem.

With the help of the Polish authorities, my officials are continuing to investigate how cattle vaccinated against FMD came to be exported from Poland with certification claiming that the animals had never been vaccinated.

It cannot be concluded from the evidence available so far that the stallion imported last September from Poland is necessarily the primary source of the current outbreak of equine viral arteritis. Nevertheless, my officials have now written to the Polish veterinary authorities informing them of the possible link with the imported stallion and seeking information about the disease status of the stud of origin in Poland at the time the stallion was imported.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the same veterinary certification procedures have been applicable to farmed livestock originating from Poland as for horses.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The certification procedures are basically the same, with official certification being required for horses and farmed livestock imported from third countries. However, the detailed animal health conditions applicable to such imports are diffetent.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Jack: Of the executive NDPBs listed in "Public Bodies" 1992 as coming under the aegis of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the regional flood defence committees now report to the National Rivers Authority and have not, therefore, been covered in this reply. Of the remainder, all are responsible to my right hon. Friend the Minister with the exception of the Agricultural Wages Board—AWB—and agricultural wages committees—AWC—which were set up to be statutorily independent. The AWB reports its proceedings each year to the Minister for inclusion in her annual report to Parliament on agricultural wages: the AWCs function in accordance with the rules of procedure set out in statutory regulations. None of the bodies or their members is subject to surcharge and only the agricultural wages committees and the Agricultural Training Board can be investigated by the Parliamentary Commissioner. There is no relationship between the NDPBs and the Audit Commission. All the bodies save the AWB and AWCs are subject to scrutiny either statutorily or by agreement by NAO. NDPBs are not subject to statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities. All the bodies, with the exception of the AWB and AWCs, produce performance indicators. All public servants are subject to the citizens charter and NDPBs are being encouraged to adopt charter principles. Appointments of chairpersons and members of boards are made in accordance with the NDPB guide for departments to avoid any conflict of interests.

Food Premises

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the statistical information on the inspection of food premises for 1992 as required by the EC Commission under directive 89/397 is available.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom figures for inspection of food premises during 1992 have been forwarded to the EC Commission as required by directive 89/397. They are based on returns received from local authorities. A copy of these statistics has been placed in the Library of the House together with extracts covering England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, respectively. Returns from individual authorities are available for inspection at my Department; copies can be provided for a small charge to cover expenses.

Equine Viral Arteritis

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 15 June, Official Report, column 482, what steps she is taking to stop the spread of equine viral arteritis by casual contact including aerial transmission; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [pursuant to the reply, 25 June 1993, c. 327-28]: I am pleased to announce that the outstanding quality points identified by the Veterinary Products Committee at its meeting on 24 June in respect of an application for an inactivated equine viral arteritis vaccine, have since been resolved and an animal test certificate now granted. The first batch of the product is currently undergoing final testing before clearance for use.

The animal test trial design is based on the current geographical spread of the disease and the known epidemiology of the infection. The vaccine will therefore be made available through veterinary surgeons on application to the certificate holder, for use in stallions in England, and in mares in those counties of England where there is a recognised risk of infection. Premises where vaccine is to be used will be notified to the licensing authority.

DEFENCE

Overseas Defence Costs

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution was received in the latest available year from the Governments of the Channel islands, the Isle of Man and Bermuda to the cost of defence.

Mr. Hanley: No contributions to the cost of defence have been received from the Government of Bermuda in recent years. As to the contributions made by the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office on 2 July, Official Report, column 635.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Aitken: The market-testing programme is largely the responsibility of the management areas concerned: some staff are dedicated to market testing but most carry out this function as part of their normal duties. The information requested could not, therefore, be identified in each area without incurring disproportionate cost. However, the cost of the central market testing service, which offers advice and assistance to managers, is about £475,000.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost to his Department for policing the interior of Menwith Hill station.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Rosyth Dockyard

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names and dates of commissioning of those warships for which the refit contract is to be allocated to Rosyth dockyard in the years up until 2005; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 29 June, Official Report, column 492.

Rosyth and Devonport Dockyards

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to introduce primary legislation for full privatisation of Rosyth and Devonport dockyards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No decisions have been taken on arrangements to succeed the present term contracts for the operation of the royal dockyards.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department is responsible: whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested about the executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department is as follows:

(a) None is subject to surcharge;
(b) None is within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration;
(c) Except for the Services Sound and Vision Corporation—SSVC—accounts for all bodies are subject to audit by the National Audit Office. An external auditor does however audit the accounts of the SSVC and the Comptroller and Auditor General has access to the SSVC's books and records;
(d) None is subject to the statutory provisions for open government applicable to local authorities;
(e) Performance indicators have not been adopted within the service museums, but they are being addressed and it is intended to introduce indicators in the near future. Both the SSVC and the Oil and Pipeline Agency have performance indicators;
(f) The principles of ensuring an accountable, responsive and quality service to the public, directly or indirectly, apply to all publicly funded organisations.

Appointees, except for those as trustee of the service museums are required to declare any personal interest.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

University College, Swansea

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish the report by Sir Michael Davies into complaints relating to University college, Swansea.

Mr. Newton: Sir Michael Davies's report to the visitor of the university of Wales on matters relating to the University college of Swansea has been forwarded formally to the college. Copies have also been made available to those who made submissions to his inquiry either as individuals or as representatives. I do not proposes to arrange for the report actually to be published.

Public Bodies

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the names, occupations and current employers of those who currently hold positions in each public body to which he makes appointments; if he will make a statement on the considerations taken into account when making such appointments; and if he will list details of the posts and salaries or allowances payable which have changed since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Newton [holding answer 25 June 1993]: As Lord President, I am responsible for the appointment of the panel of experts from which members are drawn to sit on registered homes tribunals. The information requested in respect of the 51 members is not held centrally and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. Panel members are selected primarily on the basis of their experience in social work, medicine or nursing. Since the publication of "Public Bodies 1992", the daily allowance payable to a member sitting on a tribunal has been increased from £138 to £141.

HEALTH

NHS Pay

10. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions she or her representatives have had regarding reumuneration of national health service employees.

Dr. Mawhinney: Settlements have recently been reached for pay increases for some 90 per cent. of the national health service work force.

Social Workers

11. Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trained social workers are currently employed by local authority social services departments.

Mr. Bowis: From the latest information available—"Local Authority Social Services Statistics: Staff of Local Authority Social Services Departments 30 September 1991: England"—there are some 25,500 whole-time equivalent field social work posts in local authorities—an increase of 36 per cent. over the 10 years to 1991—with about 90 per cent. professionally qualified.

Waiting Lists

13. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures for national health service waiting lists.

Dr. Mawhinney: Provisional figures for the quarter ending 31 March are available in the Library. These show that the patients charter guarantee is being met and there are no patients waiting longer than two years for treatment in any region. In addition, no patient has to wait longer than 18 months for hip, knee or cataract surgery.

18. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in reducing waiting times for patients in the South Western region.

Dr. Mawhinney: Provisional figures for March 1993 show that, over the last two years, South Western regional health authority has reduced the number of patients waiting over a year from 14,500 to only 295.

NHS Performance Indicators

14. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will make a statement on the publication of comparative performance indicators in the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: I attach considerable importance to developing the use of comparative performance indicators in the national health service. They are a valuable tool in enabling standards in all areas to rise to the levels of the best. A considerable amount of comparative performance information is already available and the task now is to ensure that it is spread and used more widely to inform choices about health care. To that end, I am pleased to say that the first hospital league tables will be published in June 1994.

Free Dental Treatment

15. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her current plans for the future of free dental treatment for pregnant women and nursing mothers.

16. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the future of free dental treatment for pregnant women and nursing mothers.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's review of the remuneration of general dental practitioners suggested that pregnant and nursing women should no longer be automatically exempt from dental charges. We have consulted widely on his report and shall announce our proposals in due course.

GP Lists

17. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of patients on each family doctor's list (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 1 October 1979, the average number of patients on family doctors' lists in England was 2,286; the figure for 1 October 1992 is 1,922.

GP Fund Holders

19. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for the further development of the general practitioner fund-holding initiative.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fund holding is an acknowledged success and clearly delivers benefits to patients. We want to see these benefits extended as far as possible. Almost 3,000 general practitioners joined the scheme this year, taking the total to over 6,000. Around 3,000 more are preparing to join next year. We are also looking at ways to encourage more smaller inner-city and rural practices to join the scheme.

25. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she is giving to extending fund holding to smaller general practices.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have always encouraged small practices to group together to join the scheme. Seventy such groups have already done so and around 150 more are preparing to join from April 1994.

Terrence Higgins Trust

20. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has carried out an investment appraisal into the funds donated by her Department to the Terrence Higgins Trust.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health carried out a full financial appraisal of the Terrence Higgins Trust in 1988. The trust's financial position continues to be carefully monitored each year in connection with its section 64 grant award.

Ambulances (Paramedics)

21. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress towards placing a paramedic on each front-line ambulance.

Mr. Sackville: In December last year, I announced that the paramedic target was to be brought forward by one year to the end of 1995. I am pleased to say that ambulance services and health authorities have responded positively and they are well on the way to achieving the required target.

Post-operative Care

22. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce charges for post-operative care in the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: There are no such plans.

Specialist Medical Training

23. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the specialist medical training review contained in the Calman committee report.

Mr. Sackville: The working group chaired by the Chief Medical Officer was established last year at my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's request to consider specialist medical training in the light of the EC medical directives. The group has produced a report containing comprehensive recommendations with the twin aims of meeting the requirements of European Community law while ensuring that standards of specialist training are maintained and, indeed, improved. The period of consultation on the report concluded last week and comments from an extensive range of interested parties will be considered before a decision on implementation is reached.

Mentally Ill People

24. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made to improve the health and social functioning of mentally ill people in the past 12 months.

Mr. Bowis: In line with the three strategies set out in "The Health of the Nation", we have taken a number of steps towards improving information and understanding; developing comprehensive local services; and continuing the development of good practice. This includes funding the first national survey of psychiatric illness; issuing the "Mental Illness Key Area Handbook"; distributing good practice guidance on the care programme approach and establishing a mental health task force.

We will be producing a report on activity in the mental illness key area of "The Health of the Nation" in the autumn. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider the need for further measures to deal with mental illness within the community care programme with particular reference to schizophrenia.

Mr. Bowis: We introduced the care programme approach in April 1991 to provide better co-ordinated care in the community for people with a serious mental illness such as schizophrenia. The inclusion of mental illness as one of the five key areas in the Government's strategy for health. "The Health of the Nation" has given impetus to the work being done by health and local authorities to improve community mental health services. "The Health of the Nation" sets a broad and demanding target of improving the health and social welfare of people with serious mental illness such as schizophrenia and builds on the care programme approach.

A departmental review team has been at work since January examining current provisions in the Mental Health Act 1983 for the care in the community of people with serious mental illness. It is considering the need for the introduction of a new power and whether changes in the law are necessary. The review team will report its findings to the Secretary of State in the summer.

Limited List Prescribing

26. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a further statement on the limited list proposals.

Dr. Mawhinney: We expect the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs to complete its review of drugs in the categories of the extended selected list scheme by the end of the year, and for regulations to bring these changes into effect to be laid before Parliament.

HIV

27. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the George House Trust in Manchester regarding the spread of HIV in the north-west; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The George House Trust has corresponded with the Department of Health about section 64 grant aid and the use and allocation of earmarked AIDS moneys made available by health and local authorities. The Department's view is that local organisations such as the George House Trust should negotiate funding agreements with health and local authorities.

Infant and Perinatal Mortality

29. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest information about the rates of infant and perinatal mortality in the north-western region.

Mr. Sackville: For the north-western region, the 1992 infant mortality rate was 7·7 per 1,000 live births and the perinatal mortality rate was 8·5 per 1,000 total births. These are the latest figures in what represents a continuing downward trend.

It should be noted that on 1 October 1992 the legal definition of a stillbirth was altered from a baby born dead after 28 completed weeks' gestation or more to one born dead after 24 completed weeks' gestation or more.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest information about the rates of infant and perinatal mortality in the Mersey region.

Mr. Sackville: In Mersey region, the 1992 infant mortality rate was 5·7 per 1,000 live births, compared to the 1991 rate of 6·7, and the perinatal mortality rate was 6·6 per 1,000 total births, compared to the 1991 rate of 7·1.

It should be noted that on 1 October 1992 the legal definition of a stillbirth was altered from a baby born dead after 28 completed weeks' gestation or more to one born dead after 24 completed weeks' gestation or more.

Project 2000

30. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money will be available in 1993-94 to fund the Project 2000 initiative for nurses; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: An extra £114 million is available to fund Project 2000 in 1993-94 in addition to the existing resources for nurse training and education.

NHS Management Costs

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the capital and revenue cost of the national health service management executive and each regional health authority in each of the last five years; and what are the projected costs for the next two years.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure figures for the national health service management executive (NHSME) are shown in table 1. The distribution of functions between the NHSME and other parts of the Department of Health is evolving from year to year and figures cannot, therefore, be directly compared from one year to the next. Figures are not available prior to 1990-91 or for future years —allocations have not been made beyond 1993-94.

NHSME expenditure

Year	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93 (estimated)	1993-94 (allocation)
Running costs (£)	29,933,505	29,402,541	42,883,317	32,939,954
Capital (£)	339,000	483,712	511,745	6,415

Note: Figures are not adjusted for inflation and exlcude accommodation and related costs.

Expenditure on headquarters administration by regional health authorities for the financial years 1987-88 to 1990-91 is shown in table 2.

Figures derived from RHAs' 1991-92 annual accounts are shown in table 3. The 1991-92 figures are not comparable with those for the earlier years and should be interpreted with caution. Simple comparison between authorities is misleading because RHAs devolved their non-core functions at varying times and bore different costs on their regional budgets.

Relevant capital costs are not readily available.

Notes:

1. Headquarters administration covers the total current—revenue—expenditure on the pay and accommodation costs of staff of all disciplines, including general and senior managers, and their support staff employed at regional health authority —RHA—headquarters levels.
2. The figures for the years prior to 1991-92 vary between regional health authorities, as regions were managed in an integrated way and the balance of management between regional health authorities and their respective district health authorities—DHAs—differed between regions. The figures were also influenced by other factors including differences in the geographic size of regions, in the numbers of district health authorities they included and in the extent to which regional health authorities directly managed operational services.
3. Following the implementation of the national health service reforms, the role of regional health authorities is changing and this has a major impact on the figures for 1991-92. There are significant variations in the extent to which regional health authorities have retained or devolved management, support and operational services functions and in the extent to which their costs are borne or recharged to users. Some regional health authorities are directly involved in the purchaser function while the figures for others include additional significant costs—notably the payments of funds for nursing and other staff training to health providers.

Dementia

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of carers looking after younger people with dementia have access to special services.

Mr. Bowis: The needs of carers will be assessed under the new community care arrangements at the same time as those of the dementia sufferers whom they look after.

The detailed information requested is not available centrally.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the equivalent at current prices of the prescription charge in force on 18 October 1964.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is £1·05.

Joint Prostheses

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the major joint prostheses that have been approved by her Department for use by surgeons within the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not have a scheme for the approval of individual joint prostheses.

The medical devices directorate within the Department, operates a voluntary manufacturer registration scheme. This scheme identifies manufacturers whose facilities and practices enable them to manufacture to a consistent standard of quality and who are able to give declarations of compliance with safety and performance standards. All major manufacturers of joint prostheses are registered under this scheme. The national health service is advised to buy these devices only from registered sources.

Eye Tests

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of people over the age of 60, 65 and 70 years are eligible for an NHS eye examination.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally as not all the categories of exemption can be broken down into age bands.

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the average cost of a visit to a hospital ophthalmic out-patient department and (b) the current fee payable to an optometrist and an ophthalmic medical practitioner for an NHS eye examination.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1991-92, the average total cost per ophthalmology out-patient attendance was approximately £39.

The current national health service sight test fees payable to optometrists and ophthalmic medical practitioners are £12·75 and £10·15 respectively.

Nurses (Pregnancies)

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses who have left NHS employment as a result of pregnancy since 1987 have subsequently returned to NHS employment.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trained nurses have left employment with the NHS in each of the last six years as a result of pregnancy.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the available information.

Total Nursing and Midwifery	2,030	1,350

[1] All figures have been rounded to the nearest ten.

Notes:

1. The data necessary to identify leavers due to pregnancy were not collected centrally after 1991.
2. The format of the data collection was changed between 1989 and 1990, consequently the listing of staff groups for 1990 and 1991 differ from those given for 1988 and 1989.
3. For year ending 31 March 1988 and 1989 information was not available from 11 data suppliers (regional health authority headquarters (RHA HQ), district health authorities (DHAs) and the London ambulance service (LAS)). Information for 1991 excludes 27 data suppliers (RHA HQs, DHAs and LAS) who either did not supply data or data were unusable.
4. Some 60 per cent. (1988), 59 per cent. (1989), 57 per cent. (1990) and 58 per cent. (1991) of all nursing and midwifery leavers to the national health service were recorded as "Voluntary Resignation".

Source of data: KM46 return 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Chiropractors

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce legislation for the regulation of chiropractors.

Mr. Sackville: We have no such plans. We understand, however, that the chiropractic profession is looking to secure the support of an hon. Member to introduce a private Member's Bill during the next Session.

Supraregional Centres

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make available a summary of the funding levels of activity agreed for 1993-94 with centres designated to provide supraregional services, following her announcement of 23 December 1992, press release H92/467.

Mr. Sackville: A summary of this information has been placed in the Library as an addendum to the document "Supra regional services 1993-94: announcement by the Secretary of State for Health".

Medical Negligence Claims

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 June, Official Report, columns 236-37, if she will give the membership and remit of the joint Department of Health/national health service working group on medical negligence claims in the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The terms of reference of the joint departmental/national health service working group on the financial arrangements for clinical negligence are:

"To consider the issues, opportunity and risks involved in setting up a mutual insurance scheme under Section 21 of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. To prepare a specification for a tender document inviting proposals by open tender process for the management of such a scheme and to consider the merits of each proposal and recommend a management company.

To consider, in parallel with work on the scheme, any other arrangements in the area of clinical negligence, risk management and claims management which may be required."

The working group is composed of officials from the Department and representatives from regional health authorities, NHS trust bodies and independent NHS trusts; NHS representatives provide a wide range of practical experience in the legal, financial and risk aspects of clinical negligence.

BST Milk

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been conducted on the likely effects of bovine somatotropin milk on diabetics; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We are not aware of any research specifically on this subject.

All cows' milk contains IGF-1, an insulin-like growth factor. Administering artificially produced bovine somatotropin to dairy cows results in marginally increased levels of IGF-1 in their milk.

IGF-1 does not have the same hormonal action as insulin, nor does it interfere with the action of insulin, and is not absorbed from the gut. It should therefore pose no risk to diabetics.

Prescribed Items (Cost)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated percentage of prescribed items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors which cost less than (a) 40p, (b) 60p, (c) 80p and (d) £1·00.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1993, columns 647-48]: I regret that the table in the previous reply did not indicate that the figures for the number of items dispensed are in thousands. A revised table is as follows.

Prescribed items with a net ingredient cost of less than (a) 40 pence, (b) 60 pence, (c) 80 pence and (d) £1·00 dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors in England in 1992.

	(a)	(b)	(c)	(d)
Net Ingredient Cost less than (pence)	40	60	80	100
Number of items dispensed (thousands)	32,690	49,753	61,449	73,937
Percentage of all prescribed items	8·5	12·9	15·9	19·1

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many inquiries there have been to the family credit helpline since April.

Mr. Burt: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) on 5 July at column 40.

Income Support

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of single women aged 18 to 24 years in receipt of income support are also in receipt of housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: The latest available figures are those for 1991. At that time approximately 48 per cent. of women aged 18 to 24 in receipt of income support were also receiving housing benefit.

Notes:

1. Income support statistics annual inquiry May 1991.
2. Housing benefit and community charge benefit management information system May 1991.
3. Percentages rounded to nearest whole figure.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16-year-olds on youth training schemes receive an income support top-up of £5·30 in addition to their training allowance; and how much are the administrative costs of each income support claim.

Mr. Burt: The requested information is not available as top-up payments are not separately identifiable from other income support payments. The cost of administering claims for income support is an average of £6·44 per claim. This cost is not constrained to a single week of benefit payment.

Young People's Income

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the income per week of a single 18-year-old, who is paying £30 per week rent and who is (a) a student and (b) unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: On the assumption that insufficient contributions had been paid to give title to unemployment benefit, a lone, unemployed 18-year-old with a rent liability of £30 per week would normally be entitled to income support of £34·80 per week and would, through housing benefit, receive up to 100 per cent. of his rent, less any ineligible items. This equates to about £64·80 per week.

An 18-year-old following a full-time course of higher education, but otherwise in the same circumstances, would not normally be eligible for income support of housing benefit but would receive support through the educational maintenance system. During the period of study, the standard maintenance grant outside London, for the coming academic year, equates to £59·60 per week over 38 weeks, with income available from the full-year student loan of £15·38 per week. This equates to about £74·98 per week.

In addition, if a student in higher education faces particular financial difficulties he may be able to receive assistance from the access funds. The access funds are administered on a discretionary basis by the educational establishments.

It is not possible to estimate students' income during the long vacation because some students will find work during that period.

Maintenance Allowance Assessments

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to change the process of maintenance allowance assessments to ensure that mothers who are out of work and wishing to receive an assessment do not have to wait longer than mothers who are in work.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency is introducing the new child support maintenance arrangements from scratch and it would have been unrealistic to take on cases over a four-year period.

Parents with care who do not receive income support, family credit or disability working allowance and do not have an existing court order or other written maintenance agreement may apply to the agency immediately. Those with an order or agreement will be taken on by the agency between April 1996 and March 1997: in the interim, they may apply to a court for a variation in their order or agreement.

Parents with care who receive income support will be taken on over the three years to April 1996. Those who make a new claim to benefit will be taken on immediately. Existing cases will be taken on when there is a change of circumstances which affects maintenance or, if there is no such change, on a random basis.

Changes of circumstances do not affect the benefit payable to parents with care who receive family credit or disability working allowance since awards are fixed for six months. These cases will be asked to apply to the agency when they make a renewal claim—and are therefore new claimants—so take on of this group will be completed before the end of 1993.

We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which groups with incomes below income support levels are ineligible for housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: In the main, most people in registered residential care and nursing homes, and the majority of full-time students are ineligible, regardless of income.

Crisis Loan Claim

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the administration costs of a crisis loan claim.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to him on 21 April at columns 140-41.

Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what revised medical criteria will be used to define an individual's incapacity for work for the purpose of invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: No decisions have been made.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the total of suspended invalidity benefit payments has been withheld to date, pending the hearing of the appeal against the social security commissioner's decision; and how many women have had their benefit withheld in each constituency.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to whom the Occupational Pensions Board is responsible: whether it or its members are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Hague: The Occupational Pensions Board—OPB—is an independent statutory body established by the Social Security Act 1973. It is composed of a chairman, deputy chairman and up to 12 other members, appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The board has an executive office whose officials are made available by the Secretary of State.

The OPB is not subject to a surcharge, nor is it listed in schedule 2 to the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, as among the bodies subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. It is subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office under the National Audit Act 1983. The OPB is not subject to the provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, not to performance indicators, but is committed to the principles of the citizens charter. The board's constitution requires the chairman, deputy chairman and other members of the board to declare an interest, whether financial or otherwise, in any issue under consideration and to withdraw from the meeting when there is a serious conflict of interest.

Retirement Pension Ages

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his current estimate of the likely date of the hearing of the appeal against the social security commissioner's decision in relation to the incompatibility with European Community law of the different state retirement pension ages of men and women and its implication for access to invalidity benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The appeal against the commissioner's decision—CS/27/91—has been listed by the Court of Appeal for hearing on either 26 or 27 July. This case concerns the rate of invalidity pension payable to claimants over state pension age the upper age limit for entitlement to invalidity allowance. The compatibility with European Community law of different state pension ages for men and women is not an issue in the commissioner's decision. EC law permits unequal state pension ages. Other forms of discrimination in the benefits system are also permissible if they are necessarily linked to that difference.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many and what proportion of cases in each year since 1979 he and his predecessors have exercised their discretion outside the immigration rules where, on hearing an appeal under the Immigration Act 1971 the adjudicator has upheld the Home Secretary's decision to refuse indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom but made a recommendation for the exercise of such discretion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available. All recommendations made by adjudicators receive careful consideration.

Police

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many free copies of (a) the recent White Paper on the future of the police and (b) the report of the Sheehy inquiry have been made available to the superintendents' associations, the police federations, the trade unions and police associations representing officers in the (i) British Transport police, (ii) Ministry of Defence police, (iii) Atomic Energy police, (iv) Northern Ireland Airports police, (v) Royal Parks constabulary, (vi) Port of Tilbury police, (vii) Port of Dover police, (viii) Port of Liverpool police and (ix) Port of Bristol police;

(2) how many free copies of the White Paper on the future of the police have been made available to (a) the superintendents' associations and (b) the police federations of England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Twelve complimentary copies of the White Paper on Police Reform were sent to the Superintendents Association of England and Wales. Six complimentary copies were sent to both the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Police Federation of England and Wales. The proposals contained in the White Paper relate to the police service in England and Wales and are concerned primarily with reforms to police forces maintained under the Police Act 1964 and the Metropolitan and City of London police forces. The Superintendents Associations and the Police Federations of Scotland and Northern Ireland were therefore not provided with complimentary copies. Nor were the trade unions and associations representing officers in the other forces mentioned.

Each of the associations and forces mentioned received two complimentary copies of the report of the Sheehy inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards. The Superintendents Association of England and Wales subsequently requested, and received, a further 60 free copies.

Heathrow (Passenger Questioning)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many intending passengers for Northern Ireland have been detained for questioning at Heathrow in the past 10 years; how many were subsequently charged with terrorist-related offences; and how many have been convicted.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, a search of records by the Metropolitan police reveals that in 1992 a total of 1,627 people were asked, during examination under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 at Heathrow, to complete an embarkation card in accordance with paragraph 5 of schedule 5 to the Act. One passenger en route to Northern Ireland was detained under paragraph 6 of the schedule. He was not subsequently charged with a terrorist-related offence.

Belmarsh Prison

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the weekly cost of remanding an individual in Belmarsh prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 7 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the weekly cost of remanding an individual in Belmarsh prison.

The cost for 1992-93 is not yet available. It will be published in the Annual Report for 1992-93 on the work of the Prison Service in November 1993.

The 1991-92 figure for the average weekly cost of holding an individual in Belmarsh prison was £673. A rise in the average weekly population from 558 in 1991-92 to 732 in 1992-93 is expected to reduce this cost considerably.

Greater Manchester Chief Constable

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief constable for Greater Manchester; and what was discussed.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has not yet met the chief constable of Greater Manchester Police.

Drug Squads

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are now employed in regional crime squad drugs wings.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are currently 375 police officers employed in regional crime squad drugs wings.

Tourist Resorts (Crime)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about property-related crimes in tourist resorts.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Centrally held statistics of reported crime do not distinguish between tourist and other areas.

Rochester Row Police Station

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cells at Rochester Row police station are available to hold prisoners; how many people have been held in those cells for more than 24 hours during the past three months; what is the average June temperature in those cells at 5 am; whether heating pipes are, in summer, increasing the temperature in those cells; and how those cells are ventilated or cooled in summer.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are 10 cells and 12 detention rooms at Rochester Row police station. Not more than five prisoners have been held at Rochester Row for more than 24 hours between 1 April and 30 June 1993. The average temperature in the cells and detention rooms is not recorded. There are no heating pipes. Ventilation is by air brick.

Drug Traffickers

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest totals for assets confiscated from convicted drug traffickers and assets frozen pending trials for drug trafficking offences.

Mr. Maclean: For information regarding assets confiscated under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 27 May at col. 722.

The 1992 data will not be available until the autumn.

Information on assets frozen pending trials is not collected centrally.

Police (Stress-related Illness)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) custody officers, (b) custody sergeants and (c) rota sergeants have taken five or more days off work through stress-related illness in (i) North Wales and (b) Dyfed Powys police force areas in each year since 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally and could be collected from the forces in question only at disproportionate cost.

National Firearms Board

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 743, what progress is being made on establishing a national firearms board.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently considering whether to establish a new civilian firearms control board. A comprehensive revision of the original feasibility study which was circulated with the consultation paper last year is currently under way.

Crime Statistics

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the incidence of (a) burglary, (b) car theft and (c) assault for each year since 1990 for (i) Hammersmith and Fulham, (ii) Leicestershire, (iii) Derbyshire, (iv) Cleveland and (v) Greater Manchester.

Mr. Maclean: The available information relates to the numbers of notifiable offences of burglary and theft of a vehicle and is given in the table. Assault is now a summary offence and is not included in the notifiable offence series.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police

	Burglary			Theft of vehicle

Homicide

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 November 1992, Official Report, columns 104-5, if he will update the table for women homicide victims involving shotguns.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is given in the table.

Notes:

1. Offences currently recorded as homicide as at 14 September 1992.
2. The term "domestic" includes the following relationships of victim to suspect: son or daughter; parent; spouse; cohabitant or former spouse or cohabitant; other family; lover or former lover including spouse's lover or lover's spouse or other associate.

Information for 1992 is not yet available.

Art Smuggling

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the level of international art smuggling through London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The detection of attempted evasions of the United Kingdom's import and export regulations are matters for Her Majesty's Commissioners of Customs and Excise. The Government deplore the illegal export of works of art and other cultural goods and is working in international forums to reduce it.

A recently agreed EC directive provides for the restitution of cultural objects unlawfully removed from the territory of one member state to that of another. The Government are also participating in the drafting of a possible UNIDROIT convention on the restitution of stolen and illegally exported cultural objects.

The Government welcome the initiative by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to establish an artefacts classification and identification system, which has already led to the recovery of stolen works of art, and support the continuing use of Interpol to trace stolen objects abroad.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions for smuggling works of art were obtained in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: For England and Wales records held centrally from 1987 to 1989 show no prosecutions under the relevant sections of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979. Information collected centrally for 1990 and 1991 does not identify offences committed under the aforesaid Act from other summary offences.

Similar information is not collected centrally for Northern Ireland and is not separately identifiable for Scotland.

Icklingham Bronzes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what legal investigation is to be carried out by his Department into the case of the Icklingham bronzes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: After an investigation by Suffolk Constabulary the Crown Prosecution Service decided that there was insufficient evidence to charge anyone with criminal offences. The question of ownership of the Icklingham bronzes is now a matter for the civil courts and not something in which the Home Office can intervene.

Sheehy Inquiry

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the report of the Sheehy inquiry into "Police Responsibilities and Rewards" were released to the press before 9 am on Wednesday 30 June.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Metropolitan Police (Empty Property)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of empty residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham in the ownership of the Metropolitan police and the type of accommodation available; how long each property has been vacant; and what is the intended future use.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is as follows:

Property	Type	Period vacant (months)	Future use
16 Bearsted rise	House	3	Under offer[1]
Havelock house, Forest hill	Flat	27	Awaiting allocation[2]
Havelock house, Forest hill	Flat	11	Awaiting allocation[2]

Moore house, Willow way	Flat	21	Under disposal[3]
Moore house, Willow way	Flat	17	Under disposal[3]
Moore house, Willow way	Flat	12	Under disposal[3]

[1] "Under offer"—allocated to a police officer.
[2] "Awaiting allocation"—available for offer.
[3] "Under disposal"—the flats at Moore house are being sold to a local housing association.

Samuel Kulasingham and Premraj Sivalingham

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 635, on what date a police inquiry began into the evidence surrounding the conviction of Samuel Kulasingham and Premraj Sivalingham; when the evidence was completed; on what date it was presented to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The police were asked in April 1992 to make inquiries into allegations that Samuel Kulasingham and Premraj Sivalingham had been wrongfully convicted. A report of these inquiries was received in March 1993. After considering further representations which were received on 22 June from the solicitors acting for Mr. Kulasingham and Mr. Sivalingham, my right hon. and learned Friend decided on 5 July to refer the cases back to the Court of Appeal.

Health Care (Prisoners)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to publish the first report of the director of health care for prisoners and the Health Advisory Committee's commentary on the report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The report and commentary are published today. Copies are available from the Libraries of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Villages

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on arrangements made to co-ordinate policy between the Departments for Education, of the Environment and of Social Security, on the encouragement of village communities and village life.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Environment has overall policy responsibility for rural affairs in England and liaises with other Government Departments, including the Departments for Education and Social Security, on matters affecting the social and economic well-being of rural England, and matters affecting village communities. The Government's countryside agencies also have a statutory duty to advise the Government. In particular, the Rural Development Commission, which is sponsored by the Department of Environment, has a number of programmes directed specifically to the enhancement of village life.

EDUCATION

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Boswell: Information relating to those appointed to our non-departmental public bodies since 1988 who are members of the House of Lords is as follows. Appointments to these bodies are made solely on the basis of the aptitude, merit and suitability of the candidates concerned. Information relating to marital circumstances or possible party candidature for Parliament is not collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Name of NDPB and peer	Post	Remuneration	Duration of appointment
Council for National Academic Awards
Baroness MacFarlane	Member	—	4·5 years
Lord Pearson	Member	—	2 years
National Council for Educational Technology

Lord Butterworth	Member	£246 per day (P/time)	4 years
Universities Funding Council
Lord Chilver	Chairman	£14,000 per annum (P/time)	3 years
Visiting Committee of the Cranfield Institute of Technology
Lord Lewis	Chairman	—	10 years

Student Loans

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in what circumstances the student loan scheme extends to European community students attending universities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Boswell: European Community students may be eligible for a student loan if they have been ordinarily resident in the British islands for three years before the start of their course; or are refugees; or have established migrant worker status.

Student Unions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what account he took, in preparing his statement of 1 July on student unions, of the court judgment in the case of the university of Greenwich; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: In its plans for the reform of student unions, the Government took into account the scope for abuse that exists in the current arrangements, illustrated by the judgment in the case of the university of Greenwich. Our proposed reforms are intended to curb politically motivated activity and strengthen accountability by limiting the purposes for which institutions can pass public funds to their campus unions.

Class Sizes

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 23, if he will list the research studies from the United States of America related to the impact of class sizes which have been considered in his Department in the last four years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has noted the findings of the STAR project in Tennessee.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) how many households covered by a concessionary television licence are (a) living in a residential or nursing home and (b) living in a sheltered scheme as defined by the relevant concessionary licence scheme regulations;

(2) how many additional households would qualify for a concessionary television licence if the present scheme's definition of sheltered housing were replaced by the definition of sheltered housing in paragraph 10 of schedule 5 to the Housing Act 1985;

(3) how many householders enjoy the benefit of a concessionary television licence due to preserved rights; and how many of these live in (a) residential or nursing homes and (b) in sheltered schemes;

(4) how many additional households would be eligible for a concessionary television licence if the present requirement for all occupants of qualifying schemes to be both tenants and fully retired persons of state pensionable age or disabled were replaced by a requirement that only (a) 90 per cent. and (b) 75 per cent. of occupants need satisfy this criterion.

Mr. Brooke: I understand from TV Licensing that 490,203 households hold a concessionary television licence by virtue of meeting the criteria laid down in the current regulations (SI 1991/436). Of these, 86,582 households are in residential homes, nursing homes and almshouses, while 403,621 are in sheltered housing schemes managed by a local authority or housing association. A further 171,415 households qualify for preserved rights to a concessionary licence, although their accommodation no longer qualifies under the regulations. Statistics on preserved rights are not broken down by the type of accommodation occupied.

The remaining information requested by the hon. Member is not available and could not readily be estimated.

National Lottery

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether the licensing structure he proposes for the national lottery will require retailers or advertisers to have a licence under the Bill; and what effect those arrangements will have on the ability of Post Office Counters Limited to bid to sell tickets.

Mr. Sproat: The references in the National Lottery etc. Bill to the "promotion" of lotteries relate to the running of lottery games.

The Bill provides that one body may be licensed to run the lottery business as a whole, and that the same, or additional, bodies may be licensed to run lottery games which are part of the national lottery. Any body licensed to run a game must have a contract with the single main licence holder. Licences are to be issued by the director general of the national lottery. Any other company or individual which provided a service to the lottery operator, for example by printing tickets, selling tickets or producing or displaying advertisments, would operate under a contract with the licence holder, and would not be directly subject to a licence condition.

However, such a company, just as anyone else in the United Kingdom, would be required to abide by regulations which the Secretary of State will be able to make under clause 12 of the Bill (for example, governing the age at which a person may sell or be sold lottery tickets).

If Post Office Counters Limited [POCL] wished to enter into an agreement with a licence holder to sell lottery tickets, a licence would not be required. POCL would require the formal consent of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to compete for such work. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms confirmed on 26 November 1992 that such a consent would be forthcoming, on condition that the Bill received Royal Assent.

HEALTH

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are set down for the maintenance of workplace child care facilities for health service staff where facilities are provided for a number of different health units by one health unit if that unit acquires trust status.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for local decision.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to improve child care facilities for NHS staff;

(2) how many day nurseries are provided for NHS staff; and what are their capacities and occupancies.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for individual national health service authorities and trusts to provide for the child care needs of staff in the light of local recruitment and retention needs. Detailed information on the level of provision is not available centrally.

HIV and AIDS

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how the figure of £150,000 as the maximum grant available to organisations in the HIV-AIDS field was calculated; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what new areas of work will now receive funding using money released by the reduction on grants previously made to HIV-AIDS organisations over the sum of £150,000.

Mr. Sackville: The substantial maximum grant of £150,000 provides scope for significant help to be given to a wide range of HIV and AIDS organisations. It also allows a balance to be struck between HIV and AIDS and other health priorities for example within the mental health field. The decision should also be seen in the context of the substantial sums made available to the HIV and AIDS voluntary sector—nearly £12 million since 1985-86.

GP Contracts (Health Promotion)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Streeter) of 14 June, Official Report, columns 429-30, what estimate has been made of the volume increase in prescribing resulting from the Department's new initiative to encourage health promotion by general practitioners to improve prevention of coronary heart disease and strokes and to set up asthma and diabetes management programmes; and what assessment has been made of the consequent savings in other health care costs, such as hospital treatment, as a result of these new programmes.

Mr. Sackville: As part of our "Health of the Nation" initiative, some 90 per cent. of general practitioners are planning to run health promotion programmes with the aim of encouraging people to adopt healthier lifestyles and thus to reduce morbidity and mortality. It is not possible to quantify what effect this new initiative may have on prescribing or other health care costs separately from other health care improvements.

Cancelled Operations

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the number of hospital operations which have been cancelled within three days of the agreed date for the operation in each of the four regional health authorities covering the Greater London area during the last 12 months.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Deaths (Firearms)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) suicides and (b) suicides of people under 16 years involved the use of (i) shotguns and (ii) other firearms in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Numbers of suicides involving firearms (ICD E955) in England and Wales from 1979 to 1992

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Goodlad: The information requested in points (a) to (d) is as follows:

(a) None

(b) (i) Lord Desai, Member of Marshall Aid Commemoration Commission, appointed August 1992 for three years, no salary payable.

(ii) Lord Chorley, British Council Deputy Chairman, appointed April 1991 for three years, no salary payable.

(iii) Baroness Flather, Governor, Commonwealth Institute, appointed January 1993 for three years, no salary payable.

(c) Lady Howe JP, Governor of the Westminster Foundation for Democracy, appointed March 1993 for three years, no salary payable.

(d) This information is not held centrally (and could be provided only at disproportionate cost).

EC Council of Ministers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The following meetings are planned:

12 July—ECOFIN Council
19-20 July—Foreign Affairs Council
19-20 July—Agriculture Council
22 July—Budget Council

The following subjects are likely to be discussed:

ECOFIN Council—12 July
Multilateral surveillance
Follow-up to Copenhagen European Council

Foreign Affairs Council—19-20 July
Commission opinions on Cyprus and Malta
Structural Funds
Relations with European Parliament
GATT Uruguay Round
Right to vote in and eligibility for EP elections
Report on EC-Japan Summit
Dual Use of Goods
G7 Summit follow-up
Ex-Yugoslavia
TACIS
Relations with the FSU

Agriculture Council—19-20 July
Greek islands (5946/93; 6981/93; 7184/93)
GATT agriculture (poss) (5813/93; 6612/93)
SLOM compensation (milk quotas) (5713/93)
Minced meat quality (poss) (6953/93)

Budget Council—22 July
First reading of EC Budget for 1994

The ECOFIN Council will meet on 12 July to have its usual six-monthly discussion of multilateral surveillance. The Council will also consider follow-up work arising from the conclusions of the Copenhagen European Council.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 19-20 July to discuss the Commission opinions on Cyprus and Malta, a Dual Use of Goods regulation, the GATT Uruguay round and structural funds. Relations with the European Parliament and voting rights in European Parliament elections will also be discussed. Finally, discussions will take place on the report on the EC-Japan summit, ex-Yugoslavia, relations with the FSU, PECOS and the follow up to the G7 summit.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 19-20 July. Ministers will discuss Greek islands and SLOM compensation. They may also discuss agricultural aspects of the GATT negotiations and minced meat.

The Budget Council will meet on 22 July to establish the Council's first reading of the EC draft budget for 1994.

Draft EC Legislation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many items of draft EC legislation, within the categories listed in the House of Commons demand form for European printed papers, are currently being progressed by the European Commission.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The precise information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the Commission's work programme for 1993-94 (SEC(93)58 final) and its legislative programme for 1993 (COM(93)43 final), deposited in the House of Commons on 18 February and 1 March respectively, show the items on which the Commission intends to bring forward proposals.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tools for Self Reliance

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on help given to the Tools for Self Reliance Group for Zimbabwe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Tools for Self Reliance has not yet applied to the ODA for assistance. As I indicated in my reply to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 22 March at column 607, it is welcome to apply.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the terms of reference of the review of aid and trade provision and a list of the non-governmental organisations and commercial organisations that were contracted.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The review of aid and trade provision (ATP) covered the scheme's objectives, criteria, efficiency and effectiveness, value for money and management. It also considered the relationship between ATP and export credits, and the international rules.

All companies which had undertaken projects supported by ATP since the scheme began in 1977 were contacted, along with a number of other companies with outstanding applications and interested trade associations.

Bosnia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to ensure the security of humanitarian supplies to Bosnia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The security of humanitarian aid supplies to Bosnia is kept under continuous review in concert with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees who coordinates the international community's response to the humanitarian crisis and the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) who are responsible for providing protection for the aid convoys.

Malawi

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has towards gradual restoration of development aid to Malawi in the light of constitutional and political developments following the referendum.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 6 July 1993]: The constitutional and political developments since the referendum are encouraging. We are reviewing our policy on aid to Malawi, taking account of these developments and progress on economic reform.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Association Grants

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what definition of affordability for housing association rents he uses in making decisions on the level of housing association grants.

Sir George Young: The Government do not define affordability. In setting grant levels each year, I make a judgment based on various factors. In this I am assisted by a Housing Corporation model which enables us to calculate an affordability ratio representing the average model rent, at certain levels of cost and grant, as a proportion of earned income after tax, excluding housing benefit. The affordability ratio resulting from the grant rates set has remained unchanged since 1989-90 at around 35 per cent. of a working housing association household's net income before housing benefit.

The model, however, is only a mechanism to test the impact of changes in grant rates. It is for housing associations to consider what rents are affordable taking account of all local circumstances. Outturn rents show that there is a considerable gap between the rents implied by the model and actual Sellafield rents on the ground.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State? for the Environment what requests he has received from the European Commission on the application by British Nuclear Fuels to construct a mixed oxide nuclear fuels fabrication plant at Sellafield in regard to its requirement to be covered by a full environmental impact assessment under the 1985 EC directive.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Housing Associations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of reduced rates of housing association grant on the ability of households with incomes just above the housing benefit eligibility level to afford housing association rents.

Sir George Young: I have received advice on this and other issues, which I am currently considering.

DSS Hostels

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider introducing planning regulations to limit the spread of bed-and-breakfast accommodation occupied mainly by claimants of income support.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities continue to make progress in reducing their use of bed-and-breakfast accommodation. My right hon. Friend is reluctant to use the planning system to impose restrictions on where people choose to live. There are no immediate plans to amend the Use Classes Order 1987, although its operation is kept under continuous review.

Priority Waste Streams Initiative

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the European project priority waste streams initiative.

Mr. Yeo: Six priority waste streams projects have been launched by the European Commission. In a note to members of the various project groups issued on 1 July, the Commission stated that in the light of budgetary constraints, it had been decided to concentrate efforts on the work of the groups dealing with used tyres, chlorinated solvents, end of life vehicles and health care waste. These projects had been planned to finish towards the end of 1993 and early 1994. The outcome of the projects will be evaluated and used in guiding decisions about work on the remaining projects dealing with demolition waste and electronic and electrical waste.

The United Kingdom has participated fully in this work, which is aimed at devising Community-wide action to reduce the environmental impact of difficult wastes. My Department has provided the project leadership for the project on health care waste; the project group had its fourth meeting on 1 and 2 July and is accelerating its programme of work so as to be in a position to produce some results by the end of the year.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy for the management of radioactive waste in Britain with particular reference to spent advanced gas-cooled reactor fuel.

Mr. Yeo: The latest statement of Government policy for radioactive waste management is set out in chapter 15 of the 1990 White Paper "This Common Inheritance", and updated in chapter 14 of the 1991 first anniversary report and chapter 15 of the 1992 second anniversary report. Spent advanced gas-cooled reactor fuel is not a waste but a resource which may be reprocessed.

Local Government Commission

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to give effect by order to the recommendations of the Local Government Commission without modification.

Mr. Baldry: The Local Government Commission has submitted its final report on only one area, the Isle of Wight, and the Secretary of State is still considering the recommendations. Final reports on other first tranche areas have yet to be submitted by the commission.

THORP

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what planning conditions or consents relating to any part of the BNFL plant at Sellafield there are which assume or require operation of the proposed thermal oxide reprocessing plant;

(2) how many planning conditions or consents relating to any part of the BNFL plant at Sellafield will require revision or renewal if the proposed thermal oxide reprocessing plant does not operate.

Mr. Yeo: Information about planning permissions issued in respect of BNFL's Sellafield plant is not held centrally.

Pollution

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times in the last 12 months Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has monitored airborne pollution in Barrow and Furness; and what were the results.

Mr. Yeo: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has not monitored airborne pollution in Barrow and Furness in the last 12 months. The monitoring of air quality is the responsibility of the local authority.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish equal opportunities policy guidelines to companies bidding to run Government services contracted out to the private sector.

Mr. Gummer: EC Council Directive 92/50 lays down criteria for the award of contracts but prohibits the imposition of any non-commercial criteria. Nevertheless, companies invited to tender will be asked to state how equal opportunities policies would be reflected in the performance of their duties. In addition, the terms and conditions of any contract will include a requirement that the contractor shall not discriminate unlawfully within the meaning and scope of the Race Relations Act 1976 or the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 and 1986.

Redundant Workers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from workers previously employed by local authorities who have been made redundant after their work has been contracted out to private companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend receives a great many representations about local authority compulsory competitive tendering matters, including representations from private firms which have won contracts to provide services and taken on new staff, as well as from former council employees.

He also receives representations from members of the public who are grateful for the improvement in services which CCT has brought about.

Waste Management

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider proposed regulations to make exempt from waste management licensing suppliers of automotive paints storing waste flammable solvents who hold a petroleum licence.

Mr. Yeo: [holding answer 6 July 1993]: My Department issued consultation papers on waste management licensing in August 1992. These included draft regulations prescribing certain exemptions from the need to have a waste management licence. We did not then propose an exemption for waste solvents. Waste flammable solvents are categorised as "special waste" under the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980, and are likely in due course to be categorised as "hazardous" under the EC Directive on Hazardous Waste (91/689/EEC). That directive constrains our freedom to exempt the management of such waste from the need to have a licence. This may only be done where the waste is destined for recovery. We have received representations from the vehicle paint spraying industry about the possibility of exempting the storage of small quantities of waste solvent destined for recovery. We will be considering their case very carefully in the context of finalising the waste management licensing regulations.

Blackwall River Crossing

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what environmental impact assessments have been obtained in connection with the proposed third river crossing at Blackwall in Tower Hamlets.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 29 June at columns 404-5.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he has made for compensation to property owners in the neighbourhood of the Blackwall tunnel, Tower Hamlets for loss of value to their properties blighted by the third river crossing proposals.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

Part I of the Land Compensation Act 1973 makes provision for compensation in such circumstances. In addition, the London borough of Tower Hamlets has been invited to consider measures to mitigate the effect of the crossing on local residents.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

THORP

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the Government will prepare and publish a study of the alternative ways in which staff involved in the construction of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant could be re-employed on alternative cleaning up work on the Sellafield site or on work elsewhere.

Mr. Eggar: No. British Nuclear Fuels plc has advised me that operating the thermal oxide reprocessing plant is expected to support some 2,000 permanent jobs in West Cumbria. This major employment benefit is in addition to the employment arising from the decommissioning programme at Sellafield which is already under way and is appropriate to the requirements of the site.

Isobutyl Nitrate

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ban the sale of isobutyl nitrate poppers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government continue to keep this matter under review in order to access whether measures to control the misuse of isobutyl nitrate poppers might be appropriate in the future.

EC Energy Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the matters discussed and decisions taken at the Energy Council in Luxembourg on 25 June.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on 6 July, Official Report, columns 106-7.

Steel Imports

Ms Gordon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the import quota for steel from the Commonwealth of Independent States for the European Community for 1993; what proportion of this quota has been allocated to the United Kingdom; and what is the expected United Kingdom quota for 1993.

Mr. Needham: The European Community quota of 321,000 tonnes for steel imports in 1993 from the former Soviet Union (excluding the Baltic states) covers only heavy plate, coils, other flat-rolled products, beams and wire rods. All other products are liberalised. The quota is administered in three tranches, the distribution within each of which depends on the number of licence applications made and on past trade patterns. United Kingdom importers' share in total of the first and second tranches is 15,541 tonnes. It is not yet possible to determine what the total quantities available to United Kingdom importers for the year as a whole will be.

Research and Development

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those companies based in north Staffordshire which have received Government help with investment in research and development.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government offer assistance for research and development in a variety of forms from more than one Department. The details requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the citizens advice bureaux on the funding requirements of their advice service.

Mr. McLoughlin: The funding of individual citizens advice bureaux is a matter for local authorities. The Department is responsible for the funding of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and Citizens Advice Scotland, which provide support services to local bureaux. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms met representatives of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux twice in the past year, on 12 October 1992, when funding for the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux was one of several issues discussed, and on 24 March 1993 when the issue of funding was not raised.

Computer Imports

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of electronic computers supplied by imports.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom production of electronic computers and parts in 1991 was £6·4 billion compared with domestic sales of £7·5 billion. Exports were £5·8 billion which accounted for 90 per cent. of United Kingdom manufacturers' sales. Imports were £6·8 billion, of which 37 per cent. was attributed to parts. This gives an apparent import penetration of 91 per cent. It is likely that many of the imported computers were subsequently re-exported, but separate figures for re-exports are not available.

High-technology Industries

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives he plans for the improvement of high-technology British industries.

Mr. McLoughlin: Our policies contribute to high technology as well as other industries. In addition, as outlined in the recent Science and Technology White Paper, and my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade's statement of 26 May, Official Report, columns 583-85, the Government are mounting a technology foresight programme, with the Office of Science and Technology in the lead and substantial assistance from DTI. This will establish priorities among generic technologies and encourage industrialists and academics to develop clear strategies for the contribution of emerging science to high technology industry. DTI will facilitate access to overseas technology and provide technology and innovation consultancy through the diagnostic and brokerage services planned to succeed the consultancy initiative.

Insurance Companies

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has about United Kingdom life insurance companies proposing to transfer business to Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The International Financial Services Centre, established in Dublin under EC state aid rules, offers certain tax incentives for financial services business conducted with non-residents. I am aware that one United Kingdom assurance company has set up business additionally in the centre. However, the benefits offered by the centre, in so far as the life assurance industry is concerned, affect only a narrow range of products, and I have received no indication that United Kingdom life assurance companies generally are proposing to transfer business there.

Power Stations

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what special provisions apply to the proceeds accruing to National Power or PowerGen arising from the closure of any power station subsequent to privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: All the privatised electricity companies are subject to provisions which, above certain thresholds, entitle the Government to half the gain resulting from property disposals. No payment is due from the disposal of a specialised property such as a power station as a going concern, provided that it continues in operational use until 31 March 2000.

Quangos (Appointments)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which the former hon. Member represented.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is as follows:

Name	Post	Salary	Duration	Party
John Corrie	Chairman of the Transport Users Consultative Committee for Scotland	£6,310	6 years	Conservative
Robin Hodgson	Member of the West Midlands Industrial Development Board	Unpaid	5 years	Conservative
Charles Longbottom	Non-Executive Director of British Shipbuilders	£5,000	5 years	Conservative
Sir Julian Ridsdale	Member of the Simpler Trade Procedures Board	Unpaid	2 years	Conservative

Regulations

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the terms of reference for his Department's inquiry into unnecessary regulations.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The seven deregulation task forces have the following terms of reference.

To advise Ministers on priorities for the repeal or simplification of existing regulations and enforcement methods so as to minimise the costs on business; to advise Ministers on the best way of developing and maintaining consultation on the introduction and enforcement of new regulations including those arising from EC measures; bearing in mind the consideration of public health, safety and security which underlie the regulatory system.

Nuclear Review

Mr. McGrady: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he will take to ensure that the Government's 1993 nuclear review is wide-ranging and comprehensive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The scope, timing and format of the review of the future prospects for nuclear power are under consideration within Government. A further announcement will be made in due course.

Logic Control Systems Ltd

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to bring disqualification proceedings in the case of the move of Logic Control Systems Ltd of Clowne, Derbyshire into liquidation or to make an application under section 7(2) of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 for leave to extend the period for taking such disqualification proceedings.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: On present information, it is the Secretary of State's intention to commence disqualification proceedings against the principal director of Logic Control Systems Limited (In Liquidation) by 19 July 1993.

RECHAR

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's policy on the proposal for a second RECHAR; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 30 June 1993] I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Cummings) on 29 June, Official Report, column 439.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions his Department has (a) rejected and (b) required amendment of corporate plans produced by BNFL.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 June 1993]: My Department discusses the corporate plans produced by British Nuclear Fuels plc with the company and comments on them as appropriate.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library the report prepared by PA Consultants on the future of the Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 June 1993]: Yes. I have today placed copies of the report in the Library of the House.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines his Department has introduced concerning visits by hon. Members to his Department's executive agencies.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 June 1993]: Each case is assessed in the light of the particular circumstances at the time. Where appropriate, Ministers should act as host to hon. Members in order to assist on matters of Government policy.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC Convergence Criteria

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to set policy in the medium term by reference to the convergence criteria of the treaty of Maastricht.

Mr. Nelson: There is a long-established practice in the United Kingdom of setting economic policy in a medium term framework. The Government's economic strategy, as set out in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", is based on the principles of low inflation, stable monetary conditions and sound public finances. The convergence criteria are designed to achieve the same objectives.

Decommissioning Levy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contribution has been made to date to the national fund by the former Central Electricity Generating Board, Nuclear Electric and Scottish Nuclear from their decommissioning levy; and what benefits accrue from this investment to the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Nelson: In England and Wales, under orders made by the President of the Board of Trade, the regional electricity companies—RECs—are obliged to contract for a certain amount of non-fossil fuel generating capacity. Most of this is nuclear capacity owned and operated by Nuclear Electric. The additional costs to the regional electricity companies of meeting this obligation are met by a fossil fuel levy on consumers, set in 1993-94 at 10 per cent.

Revenue to Nuclear Electric from selling electricity in the market and from the premium paid by the RECs and financed by the levy reduces the company's net external financing requirement. The impact of the arrangements to support non-fossil fuel generation is therefore to reduce the overall public sector borrowing requirement, although the precise impact cannot sensibly be calculated as it depends on the assumptions made about how the additional costs of non-fossil fuel generation would have otherwise been met.

Public Expenditure

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the control total for public expenditure in 1994-95 of restraining public sector pay to an increase of (a) 0 per cent., (b) 2 per cent., (c) 3 per cent., (d) 4 per cent. and (e) the latest estimate of the rate of inflation which will be used for the annual uprating of pensions and benefits.

Mr. Nelson: None. The Cabinet agreed on 17 June that the new control total in 1994-95 would be set by sticking to existing ceilings. Within these ceilings, a responsible approach to public sector pay will ensure the best outcome in terms of service delivery.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing (a) the proportion that public spending represented of the gross domestic product and (b) the level of unemployment in each year since 1976.

Mr. Nelson: The latest figures for general Government expenditure, excluding privatisation proceeds, as a percentage of money GDP are shown in table 2B.1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". The Central Statistical Office will be publishing revised figures for general Government expenditure in the July edition of "Financial Statistics".

Figures for the level of unemployment are shown in "Economic Trends Annual Supplement" table 21 and "Economic Trends" table 20.

Financial Advisers Commissions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to make his decision on the Office of Fair Trading report on disclosures of commissions for independent and tied financial advisers.

Mr. Nelson: As soon as is compatible with proper consideration of the issues and representations received during the consultation period.

Employment Changes

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in which commercial sectors the Inland Revenue has identified the greatest movement (a) from schedule D to schedule E and (b) from schedule E to schedule D.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that this information is not available. But looking at the total work force, the proportion that are self-employed and paying tax under schedule D has risen from 7 per cent. in 1978-79 to 10 per cent. in 1992-93.

Tax Inspectors

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many trained Inland Revenue tax inspectors were working for the Inland Revenue in each year since 1979; and how many were working in the areas of (a) capital gains tax, (b) schedule D tax, (c) corporation tax, (d) PAYE and (e) national insurance contributions in each year.

Mr. Dorrell: Excluding inspectors employed on central administration and in specialist offices, the table sets out the total numbers of Inland Revenue staff in the Department's inspector grades working within its network of local offices for each year since 1978-79 and how many were working in the areas of (a) capital gains tax, (b) schedule D tax, (c) corporation tax, and (d) schedule E tax in each year. Under (d) figures have been provided for schedule E tax rather than PAYE, as PAYE is simply a mechanism for collecting schedule E tax. Inspector resource usage on national insurance contribution work is incidental to mainstream tax work. It is not separately recorded.

Year	Total	Capital gains	Schedule D tax	Corporation tax	Schedule E tax
1978-79	5,651	343	2,858	1,397	1,054
1979-80	5,654	343	2,860	1,397	1,054
1980-81	5,553	337	2,808	1,372	1,035
1981-82	5,421	329	2,742	1,340	1,011
1982-83	5,381	326	2,721	1,330	1,003
1983-84	5,497	333	2,780	1,358	1,025
1984-85	5,377	326	2,719	1,329	1,003
1985-86	5,440	330	2,751	1,344	1,014
1986-87	5,587	339	2,826	1,381	1,042
1987-88	5,788	351	2,927	1,430	1,079
1988-89	6,144	356	3,154	1,511	1,123
1989-90	6,365	370	3,284	1,563	1,148
1990-91	6,624	382	3,429	1,652	1,161
1991-92	6,737	374	3,434	1,725	1,205
1992-93	6,808	372	3,546	1,721	1,170

Child Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the savings would be of taxing child benefit at the higher rate.

Mr. Dorrell: If child benefit were added to the father's —or lone mother's—taxable income and the part of it which came above the basic rate limit was taxed at 40 per cent., the revenue yield at 1993-94 levels would be about £250 million. The equivalent yield if it were added to the mother's—or lone father's—taxable income would be about £30 million.

TRANSPORT

Railways Directorate

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff have been employed in the railways directorate (railways 1 and railways 2) (a) in grades 1 to 7 and (b) in total.

Mr. Freeman: The number of staff employed in the Railways Directorate at 1 April this year, and in the four preceding years, in grades 3 to 7, as well as the total number of staff, is set out in the following table.

	Grade 3	Grade 5	Grade 6	Grade 7	Total Staff (all grades)
1 April 1989
Railways 1	1	3	0	9	40
1 April 1990
Railways 1	1	4	2	10	47
1 April 1991
Railways 1	1	4	1	12	54
1 April 1992
Railways 1	1	5	1	13	54
Railways 2	1	3	0	4	43
1 April 1993
Railways 1	1	4	1	11	57
Railways 2	1	5	0	10	47

Staff at grade 1, the permanent secretary, and grade 2, deputy secretary, have wider responsibilities which go beyond the Railways Directorate.

A13

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what toxic waste, asbestos or related material has been excavated over the past two months during the course of construction and related works on the Wennington-Mar Dyke section of the part of the new A13 road stretching one mile either side of the boundary of the borough of Thurrock with the London borough of Havering.

Mr. Norris: On the Heathway-Wennington section, laboratory analysis continues of the samples collected for the chemical ground investigation. The exact content of the samples will not be certain until the results are available and these will be placed in the Library.

On the Wennington-Mar Dyke section, no toxic waste or asbestos was excavated. All other arisings were deposited at suitably licensed landfill sites in accordance with the latest regulations.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who was responsible for surveying and supervising the extraction of materials excavated over the past two months on that section of the Wennington-Mar Dyke section of the new A13 road stretching one mile either side of the boundary of the borough of Thurrock with the London borough of Havering.

Mr. Norris: On the Heathway-Wennington section, only samples were removed for analysis from pits and boreholes and all other materials were replaced. On the Wennington-Mar Dyke section, the work was supervised by the Department's consultants W. S. Atkins.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what quantity of materials extracted as part of the construction of the Wennington-Mar Dyke section of the new A13 road stretching one mile either side of the boundary of the borough of Thurrock with the London borough of Havering has been deposited in (a) Aveley No. 2 pit and (b) Aveley No. 3 pit; and what was the nature of those materials.

Mr. Norris: On the Heathway-Wennington section, only samples have been removed for analysis and no material deposited elsewhere.

On the Wennington-Mar Dyke section, approximately 1,500 cu m of material was excavated for the advance works contract. Less than 500 cu m was landfill refuse material which was deposited in Aveley No. 2 pit.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requirements exist for a chemist, or other comparable analyst, to witness the excavation of materials of the nature of those moved as part of the construction of the Wennington-Mardyke section of the new A13 road stretching one mile either side of the boundary of the borough of Thurrock with the London borough of Havering; and which such officials and for what occasion and periods were present in the case of that road section.

Mr. Norris: On the Heathway-Wennington section of the proposed A13, an extensive chemical ground survey was carried out. A copy of the results will be placed in the Library of the House when they are available. Trial pits and boreholes were dug along the line of the proposed new road east of the London to Tilbury railway and across the marshes. Appropriately qualified personnel, including chemists, supervised the field work.

On the Wennington-Mardyke section, the Department would consider, if appropriate, the appointment of a chemist or other analyst to witness the excavation of landfill materials on the road works contract. A chemist was not present during the recently completed advance works contract. The work involved some compaction of the landfill for part of a length of future temporary road diversion.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the results of the geological and other surveys showing the composition of the soil and ground along the Wennington-Mardyke section of the new A13 road; and what details are held by his Department that relate to the previous dumping of waste along this section.

Mr. Norris: The results of the geological and other surveys in respect of the Wennington Mardyke section of the proposed A13 run to 23 volumes. It would not be practicable to place these in the Library. They may be viewed on request and by arrangement by writing to the Department's consultants, W. S. Atkins at Woodcote Grove, Ashley road, Epsom, Surrey KT18 5BW, telephone 0372 726140.

The infill of the mineral extraction pits was uncontrolled and was carried out during the 1950s and 1960s. W. S. Atkins carried out a desk survey of the mineral workings in 1987 which included information provided by Essex county council, Thurrock borough council and London borough of Havering.

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provisions he has made in the railway privatisation proposals to ensure a high and sustained level of investment is maintained in infrastructure enhancements or renewal and the provision of new rolling stock and traction.

Mr. Freeman: From April 1994 Railtrack will have the lead responsibility for investment in track and related infrastructure and will make charges to operators allowing it to recoup investment expenditure and earn a rate of return on it. The Government will provide indirect support through subsidy for franchised passenger services, and direct support for investment in schemes not earning an adequate financial return but which provide a satisfactory cost-benefit return when wider benefits are taken into account.

In last year's autumn statement the Government gave approval to British Rail to lease £150 million worth of new rolling stock. This and the establishment of three publicly owned rolling stock companies will encourage the development of a leasing market. The Government's intention is that provision of rolling stock should in future pass increasingly to the private sector and so be outside the constraints of public expenditure.

Clause 46 of the Railways Bill is also designed to encourage investment in railway assets with an economic life longer than a franchise.

Inter-rail

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had concerning the future of Inter-rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Discussions have taken place between British Rail and my advisers. As to future arrangements, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the Member for Cunninghame, North on 25 June, Official Report, column 282.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he will take to minimise the damage to Eltham and to Oxleas Wood of the road to the proposed east London river crossing.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government remain fully committed to meeting the need for a new road link across the Thames in east London as a key element in the strategy to regenerate the east Thames corridor. However, following a reappraisal we have been undertaking, the Transport Minister for London and I have decided that the current scheme, designed and chosen some time ago, fails to meet the high environmental standards we now apply to new road schemes.

We have therefore decided not to proceed with current plans. We shall examine alternative solutions which meet the same strategic objectives, but which will have less impact on the local environment. We will bring forward new proposals for the scheme and in so doing will explore opportunities for greater involvement by the private sctor and a design competition for the bridge over the Thames, as suggested by the Royal Fine Arts Commission.

This decision is quite independent of the infraction proceedings instigated by the European Commission. The Government remain clear that the environmental impact assessment directive should not apply to projects which were in the pipeline when it came into force, and it will continue to contest the proceedings brought by the Commission.

Motorways

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made for a system of permits for the use of motorways; and when he plans to publish his conclusions.

Mr. Key: The conclusions of the study that the Government have so far made of the use of permits for charging for motorways are included in the Green Paper "Paying for Better Motorways', Cm 2200, published on 26 May. Copies are available in the Library.

Network SouthEast

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what has been the percentage increase in fares in cash terms in Network SouthEast over the whole period since May 1979; and what was the percentage increase in the retail prices index over the same period;

(2) what has been the percentage increase in fares in Network SouthEast in real terms since May 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The overall cash increase in Network SouthEast fares between 1979 and 1992-93 was 234 per cent. The retail prices index increased by 146 per cent. over the same period, giving an overall fare increase in real terms of 36 per cent.

School Buses

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to lower the age limit at which three children may share a double bus seat.

Mr. Key: The Department is currently considering, with the Department of Education, various aspects of school transport, including the Public Service Vehicles (Carrying Capacity) Regulations—the three-for-two concession. It would not be right to anticipate the outcome of this work.

Residential Property

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham are owned by his Department; and if he will publish a list of such residential properties which are currently empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant and the intended future use.

Mr. Norris: My Department owns 22 residential properties transferred from the London residuary body in 1987. These were acquired for trunk road improvements and all are currently let. In addition five residential properties were transferred to the Department from the National Bus Company on its dissolution in 1991. These are currently vacant, three are to be demolished to enable a housing development to take place and two are required for the trunk road improvements. Consideration is being given to the possibility of letting them in the meantime. It is not my Department's practice to publish the addresses of vacant properties.

The Department also owns 14 commercial properties, with integral living accommodation, all acquired for road schemes. Nine of these are let on a commercial basis and attempts are being made to find suitable commercial tenants for the other five.

Repeater Signs

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the need to approve the use of repeater signs within 30 mph speed limit areas.

Mr. Key [holding answer 5 July 1993]: There have been a number of such requests. I am currently considering the wider problem of vehicle speeds in villages.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Forged Letter

Sir David Steel: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his oral statement of 30 June, Official Report, column 975, if he will make a further statement on the source of the forged letter in the name of the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale; what inquiries were made as to the origins of the notepaper used; and what disciplinary action was taken against the offender.

The Attorney-General: The letter to which the right hon. Member refers was produced by an officer of the City of London police engaged on the Bank of Credit and Commerce International inquiry. It was a misguided April fools joke intended to be confined to those employed on the inquiry and not designed in any way to influence any aspect of the investigation.

Disciplinary procedures relating to police officers are the responsibility of the chief officer of the force concerned. In October 1992 I suggested to the right hon. Member that if he wished to pursue the disciplinary aspect he should contact the Commissioner of the City of London police.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many charters make specific reference to the needs of disabled people.

Mr. Davis: I should like to correct a minor error to the answer given to this question on Monday 8 March 1993 at column 657 by my hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson), the then Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science. On that date the number of charters that made specific reference to the needs of people with disabilities was 24, not 25. I apologise for this error.

Today, 27 out of 32 published charters make a reference to people with disabilities.

WALES

Minority Languages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further deliberations have taken place on the subject of the United Kingdom ratifying the European charter on minority languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Government Departments with an interest in the European charter for regional or minority languages have been considering its implications for the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom decision on ratification must take into account the situation of each of the indigenous minority languages spoken within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to a ratification of the European charter on minority languages with a derogation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Article 21 of the European charter for regional or minority languages states that reservations to the charter may be made only to one or more of paragraphs 2 to 5 of article 7. The United Kingdom Government will announce their response to the charter in due course.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the total salaries paid in 1993-94 to (a) chief executives, (b) executive members and (c) non-executive members of hospital trust boards in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on salaries paid to chief executives and executive members of NHS trust boards is not held centrally but will be included in the accounts and annual report which each trust is required to make publicly available.

Trust chairmen receive remuneration of between £15,125 and £19,285 dependent upon the level of income of the trust. Each non-executive member receives remuneration of £5,000 per annum. In addition, travel and other expenses may be payable.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to advertise all NHS hospital trust (a) chief executive posts, (b) chairs and (c) non-executive posts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am advertising for nominations for inclusion in the register the Welsh Office holds of candidates suitable for public appointment. This will enable anyone interested in undertaking work of public service, including chairmanship or non-executive membership of an NHS trust, to put their name forward for consideration. The post of chief executive must be advertised except when a trust is first established.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the mechanisms that he has put in place or proposes for the patients of general practitioner fund holders to have an involvement in decisions about their doctors' health care purchasing priorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is generally recognised that GPs as the gatekeepers of the NHS are uniquely placed to improve patients' choice of good quality services. It would be inappropriate for me to interfere with this relationship.

Unemployment

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the current level of unemployment among manufacturing workers in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the current level of unemployment among workers in the service industries in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Information is not available in the form requested. However, labour force surveys conducted between December 1992 and February 1993 reported that 20 per cent. of the 138,000 unemployed had a previous job in the manufacturing sector and 41 per cent. in the service sector. These percentages are likely to be underestimates, because 14 per cent. of unemployed respondents did not give a previous industry.

These figures are based on the International Labour Organisation definition of unemployment. Labour force survey estimates, being derived from a sample of the population, are subject to sampling variability.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of TEC leavers went on to secure full employment from each of the TECs in Wales last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The latest information available for leavers securing full-time employment is for the period September 1991 to August 1992 and is set out in the table. I encourage the training and enterprise councils to continue to improve performance in training for young people and the unemployed.

Percentage of leavers[1] going into full-time employment[2]

TEC	Youth training[3]	Employment training
Mid Glamorgan	43	34
South Glamorgan	38	26
Gwent	37	32

Notes:

[1] All leavers from September 1991 to August 1992—the latest available 12 months.

[2] Full-time work including self employment.

[3] Includes youth credits.

[4] n/a: Too few responses to give a reliable figure.

Job Vacancies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many vacancies there were for jobs in service sector industries in each of the last 12 months in each county in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

(2) how many vacancies there were for jobs in manufacturing sector industries in each of the last 12 months in each county in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: This information, for those months for which data are available, can be accessed on-line by the staff of the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the working of the common fisheries policy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Article 38 of the treaty of Rome provides for a common fisheries policy (CFP). The CFP is principally concerned with managing and sustaining a limited resource in the common interest of all member states.

The United Kingdom benefits from the CFP. The 1983 settlement, which established it, took good account of United Kingdom interests. We secured 37 per cent. of the quotas for the seven main species caught in the North European waters, a figure higher than our historical level of catches, and we reduced the access rights of other member states on our coastal waters by nearly three quarters.

The CFP is subject to continuing assessment by the EC Fisheries Council and in order to fulfil its treaty of Rome requirements it continues to evolve and change when circumstances make this desirable. Improvements in the CFP, notably involving strategies for conservation, were introduced in the mid-term review of the CFP, which was brought to a successful conclusion at the end of 1992 under the United Kingdom Presidency. In last month's Council of Fisheries Ministers, agreement was reached on a new control regulation which will provide for better and more effective enforcement. This regulation is due to take effect on 1 January 1994 and will significantly strengthen the Commission's powers to ensure that Community rules are properly implemented in all member states.

To be effective the CFP must include measures to prevent over-exploitation. Without such measures fish stocks would decline, which would be in no-one's long-term interest. Inevitably controls on fishing are unwelcome to fishermen. I understand that and will continue to defend United Kingdom interests in negotiations on the CFP while recognising the need for an effective CFP which is equitably applied and enforced in all Member States. I do not support calls for the United Kingdom to take unilateral action or withdraw from the CFP.

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the market-testing programme has cost her Department since November 1992.

Mr. Jack: Over the period November 1992 to date the Department's market testing programme is estimated to have cost some £546,000 including external consultancy support.

Live animals (Transport)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken to ensure the transport of live animals from the United Kingdom to the EC is conducted in a humane fashion; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 places controls on the transport of animals to safeguard their welfare during all journeys, including those to destinations in other EC member states.

Horses and Cattle (Diseases)

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what would be the estimated cost of reimbursing owners of horses and cattle testing sero-positive to equine viral arteritis and foot and mouth disease;

(2) whether she will be authorising compensation to be paid to the injured parties for all direct and consequential losses arising from her Department's import checking procedures in connection with each incident of equine viral arteritis;

(3) whether she will authorise compensation to be paid for direct and consequential losses arising from the importation of cattle testing sero-positive to foot and mouth disease.

Mrs. Shephard: The Ministry has no legal obligation nor statutory authority to pay any form of compensation in these circumstances, which is a commercial matter between the owners, importers and exporters.

Abattoirs

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many abattoirs operating in England and Wales conform fully to EC standards;

(2) how many authorised abattoirs operating in England and Wales currently fail to conform to EC standards; and by what date full conformity with these standards will be required.

Mr. Soames: In England and Wales 65 abattoirs fully comply with the EC standards, and 352 abattoirs are operating under temporary derogations from some of the EC structural standards. All premises comply in full with the hygiene standards. Temporary derogations may run for a three-year period up to 31 December 1995, but many premises are scheduled to complete upgrading work well before this date.

Fish Farms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fish farms use waste water generated by power stations.

Mr. Jack: There are currently two fish farms using water warmed by waste heat from power stations on the register of fish farm businesses held by Fisheries Departments.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Council Tax

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will change the current practice of taking each £250 of savings in excess of £3,000 to represent £1 of income per week when calculating council tax rebates for pensioners.

Mr. Burt: The rules on the treatment of capital are kept under review, but we have no plans to change the present arrangements.

Sickness and Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of people currently claiming invalidity benefit are women; and what percentage of these women head single-parent households.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested.

At 30 March 1991, the latest date for which information is available, 25 per cent. of invalidity benefit claimants were women[1].

There is no information available on what percentage of women claimants head single-parent households.

[1] Figure based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were found to be fraudulently claiming invalidity benefit in each year since 1980; and if he will give the figure so far for 1993.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of people claiming (a) sickness and (b) invalidity benefit for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Scott: Available information about the numbers claiming sickness and invalidity benefits is in the table.

Date	Sickness benefit claimants[2]	Invalidity benefit claimants
29 May 1982	469,000	684,000
2 April 1983	408,000	737,000
31 March 1984	[3]247,000	797,000
30 March 1985	225,000	849,000
5 April 1986	237,000	899,000
4 April 1987	[3]187,000	968,000
2 April 1988	228,000	1,047,000
1 April 1989	266,000	1,126,000
31 March 1990	309,000	1,209,000
30 March 1991	372,000	1,306,000
1991-92[4]	120,000	1,365,000
1992-93[4]	135,000	1,490,000

Notes:

[1] Figures based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants, at a point in time, rounded to the nearest thousand.

[2] Figures include claimants who are not receiving sickness benefit but receive national insurance credits.

[3] Statutory sick pay introduced from 6 April 1983 for a maximum eight weeks sickness absence in a tax year. From 6 April 1986 statutory sick pay was payable for up to 28 weeks in any one period of incapacity for work.

[4] Information is not yet available for later than March 1991. For 1991-92 and 1992-93 figures come from the estimates appearing in the departmental report 1993.

Quangos (Appointments)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the former Members of the House who have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which the former hon. Member represented.

Mr. Hague: None to those bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1992".

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, and salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Hague: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for a large number of public appointments. The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the total weekly income including benefits of (a) a single unemployed person aged 21 years and paying £40 a week in rent and (b) a student of the same age on full grant and loan paying the same rent.

Mr. Burt: On the assumption that insufficient contributions had been paid to give title to unemployment benefit, a lone, unemployed 21-year-old with a rent liability of £40 per week would normally be entitled to income support of £34·80 per week and would, through housing benefit, receive up to 100 per cent. of his rent, less any ineligible items. This equates to about £74·80 per week.

A 21-year-old student following a full-time course of higher education, but otherwise in the same circumstances, would not normally be eligible for income support or housing benefit but would receive support through the educational maintenance system. During the period of study the standard maintenance grant outside London, for the coming academic year, equates to £59·60 per week over 38 weeks, with income available from the full-year student loan of £15·38 per week. This equates to about £74·98 per week.

In addition, if a student in higher education faces particular financial difficulties he may be able to receive assistance from the access funds. The access funds are administered on a discretionary basis by the educational establishments.

It is not possible to estimate students' income during the long vacation because some students will find work during that period.

Maxwell Pension Funds

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest position in relation to the recovery of Maxwell pension funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The liquidators of Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd., which managed Maxwell pension scheme funds, have located and secured assets presently worth some £300 million. The Maxwell pension scheme trustees are now cautiously optimistic about meeting their pension liabilities in full in the long term. Much now depends on claims against third parties. Sir John Cuckney and the Maxwell pensions unit are encouraging all concerned to an early resolution of disputes. They are available to facilitate this process with the consent of the parties concerned.

Mais Lecture

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to publish the analysis and projection of social security provision to which he referred in his Mais lecture on 23 June.

Mr. Lilley: I will publish a document entitled "The Growth of Social Security" on Thursday 8 July. It contains the analysis of the growth of social security provision and projections up to the end of the century prepared in the course of the Government's long-term review of social security. It will be sent to all right hon. and hon. Members. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Child Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the cost would be of disregarding child benefit in the calculation for income support and family credit.

Mr. Burt: It is estimated that the cost of disregarding child benefit in income support would be £1,490 million. Child benefit is already disregarded in family credit. Disregarding child benefit in all the income-related benefits would cost around £1,680 million.

SCOTLAND

West Coast Main Line

16. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the Scottish director of British Rail (ScotRail) to discuss the job implications for Scotland of future decisions on the west coast main line.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Regular contact is maintained with British Rail by Scottish Office Ministers and officials. Such contacts cover a wide range of topics relating to rail services in Scotland.

25. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the British Rail main line coast services; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received a small number of representations about rail services on the west coast main line. Responsibility for railway matters however lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. The detailed operation of the railways, including the precise level of services to be offered on individual lines, is a matter for British Rail.

Stobhill Hospital

17. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many acute bed places were available in Stobhill hospital during the months of November 1992, December 1992 and January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: For each month during the period November 1992 and January 1993 there were between 191 and 193 acute beds available at Stobhill hospital.

Crown Estate Commissioners

18. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to give directions to the Crown estate commissioners as to the discharge of their functions in relation to fish farming in Scotland under section 1(4) of the Crown Estate Act 1961; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend has no plans to give directions to the Crown Estate Commissioners as to the discharge of their functions in relation to fish farming in Scotland. These responsibilities have been reviewed most recently by the Agriculture Select Committee. Following that report, the Scottish Office issued draft guidance on the location of marine fish farms, which was widely welcomed.

Rented Housing

19. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he will take to encourage the provision of low cost rented housing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am already encouraging considerable investment in low cost rented housing through the Government's funding of Scottish Homes. Over 70 per cent. of its development programme, amounting to some £230 million, will be spent in the current financial year on the provision of rented accommodation through the housing association and co-operative movement. This investment will result in over 5,000 new house starts in 1993-94.

Scottish Enterprise

20. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chief executive of Scottish Enterprise to discuss the underlying trends in the Scottish economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: As I have indicated to the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mr. Graham), my right hon. Friend and I frequently meet the chairman and chief executive of Scottish Enterprise to discuss a range of issues relevant to the Scottish economy. I am pleased to note that independent forecasters continue to predict that the present recovery in Scottish output will be sustained. I am also delighted that unemployment has fallen over the past four months. We continue to have an unemployment rate significantly below the United Kingdom average.

Economy, Lanarkshire

21. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the Lanarkshire economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations regarding the Lanarkshire economy.

Health and Education Spending

22. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the spending per head on (a) health and (b) education in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The latest available figures for identifiable general government expenditure are for 1991-92. They show spending in Scotland of £787 per head on health and personal social services and £646 per head on education.

Timex

23. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to meet representatives of Timex Electronics Corporation to discuss the grants made to its plant in Dundee.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has met senior Timex management twice in recent weeks.

Following the announcement of the Dundee factory's closure the company and the Scottish Office Industry Department have discussed grant assistance made to the plant.

Local Authority Services

24. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further steps he is taking to encourage local authorities to deliver high quality, low cost services.

Mr. Stewart: The Government are committed to the provision of high quality, low cost local services and have taken a number of steps to achieve this. These include:

- our plans to reform the structure of local government;
- the introduction of the citizens charter, the principles of which my right hon. Friend hopes will be adopted by all authorities;
- the requirement that authorities subject certain services to competitive tendering;
- support for action by the Accounts Commission to improve value for money in Scottish local government;
- the provisions in the Local Government Act 1992 requiring local authorities to publish their standards of performance in delivering services in the light of a direction issued by the Accounts Commission.

Timeshare

26. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the imposition of business rates on timeshare dwellings.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 31 March 1993 at col. 153.

In the period from 27 March, we have received representations concerning the regulations from a further 49 Members of Parliament and 228 other individuals.

Forestry

27. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's review of the future of forestry policy in the United Kingdom.

Sir Hector Monro: The review which my right hon. Friend announced on 30 March 1993 is progressing well, although it is still at an early stage in its task. As part of that review the Forestry Commission has issued a consultation paper seeking views on the effectiveness of the current incentives for forestry investment.

28. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about the Government's forestry review.

36. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding his review of the options for the ownership and management of Forestry Commission woodlands.

Sir Hector Monro: Over 500 letters have been received offering comment on the work of the review which my right hon. Friend established on 30 March. Comment has come from all quarters, including hon. Members, organisations with interests in forestry, timber production, the environment and the recreational uses of forests.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider extending the review group on the Forestry Commission to include a representative from a conservationist group; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Review group already includes representatives from the Department of the Environment, the Welsh Office and the Scottish Office which are the Government Departments with responsibility for nature conservation. In addition, the chairman and secretariat are provided by the Scottish Office Environment Department.

The review group is working to a remit which requires it to make proposals for changes which would improve the effectiveness of the delivery of the Government's forestry policy objectives, having regard to the Government's other economic and environmental policies. Concern for nature conservation is an integral component of existing forestry policy.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what groups have been called on by the forestry review group to give external advice and assistance; and if he will put copies of their submissions in the Library.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 24 June 1993]: The Forestry Commission has asked Canopy Consultants to carry out an environmental survey of a sample of private woodlands which have received grant aid during the last 15 years. This survey will inform the review of the effectiveness of current incentives for forestry investment which is part of the work of the forestry review group. No other groups have been asked for external advice or assistance.

There are no plans to publish the Canopy Consultants report in advance of the review group making its report to Ministers.

Local Government

29. Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the new single-tier local authorities in Scotland to be up and running.

Mr. Stewart: Subject to the necessary legislation being in place, it is intended that elections to the new authorities should be held in spring 1995, with the new councils assuming responsibility from existing authorities on 1 April 1996.

Status Definitions

30. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the European Community to discuss objective 1 and objective 5b status definitions of areas in Scotland; and if he will make a statement on progress.

Mr. Stewart: Negotiations on revised regulations for the EC structural funds made excellent progress on 3 July, thanks to the considerable efforts of United Kingdom negotiators and in particular my right hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Department of Trade and Industry.

I am very pleased that, subject to final agreement in the Council later this month, the whole of the Highlands and Islands Enterprise area will now be granted objective 1 status. This demonstrates the advantage for Scotland of relying on the considerable weight which the United Kingdom as a whole can bring to bear in EC negotiations.

The process of designating objective 5b areas in Scotland will begin as soon as the regulations have been adopted. It is as yet too early to say what areas might qualify.

Fishing Industry

31. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further representations he has received from west coast fishermen about fishing quotas and days at sea.

Sir Hector Monro: I receive regular representations from west coast fishermen and their representative organisations on these and other issues.

Engineering Industry

32. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on employment, export and manufacturing order figures for the engineering sector in Scotland for the most recent quarter for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The most recent census of employment, carried out in September 1991, identified a total of 104,900 employees in the engineering sector in Scotland. Official figures on exports and manufacturing orders are not disaggregated on a regional or national basis.

There are encouraging signs of an increase in confidence in the Scottish engineering sector, and many companies have reported an increase in total orders as well as export sales.

Water Fluoridation

33. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for the fluoridation of public water supplies.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend regrets that Strathclyde Regional Council has decided not to proceed with fluoridation, despite the potential benefits to dental health and the strong support for fluoridation expressed by the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden among others. The Department stands ready to consider providing assistance to the capital costs involved when and as decisions to fluoridate water supplies are taken locally.

Renewables Order

34. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 21 April, Official Report, column 113, when he now expects to publish the Scottish renewables order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member on 21 April 1993 at column. 113.

Prosecutions

35. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the criteria used by the Lord Advocate in deciding whether a prosecution is in the public interest.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to list the criteria for deciding whether the public interest requires a prosecution in a particular case. The prosecutor considers whether there is sufficient reliable evidence and whether, having regard to all the relevant factors, the circumstances make a prosecution appropriate.

National Health Service Trusts

37. Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals have been granted trust status.

Mr. Stewart: Seventeen NHS trusts are now operational in Scotland.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all appointments made as chairmen, members, chairmen designate and members designate of all NHS trusts and trusts designate as at 30 June.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) on 22 June 1993 at columns 145-56. No further appointments were made up to 30 June 1993.

Licensing Hours

38. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to introduce legislation to change the licensing hours in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Liquor licensing hours in Scotland were amended by Part III of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1990 following a consultative review of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976; no further changes are proposed at present.

River Clyde

39. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about funding for the dredging of the River Clyde.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It remains the Government's policy that port authorities, including Clyde Port Ltd, should manage their businesses on a commercial basis and that the costs of dredging should be met by charges to the users of ports, or by other parties who benefit from the dredging.

Episiotomies

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the frequency of episiotomies in maternity units in all health board areas since 1983.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

Wheelchairs (Children)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list per health board and trust board area the average waiting time for physically handicapped children to be (a) measured for and (b) supplied with wheelchairs adapted to their needs.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available.

The five artificial limb and appliance centres responsible for the supply and maintenance of wheelchairs in Scotland have been asked by my noble Friend the Minister of State to collect this information in future in respect of all new wheelchair patients.

Speech Therapists

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list per health board and trust board area the number of full-time (a) occupational and (b) speech therapists employed in paediatric services.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not held centrally.

Special Educational Needs

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by regional council areas the length of time taken by education departments to open a record of need for children with (a) physical and (b) special learning needs; and what is the average time for completion of such records.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not collected centrally. However, a research report (Children with Special Educational Needs: Thomson et al: August 1989) showed that in Scotland just over half of all Records of Needs are completed in under six months and nearly three-quarters within eight months.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the existing school rolls in Scotland has been identified as involving children with special educational needs over each of the past five years; and if he will give a breakdown per regional education department.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the percentage of education authority school pupils for whom a record of needs was opened and in force in terms of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980, as amended, is shown in the table.

Percentage of pupils in education authority schools and departments with a record of needs as at September 1988-92[1]

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992

Shetland	0·6	0·5	0·7	0·7	0·7
Western Isles	0·6	0·6	0·7	0·6	0·8

[1] Excluding nursery schools and departments.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the existing school rolls in Scotland have had records of needs (a) opened and (b) completed in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total number and percentage of children attending education authority schools (excluding nursery) in Scotland with records of needs at September in the last five years is:

Year	Number of pupils with record of needs	Percentage of school roll
1988	7,628	1·0
1989	7,236	1·0
1990	7,998	1·1
1992	9,660	1·3

Information on how many of these records were opened within any particular year is not collected, but a recent research report (Children with Special Educational Needs: Policy and Provision: Thomson et al: August 1989) showed that 950 records were opened in 1988, which equalled the average for the two preceding years.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment has been made of the number of children with speech and language difficulties in Scotland; and how many of these attend residential schools (a) in Scotland and (b) furth of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1991, the latest year for which figures are available, 1,949 children with records of needs had language and communication difficulties, though these would not necessarily be a child's sole or main learning difficulty. Sixty seven pupils attended residential special schools in Scotland. The number of those attending residential schools furth of Scotland is not held centrally.

Council House Sales

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish details of the regional breakdown for the successful applications for the local authority mortgage-to-rent scheme;

(2) how many applications have been received in Scotland for the local authority mortgage-to-rent scheme; how many of these applications have been successful; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities are able to operate mortgage-to-rent schemes on a voluntary basis. The information requested is not held centrally.

Mortgages

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the recent announcement relating to negative equity on housing mortgages in Scotland; if he will publish details of this assessment; and how many mortgagors in Scotland have taken advantage of the regulation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The problem of negative equity is less pronounced in Scotland than in other regions of the United Kingdom, affecting only an estimated 1 per cent. of recent home buyers. It is open to anyone in that position to discuss their situation with their mortgage lender.

Swimming

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department, in conjunction with the Scottish Consultative Committee for the Curriculum will conduct a survey into existing provisions for the tuition of swimming and water awareness in Scottish primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 June 1993]: I have no plans to carry out such a survey. The responsibility for provision of swimming tuition and water awareness in Scottish primary schools rests with local authorities. The Government published national guidelines in 1992 on expressive arts for five to 14-year-olds for use by schools. This sets out guidance on the provision of physical education including swimming and water safety. Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools monitors the provision of education in primary schools.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding support his Department has given in each of the last three financial years for the promotion of swimming and water safety education in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 June 1993]: Responsibility for swimming and water safety generally rests with Scottish local authorities in respect of swimming and water facilities which they operate. Safety at private sector swimming and water facilities rests with the operators in terms of their duties under the Health and Safety at Work, &c. Act 1974. Responsibility for water safety education in schools rests with the education authorities and headteachers. The Scottish Office Education Department issued in June 1992 programme guidelines on expressive arts for five to 14-year-olds which includes recognition of the importance of swimming and water safety education.

Health Boards

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been the salary and wage costs for each health board for each financial year from 1988-89, in respect of (a) general and senior managers, (b) administration and clerical staff, (c) nursing and midwifery staff, (d) medical staff, (e) ancillary staff and (f) all other staff; and what has been the total cost of each category to the NHS.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is given in the following tables. Details have been taken from health boards' annual accounts. General and senior managers costs are not held separately but are included within the administration and clerical staff category. Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available.

NHS Managers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average cost of employing each managerial staff member in the NHS for each financial year since 1988-89.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 30 June 1993]: The information requested is not available centrally. From data for the earnings of around one third of managerial staff in Scotland, an approximate figure may be calculated for the average cost of employing a manager for each year since 1989-90 and this is shown in the table:

Estimated cost of employing a manager in the NHS in Scotland.

Year[1]	Average cost[2] (£000)
[3]1989-90	23·1
1990-91	25·6
1991-92	27·9
1992-93	28·0

[1] Information is not available for 1988-89.
[2] The cost includes all salary costs plus employers' contributions for superannuation and national insurance. The averages are based on general managers, senior managers and administrative and clerical grades 7-10 (grade 18 and above in 1989-90).
[3] 1989-90 data are estimated using the midpoint salary scales.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial controls operate in connection with the payment to local authorities and the payment to claimants of home improvement grants in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 July 1993]: Local authorities finance the payment of improvement and repairs grants from their annual non-housing revenue account capital allocations, the amounts of which are subject to the consent of the Secretary of State.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on housing improvement grants in Scotland including the total amount paid in the last five financial years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 July 1993]: House improvement grants play an important part in maintaining the condition of the stock generally. Local authorities' expenditure on improvement grants is as follows:

Year	Amount £ million
1987-88	52·6

Rural Housing Association

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many potential sites for rural housing developments in the eastern part of Northern Ireland have been identified by the Omagh-based Rural Housing Association; and if he will publish details.

Mr. Atkins: Rural Housing Association has identified four such sites at Glenarm, Armoy, Annalong and Strangford. The scheme at Glenarm for five units of general family housing is currently programmed to go on site in 1994-95. None of the other projects is yet in the association's three-year programme.

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what plans he has to establish a Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to determine compensation for people in Northern Ireland injured by terrorism;

(2) what plans he has to reduce recourse to the courts in cases of compensation for criminal injuries suffered by (a) civilians or (b) serving military personnel;

(3) if he will make it his policy to maintain the entitlement of serving military personnel injured by terrorist action in Northern Ireland to pursue in court within the normal rules for eligibility for legal aid claims against the Government for compensation.

Sir John Wheeler: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary proposes to issue a White Paper shortly outlining proposals for a new tariff-based compensation scheme in Great Britain. I will study the White Paper carefully before considering whether there are lessons to be learnt for Northern Ireland. If changes are, in consequence, proposed to the current Northern Ireland criminal injuries compensation scheme, I will then consult widely with all interested parties.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claims for compensation as a result of injuries caused to (a) civilians and (b) serving military personnel by terrorist action in Northern Ireland were settled (i) by judicial decision and (ii) out of court in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Sir John Wheeler: I am advised by the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Compensation Agency that the information requested is as follows:

Local Enterprise Development Unit

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been written off in bad debt by LEDU since it was created.

Mr. Atkins: Since its creation in 1971 up to 31 March 1993, LEDU has written off a total of £6,241,640 in bad debt.

Fair Employment

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prosecutions have been brought under the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989; and if he will list the employers who have been prosecuted.

Mr. Atkins: At 2 July 1993, 53 prosecutions had been brought by the Fair Employment Commission under the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1989.

The list of employers who have been prosecuted is as follows:

Industrial Development Board

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been written off by the IDB and its predecessors in bad debt since 1974.

Mr. Atkins: From 1982-83, when IDB was set up, to 1991-92 a total of £518·1 million has been written off in accordance with government accounting procedures. A substantial portion of this sum, including £414·9 million in respect of Harland and Wolff plc, relates to the voluntary waiver of claims as opposed to bad debts. It is not possible to provide precise, disaggregated figures for these two elements. In addition, in 1989-90, before responsibility for the company was transferred to IDB, the Department of Economic Development wrote off a waiver of £390 million in connection with the privatisation of Short Brothers plc. For the period prior to 1982-83 information in respect of IDB's predecessors is either not available in the form requested or cannot be sufficiently disaggregated to provide comparable figures.

Fair Employment

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those employers who have been debarred from public service contracts or from receiving Government grants under the provisions of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989.

Mr. Atkins: Only one company, Dunellen Ltd., has been subject to disqualification under the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989. This disqualification was lifted after the company complied with its obligations under the Act.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to keeping figures for youth training participation in the London borough of Newham separately.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are required to provide information at four-weekly intervals of the number of young people in youth training. We have no plans to require information to be provided at a more local level.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment within what time it is guaranteed to find a youth training placement for each person who wants one.

Miss Widdecombe: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are contractually required to offer entry into youth training (YT) for young people in the guarantee groups within certain specified periods of time.

For young people leaving school and registering for YT for the first time this summer, this will mean a start in training within the period up to the first working day in January (that is, no later than when their parents' entitlement to the extended child benefit runs out).

For those who have already been in YT or a job, the entitlement is the offer of a start in training within eight weeks of registering for YT with the Careers Service (that is, within the period for which they may be eligible to claim YT bridging allowance).

Full details of the entitlements of those covered by the YT guarantees are contained in clauses B7-15 of annex B to the TEC operating agreement 1993, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will increase the youth training allowances.

Miss Widdecombe: There are no set allowances for youth training. The Government provide a minimum allowance which I believe is sufficient to meet the normal requirements of trainees living in the parental home.

However, employers are the main beneficiaries of the Government's investment in training and are strongly encouraged to supplement trainee incomes.

In addition, trainees who live independently may apply for income support if they consider their income is insufficient to meet their needs.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are seeking youth training for the second time.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the total number of young people seeking youth training (YT) for the second time is not available. However, the latest information (June) on the number of 16 and 17-year-olds covered by the YT guarantee in England showed that 37 per cent. of those waiting for eight weeks or more had already had YT on one or more occasion.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds in Nottinghamshire are without a job, or a place on a training scheme and are not in full-time education.

Miss Widdecombe: In April 1993 there were 358 unemployed claimants aged 16 and 17 years in the Nottinghamshire county.

Changes to the benefit regulations in September 1988 coincided with the extension of a guaranteed youth training scheme (YTS), now youth training (YT), place to all those aged under 18 not in full-time education or employment, which meant that those who declined an offer of a YTS place were no longer entitled to benefit. However, there are still a small number of under 18-year-olds entitled to benefit due to special circumstances, such as severe hardship or by virtue of their being orphans.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of young people leave youth training to enter full-time employment.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest figures show that 47 per cent. of all young people in Great Britain were in full-time employment six months after leaving youth training.

Quangos (Appointments)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment and the part which the former hon. member represented.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The following two appointments have been made:

Christopher Chope—Health and Safety Commissioner. Annual fee of £1,060 plus an attendance allowance of £105 for each fortnightly meeting attended. Appointment for three years from 1 April 1993. Former Conservative MP.

William S. Hilton—Employer Member to the Board of the Construction Industry Training Board (CITB). (Also a member of the CITB Administration Committee.) Eligible for allowances for loss of remunerative time. Appointment for the period November 1984 to April 1990, (re-appointed in July 1988). Former Labour MP.

It is not possible on the grounds of disproportionate cost to include details of any appointments to the Committees for the Employment of People with Disabilities, the Industrial Tribunals, and the Employment Appeal Tribunal, with a total of over 2,250 appointees.

Job Clubs

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the expenditure of job clubs nationally, regionally and by area for 1992-93; and what is the budget for job clubs nationally, regionally and by area for 1993-94.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. Fogden to Mr. Ron Leighton, dated 7 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the level of expenditure of Jobclubs nationally, regionally and by area for 1992-93; and the budget for Jobclubs nationally, regionally and by area for 1993-94. This is something which falls within the responsibilities he has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Jobclub programme is delivered by both external providers as well as internally by Jobcentre staff. This means I am unable to provide you with the total actual expenditure on Jobclubs for 1992-93 because we do not monitor internal expenditure by function. Most internal jobclubs are situated within a jobcentre and any expenditure will be set against the office cost of staffing, post and telecommunications etc. However, I am able to provide you with details of the total budget allocated. The tables attached provide this information together with details of the Jobclub budget for 1993-94.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the actual throughflow of clients through job clubs nationally, regionally and by area for 1992-93; what is the targeted throughflow for 1993-94; what was the actual job entry rate for job clubs nationally, regionally and by area for 1992-93; and what is the targeted job entry rate for 1993-94.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. Fogden to Mr. Ron Leighton, dated 7 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write direct to you to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the performance of jobclubs in 1992-93 and the targets for 1993-94. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The information you asked for is given in the attached tables. They show the actual throughflow, ie numbers leaving jobclub, in 1992-93. The figures for 1993-94 are the planned number of entrants, ie numbers joining the programme, as throughflow information is not available. Although there are differences in the definitions, the numerical differences will in practice be small and year on year comparisons can be made.

The jobclub programme is being expanded in 1993-94 and 295,000 places are available of which 273,344 have so far been allocated. The remaining allocation of places is currently in the planning stage. This is because the results of evaluation exercises linked to specialist and supportive jobclub provision are being considered before further expansion can be finalised.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the budget for each TEC for 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate regional offices are currently finalising contracts with training and enterprise councils (TECs) for 1993-94 budgets and the information is not yet available.

We have decided that TEC level information should only be released publicly six months after the beginning of the contracting year. The information must remain commercially confidential while TECs are negotiating with their providers. The information requested on TEC budgets for 1993-94 will therefore be publicly available on 1 October 1993.

Social Chapter

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what data, in regard to the effects on United Kingdom employment and wages, Her Majesty's Government made a decision to exempt the United Kingdom from the social chapter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposed social chapter would have given the Community greatly increased scope to legislate in the areas of employment and social policy and to introduce such legislation through qualified majority voting. It is already clear that inappropriate Community legislation of this kind can greatly increase the costs and burdens on business with an inevitable cost in lost jobs. To have accepted greater Community powers in this area would have been irreconcilable with the need to maintain the competitiveness of British business and the jobs of British employees.

Nursery Places

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the initiative of the CBI in trying to increase workplace nursery places.

Miss Widdecombe: We welcome the Employers for Childcare forum, which proposes a national child care strategy based on partnership between parents, employers and Government. The forum clearly has a valuable contribution to make to the child care debate and we are pleased that major and prestigious companies have recognised child care as an important business issue. The Government is putting £45 million into an initiative to create some 50,000 new child care places for school aged children over the next three years. Employers will have a key role to play in this initiative. We also encourage all employers to adopt family-friendly employment policies such as flexible working and help with child care. In 1990 we introduced tax relief on workplace nurseries to stimulate this type of child care.

Unemployment, Burnley

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed in (a) the Burnley borough council area and (b) the Burnley travel-to-work area for more than one year in each of the last three years.

Miss Widdecombe: Claimant unemployment data by duration is available quarterly for the months of January, April, July and October and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Life Insurance Industry

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of people in the United Kingdom life insurance industry who are (a) employed and (b) self-employed.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is available only for the whole of the insurance industry (excluding compulsory social security). Latest estimates from the Labour Force Survey, for the United Kingdom, show that there were 277,000 employees and 10,000 self-employed people in this industry in spring 1992.

Employment Advice

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was spent by the Benefits Agency in each region and in the district covering Stockport in each year since 1989-90 on contracts with organisations to provide job shops, job review workshops and advice for the unemployed on applying for employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. Fogden to Ms Ann Coffey, dated 7 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about contracted out programme expenditure. This responsibility rests with the Employment Service and not the Benefits Agency. It is something which the Secretary of State has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service (ES).

There are a range of jobsearch and advisory programmes which are run on behalf of the ES by organisations from the public, private and voluntary sectors. In the attached tables I have set out details of the programme expenditure for the main Employment Service programmes delivered by external providers for the period April 1989-March 1993. These are Restart Courses, Jobclubs, job search seminars and Job Review Workshops.

The figures given include fares to participants. This is because people who attend programmes are re-imbursed the cost of travelling from their homes to the seminars, workshops or courses. The providers then recover this money from the Employment Service.

A regional breakdown of figures is available for the last two years only. Table 1 therefore gives the total national expenditure on contracts for these programmes between 1989 and 1991. Tables 2 and 3 list the spend by region for 1991-92 and 1992-93. Table 4 lists the expenditure from April 1989 for the Manchester East Employment Service area, which includes Stockport. It has not been possible to separate out Jobclub and job search seminar payments.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Defence Diversification

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will make a statement about the assistance being provided through his Department to help defence-related industries in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency to retrain staff in non-defence-related fields;

(2) if he will make a statement about the assistance being provided by his Department to help redundant defence-related workers in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency find alternative employment in (a) defence-related and (b) non-defence-related industries.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 5 July 1993]: I fully understand my hon. Friend's concerns about the needs of those affected by changes in the defence industries. Through the training and enterprise councils and the Employment Service, the Department funds a broad range of programmes to help these people.

The Government will participate fully in the new European Community KONVER initiative, designed to assist areas affected by the decline in the defence industry. Some £5 million has been allocated to the United Kingdom under the European social fund to assist through training and re-training. This assistance will be available throughout the United Kingdom without geographical restriction.

The precise allocation of these new funds is yet to be decided, but they will be directed towards those parts of the country where the need is greatest. Details of how the scheme will operate in the United Kingdom will be made available by the end of July.

DEFENCE

Dockyards

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those dockyard facilities in the United Kingdom owned and operated by his Department, indicating the type of work undertaken and the numbers of people directly employed.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's only such facility is the Fleet Maintenance and Repair Organisation at Portsmouth, which undertakes ship repair, maintenance and enhancement work. It employs 2,100 civilians and 550 naval personnel.

Residential Property

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what average purchase price has been obtained for surplus Ministry housing, for one-bedroom, two-bedroom and three-bedroom accommodation within the Plymouth city council area and each of the six Cornish districts, for the six-month period October 1992 to March 1993; and what were the comparable figures for the previous six months.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham are owned by his Department; and if he will publish a list of such residential properties which are currently empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant and the intended future use.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence currently owns 18 residential properties, all flats, situated in two locations in the London borough of Lewisham. Five dwellings are currently vacant. These properties have been vacant for three months awaiting new service occupants who are expected to arrive by September.

The answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) to the hon. Member on 15 July 1992 at column 615 did not include six properties that had been incorrectly attributed to the neighbouring borough of Greenwich.

Satellite Centre, Spain

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the progress being made by the Western European Union satellite centre at Torrejon, Spain; and what additional efforts he is making to further this project.

Mr. Hanley: Good progress is being made in the development of the WEU satellite centre at Torrejon. The centre has been established for a three year experimental period, and its formal inauguration, attended by my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton), took place in April this year. The United Kingdom contribution to the cost of the experimental phase is some £4,600,000 over three years. In addition, the United Kingdom is playing a full part in the activities of the centre. The contract for the provision of technical equipment was awarded to a United Kingdom-led consortium and the staff of the centre currently includes a number of United Kingdom personnel.

Desert Storm Syndrome

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek information from (a) the United States authorities and (b) other sources on Desert Storm syndrome and on the effect on service men of the use of uranium-depleted shells.

Mr. Hanley: My Department is liaising with the United States authorities and is already in receipt of United States information which indicates that depleted uranium has not caused the unexplained symptoms associated with the so called Desert Storm syndrome. As with any other possible threat to the health of service personnel, my Department continues to monitor the full range of information on the alleged syndrome from all available sources.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any correspondence from hon. Members on behalf of constituents who allege they are suffering from unexplained illnesses that they put down to their service with the armed forces in the Gulf during Operation Granby.

Mr. Hanley: I am only aware of one such letter, which the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Enright) raised as a point of order yesterday at column 185. This letter merely provided the name of a constituent and listed some of the health problems he was experiencing. There was no mention of his address or other identifying information or details of his military service or corroborating medical evidence. I have therefore written to the hon. Member for Hemsworth advising that his constituent consult his GP and that if the GP wished to refer the case to the MOD as being one where there were unexplained symptoms which could be attributable to service in the Gulf I would be more than happy to ensure that the matter was fully investigated. This advice applies to all hon. and right hon. Members who may have constituents in similar situations.

Maralinga Nuclear Test Site

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, columns 276-77, if he has now heard from the Australian Government in regard to the proposals made by Her Majesty's Government as to additional financial compensation for the clean-up of the Maralinga nuclear test site.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 30 June at columns 548-49.

F3 Tornados

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral statement of 17 June, Official Report, column 1082, whether legal proceedings have now been instituted against Airwork in respect of the collateral damage to F3 Tornados; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No. My Department intends to claim against Airwork for the cost of rectifying the damage for which they are responsible and other consequential costs. It would be inappropriate in present circumstances for me to say anything about potential proceedings—whether legal or arbitral—between the Secretary of State and Airwork Ltd.

Rosyth Dockyard

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the names of the nuclear submarines and surface ships which have been refitted at the Rosyth dockyard in the last 10 years; and if he will give details of the man weeks taken to complete the refit work on each vessel.

Mr. Aitken: I will write to the hon. Member.

Tigerfish Torpedo

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what difficulties have arisen with respect to the development of the depth automatic test equipment required for the Tigerfish torpedo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The development of replacement automatic test equipment for the Tigerfish torpedo has presented a significant challenge, partly due to the difficulty of integrating the old technology of the torpedo and the associated test specification with the current technology of modern test equipment. There have been some programme delays and the Ministry of Defence is currently working with the contractor to bring the equipment into service as quickly as possible.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Murder Cases

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will ensure that, in murder cases where hon. Members have raised the conviction with members of the Government, transcripts or notes of the trial are retained longer than the five year norm provided that the hon. Member is still seeking a review of the case, regardless of whether it has gone to appeal.

Mr. John M. Taylor: If an hon. Member seeks a review of a murder case, he, or others, may purchase any transcript required within the five-year period. On request, the Department will supply details of the contractor responsible for keeping the particular record.

Applications for leave to appeal are required to be lodged within 28 days and reasons to justify any extension of time are required. If there has been an application for leave to appeal, transcript relevant to the grounds of appeal will have been obtained and will be retained indefinitely in appeals against a murder conviction. The Royal Commission on criminal justice made no recommendation to extend the five-year period for the keeping of a verbatim record and I see no case to do so.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements are made for the storage of transcripts or notes of the trials in murder cases which have gone to appeal.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The verbatim record is kept for five years after it was taken, regardless of whether there is an appeal. Transcripts are not automatically produced for cost reasons, but may be purchased if required within the five-year period.

If there is an appeal against a murder conviction, any transcripts purchased by the Court of Appeal and the documents provided by the Crown court to the Court of Appeal are retained indefinitely by arrangement with the Public Record Office.

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy, in circumstances in which the Home Office has requested from an hon. Member representing the interests of a convicted murderer a statement concerning that case, to provide the hon. Member on request with a transcript of the relevant portions of the trial including the summings up by counsel for the defence, the prosecution and the trial judge.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Verbatim records of murder trials are retained for five years. If a transcript is required by an hon. Member, the Home Office, or another organisation or person, it must be purchased within the five-year period. The contractor responsible for keeping the records will be required to meet any such request. It would not be appropriate for my Department to meet the costs of such transcription.

A verbatim record of the evidence and a trial judge's summing up is always taken, but prosecution and defence closing speeches are not matters of evidence or law which a jury are required to have regard to. A record of these may not be available as there is no requirement to record them.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the rank of the officer or officers of the City of London police who on or about 1 April 1992 prepared letters purporting to have been written, respectively by the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) and Mr. D. W. Freeman in connection with a case under investigation by the Serious Fraud Office; what disciplinary proceedings have been taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: These are matters for the Commissioner of Police for the City of London.

Police (Assaults)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers in each police force in the United Kingdom have had to retire from their jobs as a result of injuries caused by assault in each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not held centrally for police forces in England and Wales. I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland that this is also the case for Scotland. If individual forces were able to provide the information requested, it could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland that his Department holds information about retirements from the Royal Ulster Constabulary from which the information requested could be extracted in respect of former RUC police officers. If my hon. Friend writes to him, he will provide the information.

Police (Civilian Staff)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he expects the recommendation in his White Paper that civilian staff employed for police purposes should be employed by the chief constable to work in practice.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is too early to say how the detailed arrangements for the employment of civilian staff in the police service will be managed. Civilian staff have an increasingly important part to play in the provision of a good quality police service. It therefore seems appropriate, and in the interests of all those working in the police service, that the civilian staff should be directly employed by the chief constable.

Sunday Trading

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his plans to reform Sunday trading law in England and Wales.

Mr. Howard: We intend to lay before Parliament next week and publish on 13 July a draft Sunday trading Bill together with a covering text describing the options for reform.

Family Reunification

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what ways United Kingdom legislation will have to be changed to implement the resolution on family reunification adopted by the Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June; and what cost implications this will have.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There will be no need to amend primary legislation to implement the resolution on family reunification.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the international conventions and fundamental provisions in national legislation which the Ministers responsible for immigration indicated would be taken into account in their resolution on family reunification at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June; and which of these obligations are relevant to the implementation of this resolution in United Kingdom law.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not possible to provide an exhaustive list of all the international conventions which the United Kingdom has ratified or the provisions in domestic legislation which might be relevant. However, the following are likely to be applicable:

1. International Conventions
   (a) The United Nations Convention on Human Rights;
   (b) The European Convention on Human Rights;
   (c) The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child;
   (d) The European Convention on the Adoption of Children;
   (e) The United Nations Convention on Refugees.
2. Domestic legislation
   (a) The Immigration Act, 1971;
   (b) The Marriage Act, 1949;
   (c) The Children Act, 1989;
   (d) The Adoption Act, 1976, together with the equivalent Act and Order for Scotland and Northern Ireland;
   (e) The Family Law Reform Act, 1987.

Dogs (Tail-Docking)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures will be taken against those veterinary surgeons who continue to dock the tails of dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is a matter for the royal college to determine what controls to impose over veterinary surgeons.

Drinking and Driving

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate for each year since 1967 the number of times a week people drive motor vehicles after consuming more than the legal limit for alcohol for drivers and the number of related deaths each year.

Mr. Maclean: Such estimates are not available. However, the average weekly number of screening breath tests in England and Wales for the years 1968 to 1992 and the number of fatalities per year involving illegal alcohol levels are as follows:

	Average number of screening breath tests per week	Annual number of fatalities in accidents involving illegal alcohol levels[1]

Treason

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review United Kingdom legislation on treason.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have no such plans.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which the former hon. Member represented.

Mr. Howard: The following former Members have been appointed to Home Office non-departmental public bodies:

David Bellotti
Trustee of the Community Development Foundation
Expenses only
Appointed January 1992 for 3 years
Liberal Democrat

Right hon. Lord Carlisle of Bucklow, QC

Salary £90,918
Appointed 1976; reappointed 1993 for 2 years
Labour

Information in respect of the parole local review committees is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information in respect of the Fire Services Examination Board is not available.

Prison Security Guards

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current standard hourly rate for prison security guards.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the prison service. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Jon Owen Jones, dated July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent question about the current standard hourly rate for prison security guards.

Subsequent to the introduction of Fresh Start in 1987 prison officers receive an annual salary paid monthly. They are conditioned to an average week of 39 hours net, any additional hours worked are compensated for by time off in lieu as they are a non overtime grade.

Prison Officers have a seven point pay scale with a 10 and 15 year increment. The hourly rate ranges from £7·42 at the minimum to £9·25 at the 15 year point. These salaries are part of the annual pay negotiations between the Treasury and the Prison Officers Association and will be uplifted from 1 April 1993. Any increase will be within the Government pay restraints and be limited to between 0 to 1·5 per cent. increase.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which the former hon. Member represented.

Mr. David Davis: No former Members of this House have been appointed by my right hon. Friend to the non-departmental public bodies for which he has had responsibility since the creation of his Department in April 1992.

TRANSPORT

Airports

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to improve the services offered by major United Kingdom international airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Government believe that increasing the scope for airport operators to respond to commercial pressures offers the best route for improving the services offered at all airports. This underlies the Government's policy of encouraging increased private sector involvement in the ownership and management of local authority-owned airports.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers used (a) Gatwick airport and (b) Heathrow airport in each year since 1979.

Mr. Norris: The numbers of passengers at (a) Gatwick airport and (b) Heathrow airport are shown in the table.

Terminal passengers at Heathrow and Gatwick 1979-92

Year	Gatwick (000)	Heathrow (000)
1979	8,965	27,979
1980	9,703	27,484
1981	10,725	26,411
1982	11,155	26,406
1983	12,471	26,767
1984	13,953	29,164
1985	14,885	31,310
1986	16,309	31,310
1987	19,381	34,743
1988	20,744	37,510
1989	21,149	39,587
1990	21,043	42,635
1991	18,690	40,245
1992	19,842	44,964

Private Aircraft

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people flying in private aeroplanes have been killed in aviation accidents in United Kingdom air space in each year since 1987.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority's safety data analysis unit advises me that the number of people flying in private aeroplanes that have been killed in aviation accidents in United Kingdom airspace since 1987 are as follows:

Year	Number of Fatal Accidents	Fatalities
		Passengers	Crew
1987	24	23	24
1988	10	6	9
1989	19	4	19
1990	19	13	19
1991	17	4	18
1992	16	10	14

Trust Ports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total receipts from the privatisation of trust ports to date.

Mr. Norris: The total receipts to the Exchequer from the five ports privatised last year under the Ports Act 1991 was £169 million.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the timetable for privatisation of the next wave of trust ports.

Mr. Norris: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 12 March, Official Report, column 769. The power that the Secretary of State has under the Ports Act 1991, to require the larger trust ports, with a turnover above a specified threshold, to privatise themselves, will become available after 24 July 1993. The Secretary of State expects to make an announcement as soon as he has completed his consideration on the way in which he should use his power of compulsion.

All trust ports can use the Act at any time to take action to privatise themselves. Five have already done so, we hope more will follow.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those trust ports with whom he has discussed privatisation.

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State has not yet decided which trust ports he will formally consult, under the terms of the Ports Act 1991, in respect of his power to require privatisation.

Piracy

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) merchant ships and (b) British-owned merchant ships have been victims of piracy or other attacks in the last five years.

Mr. Norris: Shipowners, flag states and coastal states are encouraged to report incidents of piracy and armed robbery against vessels to the International Maritime Organisation. When we are advised of incidents involving British ships we report them to IMO. However, there is no requirement in international law to report attacks and masters and shipowners can be reluctant to do so. As a result, records are incomplete.

Full information in the form requested is not available. The table, however, gives an indication of trends during the past five years on incidents of piracy affecting tankers.

Year	All flags	UK flags

The Government are concerned about the under reporting of attacks. We have produced comprehensive advice in "Merchant Shipping Notice M1517" urging mariners to report any attack or attempted attack to the flag and coastal states concerned.

South China Sea

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold talks with the National Union of Marine, Aviation and Shipping Transport Officers about providing armed escorts for all British or commonwealth vessels passing through the South China sea.

Mr. Norris: We are willing to consider any representations from NUMAST and other shipping interests. We treat the problems in the South China sea very seriously indeed and hope that the matter can be solved through multilateral and bilateral co-operation. At the present time, we do not believe there is a need for armed escorts.

A1, Northumbria

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport at how many points between Morpeth and the Scottish border the A1 is currently reduced to one-way operation by temporary traffic lights; how many of these interruptions result from works which will result in improvement to dual carriageway status; and which of these interruptions will continue through the Scottish and English bank holiday weekends.

Mr. Key: The A1 is currently reduced to one-way operation by temporary traffic signals at the following five locations:

Bockenfield, south of Felton;
Browneside, north of Alnwich;
Detchant, north of Belford;
Scremerston, south of Berwick; and Marshall Meadows, north of Berwick.

Of these, the works at Browneside and Marshall Meadows will result in improvement to dual carriageway status.

Traffic signals will continue to operate at Bockenfield, Browneside and Detchant for the Scottish bank holiday weekend. Arrangements have been made to remove all traffic signals for the English bank holiday weekend.

Central Line

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what proposals he is considering in respect of an alternative public transport service between Epping and Ongar should London Transport close this part of the Central line; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the current situation in respect of the Central line service between Epping and Ongar.

Mr. Freeman: On 5 May 1993, London Underground Ltd. published notice of its intention to seek closure of the Central line between Epping and Ongar. Due to the Secretary of State's quasi-judicial role in the closure proceedings, it would not be appropriate for me to make any comments on the subject at this stage.

Buses, Dorset

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many passenger miles were travelled by bus in Dorset in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 7 July 1993]: The Department does not collect information on passenger mileage from operators. National estimates are imputed from the passenger journey information collected in a survey and national estimates of average journey cost. The survey samples are selected to be representative at the national level and could not be used to produce county information.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Severe Hardship Payments

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the administration costs of the severe hardship payments.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alan Simpson, dated 7 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what are the administration costs of the severe hardship payments.

For the financial year 1992-93 the administration costs of the Severe Hardship Claims Unit in Glasgow were £676,714.

Associated administration costs arise within the Benefits Agency District Offices. Those costs cannot be separately identified for the year 1992-93. However they are estimated at £1·5 million.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Fraud, Blackpool

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about social security fraud in Blackpool.

Mr. Hague: The administration of benefit fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Harold Elletson, dated 7 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security requesting him to make a statement about social security fraud in Blackpool.

The investigation of potentially fraudulent claims was reorganised in January 1991 when Fraud Sectors were formed.

The Blackpool Sector covers an area on the Fylde coast North to Fleetwood/Knott End, South to Lytham St. Annes and East to the outskirts of Preston.

There are currently a total of 13·5 full time members of staff devoted to the investigation of suspect claims although three of these posts are clerical support rather than investigators.

In the year ending 31 March 1993 Blackpool sector conducted 2,158 investigations. Of this total, 914 cases resulted in a weekly benefit saving and a further 304 cases produced an instrument of payment saving. In addition, an overpayment was detected in a further 304 cases. The total gross savings exceeded £2·5 million. Seven people were prosecuted in the same period and all were found guilty.

In addition to the Sector fraud staff who have carried out the activities as detailed above, there has been an input from a mobile team who are based at Area level and who can be called on to assist Sector staff at times of staff shortage, high intake of work or to conduct pro-active investigations into larger scale fraudulent activities.

In the past three months the Mobile Team has conducted a number of investigations, two of which were particularly successful.

In the first exercise over 1,600 visits were made to check the addresses of people claiming benefits. It was confirmed that 267 people were not living at the quoted address. The full results of the savings are not yet known as the exercise is not yet completed but they are anticipated to be considerable.

The second exercise involved the arrest by the Police of six people in connection with instrument of payment abuse. Over 100 people were interviewed by members of the Mobile Team and instrument of payment savings of £50,000 were recorded.

I should stress that the vast majority of the Benefit Agency's customers are genuine and will never have any contact with any of our Investigators. The investigators exist to ensure that the honest customer's benefit goes to that customer.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Child Benefit

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of child benefit in each year since 1979 with the figures adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

Income Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide statistics similar to table A3, page 63, of the "Households Below Average Income Statistical Analysis" 1979, 1990-91, to include the top 40 per cent., 30 per cent., 20 per cent. and 10 per cent. of income distribution for 1979, 1988-89 and 1990-91, for income before housing costs and income after housing costs.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables.

Share of total income (per cent.) (including self-employed)

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will respond to the report by the Social Security Select Committee's third report on the delivery of disability living allowance and disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: The Government's response—Cm 2282—is published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Crisis Loans

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest available information for the district covering Stockport and nationally on the number and applications for crisis loans dealt with by social fund officers because of re-alignment of unemployment benefit.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Ann Coffey, dated 7 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what is the latest available information for the district covering Stockport and nationally on the number of applications for crisis loans dealt with by Social Fund Officers because of re-alignment of unemployment benefit.

I am unable to give the information you requested because the statistical information kept does not identify the individual benefits involved in such applications. I can, however, provide details of the number of crisis loans awarded to applicants whose benefit is paid in arrears. For the period 1 April 1993 to 30 May 1993 (latest available data) the figure for the Stockport District is 323. The national figure for the same period is 39,350.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what deputations his Department has recently received from Burma; what trade matters were discussed; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards trade with Burma.

Mr. Needham: My Department has received no deputations from Burma recently. The Government's policy is to provide no specific encouragement to British firms to trade or invest in Burma in view of the current political and economic situation there. The United Kingdom does not sell arms to Burma and our aid programme, like that of other donors, has been suspended since 1988. British business visitors to Rangoon can of course look to our embassy there for advice and support. Firms seek advice on trading with Burma are always made aware of the Government's policy.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is responsible for a total of more than 800 public appointments. Of these:

(a) James Roe (spouse of Marion Roe, Conservative MP for Broxbourne) has been appointed as a reserve member of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission at a salary of £8,490 per annum for the period 1 February 1993 to 31 January 1996.

(b) Viscount Chelmsford has been appointed as a member of the Simpler Trade Procedures Board for the period 1 November 1992 to 31 October 1995. The post is unpaid.

(c) Lady Jane Forbes (spouse of Lord Forbes, KBE) was re-appointed as a member of the Post Office Users Council for Scotland for the period 1 October 1991 to 30 September 1995 and as a member of the Scottish Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for the period 1 October 1991 to 30 September 1993. Both appointments are unpaid.

We do not collect information on the political affiliations of those appointed or details of those who have been party candidates for Parliament.

Beer

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the effects of the Beer Orders on the brewing industry and consumers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There have been considerable changes in the brewing industry since the implementation of the orders. However, it is difficult to separate the effects of the orders from other developments within the industry, some of which are part of long term trends beginning before the Monopolies and Mergers Commission review.

We believe that it is too soon to make an assessment of the impact of the orders. The overriding need now is for a period of stability for both brewers and tenants/lessees. The Agriculture Select Committee's report on the effects of the Beer Orders on the brewing industry and consumers supported this view.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) of 30 June, Official Report, columns 511-12, what were the voting figures for each decision taken at the European Community's Telecommunications Council held on 16 June; and if he will make it his policy to include in future statements on Council meetings information on whether formal votes were taken and which member states voted in favour, against or abstained on particular measures.

Mr. McLoughlin: No formal votes were taken at the European Community's Telecommunications Council held on 16 June. I regret that this was not made clear in my answer of 30 June, in accordance with the undertaking given to the hon. Member that statements to the House following meetings of the Council of Ministers will either include details of the record of the vote whenever a formal vote is taken, or report that no formal votes were taken.

Civil Nuclear Sites

Mr. Wallace: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the civil nuclear sites in the United Kingdom, together with the expiry dates of their current operational site licences.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows the civil nuclear sites in the United Kingdom, all of which are licensed by the Health and Safety Executive under the provisions of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, as amended.

A nuclear site licence is issued without limit of time, but may at any time be revoked by the Health and Safety Executive or surrendered by the licensee with the executive's agreement. The licensee continues to be responsible for the site, and subject to direction by the Health and Safety Executive, until in the opinion of the executive there has ceased to be any danger from ionising radiations from anything on the site, or until a new nuclear site licence is issued to some other person.

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the residues specification issued to overseas customers for THORP, to which reference is made at page six of the report of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee appended to the chairman of that Committee's reply of 10 October 1992 to the letter of 11 March 1992 from the Secretary of State.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the companies concerned.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department is responsible: whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 6 July 1993]: All the executive NDPBs sponsored by the Department are accountable to DTI Ministers for their use of public funds and we are accountable to Parliament. The specific answers to the questions are:

(a) No.
(b) No.
(c) Yes, where the body receives grant or grant-in-aid.
(d) No.
(e) Yes, where appropriate.
(f) The citizens charter applies to all NDPBs which provide a public service.
The chairmen and members of the boards are expected to declare an interest where relevant.

Science Base Funding

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to increase the science base funding for industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: I have been asked to reply.

As explained in the White Paper on science, engineering and technology, "Realising our Potential", the Government intend that decisions on priorities for support of the science and engineering base should be much more clearly related to meeting the country's needs and enhancing its wealth creating capacity. To this end: it is establishing a technology foresight capability; it is creating two new research councils to cover biotechnology and biological sciences, and engineering and physical sciences; it has provided all research councils with a mission statement which recognises the importance of research undertaken to meet the needs of users; and it is taking measures to improve the links between the councils and cognate Government Departments. Moreover, the LINK scheme will continue to be an important vehicle for the research councils collaboration with industry, and the Office of Science and Technology will now take lead responsibility for the scheme, with the LINK steering group reporting jointly to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and the President of the Board of Trade.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the involvement of United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme, UNICEF, the World Health Organisation, the UNDCP and the Food and Agriculture Organisation in Burma.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations Under-Secretary for Humanitarian Affairs is involved in talks with the Burmese authorities about the return of the Rohingya refugees from Bangladesh. The involvement of UN agencies in Burma is as follows.

UNDP: Since the 1992 Governing Council, all UNDP assistance in Burma has been targeted specifically at grassroots level. Projects are approved on a case-by-case basis by the UNDP Administrator, and funding is only being released on a strictly limited basis.

UNICEF: The programme in Burma concentrates on mother and child health care, basic education and access to safe drinking water.

WHO: The programme has been reduced since July 1992 in response to UNDP's directive to limit activities. It now concentrates on nursing training and AIDS.

UNDCP: A number of projects both in Burma and in the border areas of neighbouring states are funded to encourage the reduction of drug trafficking, and of demand, supply and abuse of drugs. Specific activities include the replacement of opium based economic activity by income substitution programmes, and demand reduction through community based education and training.

FAO: Activities in Burma are largely rural based agricultural projects, including research and training. Many are UNDP funded and fall within the restrictions placed on the UNDP programme.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what accountability there is for United Nations activity and that of related organisations for their work in Burma; and if he will place reports on this subject by such organisations in the Library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations and related organisations operating in Burma are accountable, through their headquarters management, to their governing bodies. Members of these bodies, including the United Kingdom, monitor closely the activities of these organisations.

There are no relevant reports which could be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what checks there have been to ensure that international aid to Burma has not been used for military purposes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no evidence that international aid is being diverted for military purposes. The mandates of the United Nations, its funds and programmes and the specialised agencies in the economic and social fields preclude any assistance for military purposes. In the case of Burma, the work of the United Nations system is being scrutinised with special care to ensure that none of its assistance is diverted to military uses. The international financial institutions do not grant loans for military purposes, and carry out the normal financial and audit checks on the use of their funds.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amounts remitted as a result of (a) hardship, (b) equity and (c) miscellaneous and the amounts written off as a result of (d) insolvency, (e) composition settlements and (f) taxpayer gone abroad or untraceable, for each of capital gains tax, schedule D tax, corporation tax, pay-as-you-earn and national insurance for each year since 1979 as cash figures and as a percentage of each tax collected.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is shown in the tables.

The amounts of corporation tax remitted or written off as irrecoverable for the reasons outlined are as follows:

Life Insurance Companies

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about expenses disclosure as it applies to direct sales forces and tied agents of life insurance companies.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations in the context of the consultation exercise on the Office of Fair Trading report on the marketing and sale of investment-linked insurance products.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will establish an advisory group of British manufacturers to make recommendations as to how best to modify the taxation system so as to encourage British manufacturing industry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Treasury Ministers meet regularly with key individuals and representative bodies in manufacturing industry, and will continue to do so in the period leading up to the Budget in November. Ministers also consider each year a large number of detailed written representations for changes to the tax system as it affects industry. I am not convinced that a further advisory group is needed to supplement these existing channels of communication.

Uncollected Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount currently owed in uncollected tax by individuals against whom the Inland Revenue is taking legal proceedings or has proceedings outstanding; and if he will disaggregate that estimate into the amount owed by (a) those currently residing in the United Kingdom and (b) those currently residing abroad in (i) other EC countries, (ii) OECD countries other than the EC and (iii) all other countries.

Mr. Dorrell: The information required is not available in the form requested.

Taxes Act 1988

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield to the Exchequer for 1993-94, if subsections (4) to (9) of section 65 of the Taxes Act 1988 were repealed.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information to answer this question is not available.

Tax Residents

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional revenue to the Exchequer for 1993-94, if, in determining whether an individual is tax resident in the United Kingdom, a day spent in the United Kingdom is deemed to include any day in which the person spends more than three hours of that day in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information to answer this question is not available.

Available Accommodation Rule

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of taxpayers who will cease to be liable for United Kingdom tax in 1994-95 following the abolition of the available accommodation rule.

Mr. Dorrell: Several hundred.

Tax Returns

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what circumstances he requires (a) non-domiciled and (b) non-resident people working in the United Kingdom to complete tax returns.

Mr. Dorrell: An individual would be required to complete a tax return in circumstances where there is a liability to United Kingdom tax.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer from how many people who are non-domiciled and resident or ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom the Inland Revenue collected tax returns for the latest year available.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information to answer this question is not available.

Chargeable Gains

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield to the Exchequer for 1993-94 if section 62(1) of the Taxation of Chargeable Gains Act 1992 did not apply to assets which qualified either for business property relief within section 104 of the Inheritance Tax Act 1984 or for agricultural property relief within section 116 of the Inheritance Tax Act 1984 at the time of the person's death.

Mr. Dorrell: Assuming that the normal business reliefs against capital gains tax such as holdover relief and retirement relief would be made available on death, the estimated yield from introducing a capital gains charge on death in respect of assets which qualify for business property or agricultural property relief under the inheritance tax provisions in 1993-94 is negligible.

Worldwide Income

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield in 1992-93 or the latest year available of taxing non-domiciled resident of ordinarily resident people on worldwide income and capital gains.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information to answer this question is not available.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the number of public interest members of the Securities and Investments Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 7 July 1993]: The Chairman of SIB mentioned in his review that he wished to rebalance the composition of the SIB board. My right hon. and learned Friend has accepted these proposals.

ENVIRONMENT

Home Improvements

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what details he has as to the number of each type of grant given for home improvement in each of the last 10 years; and if he will give the cash total of each grant, in each case on a constant value cash basis.

Sir George Young: The values of payments and the numbers of dwellings involved for each type of grant for home improvement over the period 1982 to 1992 are shown in the tables.

Tables 1 and 2 cover, respectively, numbers of dwellings on which grants were paid to private owners and tenants under the Housing Act 1985 for the whole period, and numbers of grants paid under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 for 1990 onwards.

Tables 3 and 4 give the respective total values of grants paid, and tables 5 and 6 show them expressed on a constant value basis at 1982 prices.

Urban Policy

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to recognise the requirement for long-term planning of urban regeneration.

Mr. Baldry: The Government will continue to encourage and sustain long-term investment to improve the quality of life in our city areas, both through existing programmes and new initiatives. Urban development corporations will continue to attract private investment, which has so far totalled £12 billion. City challenge will continue to promote lasting regeneration and encourage partnership between central and local government, the private sector and local people. The Urban Regeneration Agency will draw together the present programmes of city grant, derelict land grant and English Estates to create a new unified approach to the regeneration of land in and around urban areas. All urban areas will benefit from substantial main programme spending.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when the index of urban deprivation will now be published;

(2) if he will list each of his orginal and revised estimates of the date of the publication of the index of urban deprivation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have made no formal estimates of the date of publication of the results of our analysis of 1991 census data. The precise timing will depend on the outcome of continuing consultation with the local authority associations and other bodies, and on the finalisation of indicators.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment and the party which the former hon. Member represented.

Mr. Gummer: Such information is not available centrally.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Gummer: The following members of the House of Lords are currently serving on the boards of executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department. The other information requested is not available.

Sellafield (Radioactive Discharges)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the views of the Government of the Republic of Ireland on the pollution inspectorate's recommendations on the new authorisations for radioactive discharges from the Sellafield site in Cumbria.

Mr. Yeo: The views expressed by all respondents, including the Irish Government, were taken into account by the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the radiological inspectorates of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in their report on the public consultation on their proposed draft authorisations for British Nuclear Fuels' Sellafield site. The inspectorates' report has been carefully considered by my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. They intend to carry out a further round of public consultation which will include the Irish Government.

Property Services Agency

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value of the land and buildings in the ownership of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Curry: The value of freehold land and buildings on the PSA Services' departmental estate is estimated as £4 million.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the relative effectiveness of (a) dry storage of spent AGR fuel as waste in a store such as that proposed for Torness by Scottish Nuclear or (b) reprocessing of the spent fuel as low as reasonably advisable in implementing the principle on minimising exposure to radiation.

Mr. Yeo: Dry storage of spent nuclear fuel is not to be regarded as an alternative to reprocessing but rather as a measure which enables the owners of the spent fuel to defer any decision on whether to reprocess the fuel or to dispose of it directly. Unless a decision has been taken to dispose of it directly, the spent fuel in store is not to be regarded as a waste but as a resource from which uranium and plutonium can be extracted by reprocessing. It is for the owners of the spent fuel to determine whether they wish to implement dry storage and, if so, to satisfy the planning and regulatory authorities that their proposals are acceptable.

Environment Council

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 28 and 29 June.

Mr. Gummer: I and my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside represented the United Kingdom at the Environment Council in Luxembourg on 28 and 29 June. The Council discussed a lengthy agenda and achieved positive results.

The Council adopted a common position, by qualified majority—QMV—on a directive on the control of volatile organic compound—VOC—emissions resulting from the storage of petrol and its distribution from terminals to service stations—the so-called "stage I" directive. This will control VOC emissions which contribute to the formation of ozone at ground level. Ozone is the main constituent of photochemical smog and a damaging pollutant. The directive will introduce a closed system of petrol distribution under which petrol vapours are recovered and regenerated into a petroleum product instead of being vented into the air as at present. The agreed text meets the Government's concerns, including the need to protect small service stations in rural areas; to allow the continued use of existing vapour recovery units; and to allow the continued use of measuring dipsticks for existing road tankers.

The Council agreed unanimously a directive on hazardous waste incineration which sets combusion conditions and emission limits for incineration plant and other plants using hazardous waste as a fuel. The directive is an important contribution to securing incineration as an environmentally acceptable waste disposal route. The Government secured a number of important changes to the text which are intended to achieve a proper balance of costs and benefits. These relate in particular to the scope of the directive, emissions limits and the discharge of waste water. The directive will come into force for new plant two years after its publication in the Official Journal of the Communities and for existing plant three and a half years thereafter.

The Council discussed two measures on vehicle emissions. Ministers agreed by QMV the text of a directive, amending directive 70/220/EEC, which will set new exhaust emission standards for light commercial vehicles below 3·5 tonnes maximum weight. The new directive will require the same catalyst technology introduced for cars in 1992 to be applied to light duty vans and trucks, and will result in a significant reduction in traffic pollution from these vehicles. The standards will come into effect in October for the approval of new types and will apply to all models sold from 1 October 1994. In the text, the Council also agreed that additional provisions should be applied in a further stage for introduction in 1996-97. Ministers also made substantial progress towards agreement on a further directive on standards for passenger car emissions. This would introduce new limits for implementation in 1996-97, and provide for further measures to be considered for the year 2000.

The Council agreed unanimously that the Community and its member states intend to ratify the biodiversity convention by the end of the year. The decision to do so is dependent on achieving essential safeguards concerning the financial provisions of the convention and will be kept under review

The Council discussed proposed minor revisions to the annexes to the wild birds directive, but was unable to reach agreement. The issue has been referred back to the Committee of Permanent Representatives—COREPER—for further discussion, with a view to early adoption in the future.

The Commission presented to the Council new proposals for the implementation in the Community of the Montreal protocol on ozone depleting substances with references to HCFCs and methyl bromide, and for Community ratification of the relevant amendments to the Montreal protocol. The Government welcomed the Commission's presentation, but will wish to consider the proposals in detail, especially as regards methyl bromide. In discussion, however, we were able to support the proposed cap on HCFC supply at 2·5 per cent. and a phase-out by 2015.

The Council held a full discussion of the problems caused by the German packaging ordinance for the paper and plastics recycling industries in other member states, based on an oral report by the Commission. The majority of member states agreed that early action was necessary on a Community-wide basis. They welcomed the intention of the incoming Belgian presidency to give high priority to the proposed packaging and packaging waste directive. The Commission will be bringing forward a revised draft to take account of amendments proposed by the European Parliament.

Among other matters, the Council formally adopted the regulation establishing a voluntary Community scheme on eco-management and audit; noted the good progress which had been made on the Commission's proposal for a revision of controls on the wildlife trade—the CITES regulation—and invited COREPER to take the discussion forward; adopted conclusions on follow-up to UNCED and to the conference of European Ministers for the Environment held in Lucerne in April; heard a report from the presidency on progress over the last six months on a number of proposals relating to climate change; adopted conclusions welcoming follow-up action in accordance with the Commission's communication on a "Common Policy on Safe Seas"; heard a report from the Commission on its preparations for a possible Community strategy on coastal zones; and welcomed a presentation by the Commission of new internal measures that it has introduced to improve the integration of environmental concerns into other Community policies.

The Commissioner announced that the Commission had adopted criteria for the award of Community eco-labels for the first two product groups under the Community scheme—washing machines and dishwashers—and that the scheme was now in operation.

Church Urban Fund

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Church Commissioners and the Church of England about the use of urban deprivation index to assess the appropriate level of grants from the church urban fund.

Mr. Baldry: Officials from the Department of the Environment met Church of England officials on 6 May and there have been subsequent contacts and correspondence. The Church of England has made helpful comments on our contractors' proposals for assessing urban conditions.

THORP

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list his statutory responsibilities and functions under the Radioactive Substances Acts in respect of considering justification for operating a thermal oxide reprocessing plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Under section 12A of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has power to direct the chief inspector to refuse an application for an authorisation to dispose of radioactive waste, or to direct him to grant such an authorisation subject to limitations or conditions, if any, as my right hon. Friend may specify in the direction. Under section 12B my right hon. Friend has power to require the chief inspector to refer an application to him so that he may determine it.

The Act does not refer to the matters which my right hon. Friend is to take into account in considering whether, and if so how, to exercise these powers.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the period of consultation over the justification for operating THORP will formally begin; when it will end; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will go out to consultation when they have the further information and material referred to in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 28 June, Official Report, column 392. The consultation period is expected to last two months.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many domestic water disconnections took place in Severn-Trent during the last 12 months and in each of the previous five years.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is given in the table, and relates to Severn Trent Water's supply area, and that of the former Severn Trent water authority. Information on disconnections prior to privatisation includes total disconnections, domestic and non-domestic.

Sellafield (Radioactive Discharges)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his report will be published into the incident which involved the discharge of elevated levels of radioactivity from Sellafield on 12 February.

Mr. Yeo: The report is published today by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. I have placed a copy of the report in the Library of the House.

The report concludes, in particular, that the discharge occurred because a ventilation system from a cell area was unfiltered. Steps have been taken to guard against a recurrence. The radiation dose to the most exposed member of the public from the incident would not have exceeded one thousandth of the average radiation dose to such a person from natural radiation in a year in the United Kingdom. There was no contravention of the Sellafield nuclear site licence conditions or of the current authorised discharge limits for aerial discharges in connection with the incident.

The regulating authorities are to audit Sellafield's facilities on the site to ensure that the possibility of a recurrence of similar incidents is minimised.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 513, how many grant-maintained schools folders have now been produced for the distribution of booklets; and what was the cost of (a) the production and (b) the distribution.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 210,000 folders have been produced to date, at a cost of £51,181, excluding the cost of the booklets they normally contain. The cost of distributing these folders forms part of a general charge to the Department and cannot be disaggregated.

Young People

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total number of (a) 18-year-olds, (b) 17-year-olds and (c) 16-year-olds in January (i) 1991, (ii) 1992 and (iii) 1993; and if he will list for each year the number in full-time education in (1) school including maintained, independent and special schools and (2) further education, excluding those on youth training schemes in colleges.

Mr. Boswell: The numbers of 18, 17 and 16-year-olds in England and the numbers in full-time education are shown in the table.

	(Academic years, thousands) 1990-91	1991-92	1992-93

16	161·7	180·7	193·1

[1] The figures for 1992-93 are provisional estimates based on partially processed returns from schools and colleges.

Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the new general national vocational qualifications.

Mr. Patten: I have today announced that the three levels of GNVQ should in future be known by names rather than numbers:

"Advanced" for Level 3,
"Intermediate" for Level 2, and
"Foundation" for Level 1.

"Advanced" GNVQs—or "vocational A Levels" will help pupils, students, parents, teachers, higher education and employers to understand that these GNVQs require a level of achievement equivalent to two GCE A-Levels.

Bradford City Technology College

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what total financial assistance has been given to Bradford city technology college, to date, by (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector; how much will be given to the college by each sector in each of the next three years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the names of all persons, companies or other organisations in the private sector who, to date, have given financial assistance to Bradford city technology college to support its capital or revenue expenditure; and if he will list the names of all persons, companies or other organisations in the private sector who have indicated their intention to offer financial assistance to the college over the next three years.

Mr. Forth: The initial capital cost of establishing Bradford city technology college totalled £9·16 million of which the Department for Education contributed £7·33 million and sponsors £1·83 million. The major sponsors were: Dixons Group plc, Mr. H. Wong and Kodak plc.

The directors of the college are committed under the terms of their funding agreement with the Secretary of State to provide a minimum of 20 per cent. of any further capital expenditure. Revenue expenditure of CTCs is met from recurrent grant provided by the Secretary of State. As with other schools, individuals and organisations make voluntary contributions from time to time; these are matters for the directors of the college concerned.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Baltimar Zephyr

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) of 16 June, Official Report, columns 644-45, what information he has on whether the Indonesian Government have tried any crew members of the Baltimar Zephyr for mutiny.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not aware that any crew members of the Baltimar Zephyr have been tried for mutiny.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent of mobilisation of Bosnian-Croat citizens in Bosnia-Herzegovina on 30 June; what action he plans in the event of fighting by these forces; if he will bring forward plans to impose economic and diplomatic sanctions against the Republic of Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of reports that all three parties in the conflict in Bosnia are taking further steps to mobilise their citizens. We are pressing all parties to stop fighting and to support the peace process. We are also pressing the Croatian Government to co-operate fully in this. Croatia was put on notice by the 8 June meeting of EC Foreign Ministers that restrictive measures would be initiated against it if the situation so required.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times representatives of Her Majesty's Government have met President Franjo Tudjman of Croatia since January 1991; and what was the purpose of each meeting.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Representatives of Her Majesty's Government have met President Tudjman and his staff on numerous occasions since January 1991, most recently on 30 May when Her Majesty's ambassador in Zagreb met the President. The main purpose of our representations on this and previous occasions has been to press President Tudjman to co-operate fully with the efforts of the international community to achieve lasting and equitable settlements to the conflict in Bosnia, based on the principles established by the London conference, and to urge restraint in trying to restore Croatian sovereignty in the Serb-occupied Krajinas.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times representatives of Her Majesty's Government have met President Izetbegovic of Bosnia-Herzegovina since January 1991; and what was the purpose of each meeting.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Representatives of Her Majesty's Government have met President Izetbegovic and his staff on numerous occasions since January 1991, most recently on 14 June 1993 when he visited London for talks with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. The main issues raised by President Izetbegovic were the arms embargo on the former Yugoslavia and the fighting in central Bosnia. My right hon. Friend set out British policies and encouraged President Izetbegovic to engage in negotiations to achieve a lasting and equitable settlement to the conflict in Bosnia, based on the principles of the London conference.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) of 14, April, Official Report, column 581, what assessment he has made of the relation between that answer, his answer to that hon. Member in the Official Report, column 580 and information contained in United Nations Security Council note verbale, dated 16 March 1993, Ref. S/24900/Add. 27; on what basis the assumption was made that aircraft crossing the borders of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia into Bosnia-Herzegovina were flown by Bosnian Serbs; and what subsequent information he has received about the incident.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information referred to in the written answer given on 14 April to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber by my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is contained in note verbale S/24900/Add. 30 of 26 March from the United Nations Secretary-General to the president of the Security Council. The aircraft observed at Gladovici on 13 March were seen to withdraw towards the Bosnian/Serbian border following the incident, but have not been definitively attributed to any party.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to urge the Security Council to defer decisions on actions in the former Yugoslavia until reliable evidence is available on which to make decisions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In taking decisions on the former Yugoslavia, as on other areas of the world where there is a need to maintain international peace and security, Security Council members take account of the views of the United Nations Secretary-General as set out in his reports, as wel as their own knowledge and assessment of a situation.

Piracy

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make representations to the Government of Indonesia for them to undertake to set up a full investigation of all acts of piracy and murder in Indonesian waters.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's embassy in Jakarta has on a number of occasions raised with the Indonesians the issue of attacks at sea. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the subject during his visit there in April.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will hold talks with the Association of South-East Asian Nations about the establishment of multilateral agreements by their member states towards the prevention of piracy in the region.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no current plans for talks on piracy with ASEAN. The International Maritime organisation is the best forum in which to address this issue. The IMO has recently produced a report covering piracy in south-east Asia.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will hold talks with ASEAN about providing intelligence data relating to piracy and safety to merchant vessels travelling on the seas of that region.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The International Maritime Organisation is responsible for collating and disseminating information relating to attacks on shipping in the ASEAN region and elsewhere.

Iran

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made, directly to the Government of Iran, or at the United Nations, concerning violation of women's human rights in Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are concerned about all human rights abuses in Iran, including those against women. We regularly underline our concerns to the Iranians, both bilaterally and with our EC partners. The latest report of the United Nations Secretary-General's special representative on human rights in Iran includes information about the situation of women in Iran. We and our EC partners co-sponsored the resolution adopted by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights on 10 March reflecting the special representative's concerns.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government of Iran have sought to impose restrictions on the dress of female United Kingdom diplomatic personnel in Iran; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Islamic dress code has to be observed in public by all women in Iran, including female foreign diplomats.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in respect of Iranian attacks upon People's Mojahedin bases in Iraq; what his response has been; if he regards such attacks as being in contravention of Security Council resolution 598; what action Her Majesty's Government are taking on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received a number of representations about the air raids carried out by Iran on 25 May inside Iraq. The possible contravention of UN Security Council resolution 598 is a matter for the Security Council which is permanently seized of this issue. We have expressed our serious concern at these air raids to the Iranian authorities.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on extradition arrangements between the United Kingdom and Cyprus.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Until 1990, extradition between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Cyprus was possible under the Commonwealth scheme for the rendition of fugitive offenders. Since 1990, extradition arrangements with the Republic of Cyprus are under the Extradition Act 1989 and the European convention on extradition.

Murders (Holidaymakers)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom citizens have been murdered on overseas holidays in each year since 1985; and if he will list the countries the murders occurred in.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of United Kingdom citizens murdered abroad since 1985, and reported to the FCO, is as follows:

	Numbers
1985	18
1986	26
1987	45
1988	55
1989	39
1990	50
1991	49
1992	51
1993	[1]27

[1] First six months.

Murders took place in 75 countries, as shown in the list.

FCO records do not distinguish between holiday-makers, business people and residents abroad.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his statement of 28 June, Official Report, column 657, what independent evidence he sought about the competence as saboteurs of the alleged conspirators against ex-President Bush before coming to his conclusion that the United States response was justified and proportionate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United States have made it clear that they had evidence of Iraqi intelligence involvement in the attempt on the life of ex-President Bush in Kuwait. The United States briefed the Security Council about the evidence on 27 June.

Belize

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss future Central American and Caribbean issues with the new Prime Minister of Belize; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no such plans, but Her Majesty's high commissioner in Belmopan, who is in regular touch with the Belize authorities on a wide range of issues, called on the new Prime Minister shortly after the recent election.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Irish Language

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) which experts in Irish-medium education advised the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education on the appropriateness of the courses in subject application, education and professional studies in the BEd degree at St. Mary's college, Belfast and in the PGCE course at Queen's university, Belfast to the needs of teachers of Irish in Irish-medium primary and secondary schools in Northern Ireland and of his Department;

(2) what action his Department intends to take in relation to the training of teachers of the Irish language;

(3) if the written advice of the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education is available to the public;

(4) what criteria were adopted by the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education in determining the appropriateness of courses in subject application, education and professional studies in the BEd degree at St. Mary's college, Belfast and in the PGCE course at the Queen's university of Belfast to the needs of teachers of Irish in Irish-medium primary and secondary schools in Northern Ireland;

(5) who are the experts in (i) the teaching of Irish and (ii) modern language teaching methodology who advised the Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education on the appropriateness of the course in Celtic for the BEd degree at St. Mary's college, Belfast to the needs of student teachers of Irish in Northern Ireland and of his Department;

(6) what criteria were adopted by the Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education in determining whether the Celtic course in the BEd degree at St. Mary's college, Belfast is suitable for the needs of student teachers of Irish in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: As a precondition of approval by the Department of Education, courses of initial teacher training—ITT—in Northern Ireland are considered by the Council for the Accreditation of the Teacher Education —CATE—and required to meet certain defined Government criteria. The form and nature of these criteria are currently set out in the Department's circular 1989/40 "Initial Teacher Training Approval of Courses" which replaced circular 1985/20. Bachelor of education courses at St. Mary's college of education and post-graduate certificate of education courses at St. Mary's and Queen's university, with a main subject option of Celtic which student teachers of Irish undertake, were considered against Government criteria set out in circular 1985/20 and were approved as suitable courses of teacher training in December 1989. To help CATE in its work, all ITT institutions in Northern Ireland were visited and reported on by the Department's inspectorate. Circulars 1985/20 and 1989/40 are in the public domain, but the advice given by CATE to the Department in respect of courses at individual institutions is confidential. A review of ITT in Northern Ireland is currently under way. Developments emanating from this review are likely to affect the mode and content of all ITT courses; include an increase in school-based initial teacher training and a clearer definition of the competences which successful teachers would be expected to have as they progress through initial teacher training, induction and the more advanced stages of their careers. After a period of consultation, any changes resulting from the review will be announced later this year.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the nature and scope of research into the teaching of Irish carried out by the staff of St. Mary's college and of the department and school of education of the Queen's university of Belfast since 1980.

Mr. Ancram: The emphasis in recent years has not been on research into the teaching of modern languages, including Irish, but on the provision of professional support and production of learning materials for use in the classroom. St. Mary's college of education, in conjunction with my Department and the education and library boards, has been actively involved in this area. One notable result has been the production of a graded reading scheme for children learning to read through the medium of Irish.

At Queen's university, research into the teaching of Irish has been part of on-going research into the teaching of modern languages.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times inspectors from his Department have furnished him and his predecessors with reports on the teaching of Irish in higher education in the past 20 years; and what arrangements exist to make these reports available to the public.

Mr. Ancram: There has been one substantive report on the teaching of Irish in St. Mary's college of education, which formed part of a general inspection of the college in 1987.

This report was not a published document. It was supplied in confidence to the college authorities and to the Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education.

Structural Funds

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the consultative draft of the "Northern Ireland Structural Funds Plan 1994 to 1999" was issued for consultation; and when he will make it available to right hon. and hon. Members elected for Northern Ireland constituencies.

Sir John Wheeler: The Department of Finance and Personnel circulated a consultation draft of the key sections of the "Northern Ireland Structural Funds Plan 1994 to 1999" to local interest groups on 25 June 1993. The closing date for the receipt of comments is 31 August. The interest generated in the draft plan has been much greater than anticipated with over 700 copies issued so far. Copies have already been issued to the Northern Ireland MEPs and main political party leaders, but I welcome the right hon. Gentleman's interest in the draft plan and would, of course, be pleased to send a copy to any of the Members elected for Northern Ireland constituencies if they request it.

Water Main, Ballygowan

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he first received a complaint about a burst water main opposite 21-23 Saintfield road, Ballygowan; on what date the water main was repaired; why the water service was unable to repair the mains earlier; what is the estimated total loss of water in gallons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment was notified on 21 June 1993 about a leaking hydrant opposite 21-23 Saintfield road, Ballygowan, and the repair was carried out on 1 July. During the period from 21 June to 1 July there were six burst mains, 25 burst service pipes and 16 leaking valves in the area requiring urgent repair as they were causing loss of water pressure and supply to consumers; the leaking hydrant was causing neither. It was not seen as a hazard to vehicular or pedestrian traffic and the other repairs were given priority. The estimated loss of water was 72,000 gallons.

Homeless Young People

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what help is given to those young people from Northern Ireland who find themselves homeless in Britain and wish to return to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive has a statutory duty to respond to those persons who are homeless in Northern Ireland. Young people who are homeless in Britain do not come within its responsibility until they arrive in Northern Ireland.

Road Safety, Ballygowan

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about road safety on the main Belfast road, Ballygowan in the vicinity of the bus stop near Ballygowan Pharmacy, 15 The Square, Ballygowan; what consideration he has given to the provision of a pedestrian crossing at this location across the main Belfast road to unit 6; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In the past six years, two requests have been received for the provision of a pedestrian crossing at this location. A survey will be carried out in September to determine whether a pedestrian crossing is needed.

Young Migrants

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial support is given to housing associations in Northern Ireland who wish to work specifically in advice and support to young people wishing to migrate to other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: None. In 1989-90, however, the Department of Health and Social Services grant aided the production of a leaflet "Second Thoughts—A Closer Look at Emigrating to London" which was jointly produced by a number of organisations, including one registered housing association. A copy of the leaflet will be placed in the Library.

A further grant has been made available to produce an updated version of the leaflet, which is expected to be available in the autumn.

Industrial Development Board

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what lists are held by the IDB of architects, quantity surveyors, mechanical and electrical contractors and structural engineers for engagement in design teams for capital projects or invitations to tender; and how such lists are compiled and reviewed.

Mr. Atkins: The IDB holds separate lists of architects; quantity surveyors; mechanical and electrical engineers; and civil and structural engineers. These lists are compiled on the basis of practice information supplied by applicant firms. The lists are not reviewed as it is the responsibility of applicant firms to update the practice information supplied to the IDB.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a list of IDB construction contracts for the last four years indicating the total value of each contract, the names of firms in the respective design teams, the names of contractor firms and the names of those invited to tender.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is being compiled and will be placed in the Library in due course.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding the IDB's use of consultants in capital projects indicating whether they are appointed by rota, by free bid, by client preference or IDB preferences.

Mr. Atkins: The IDB assesses and selects professional practices for appointment as design consultants in capital projects. The assessment is based on the practice information submitted to it by firms seeking inclusion in IDB's select lists. Selection for particular projects is based on professional expertise, past performance, and the availability of resources to cope with the scale of design work within the project timescale. Account is taken also of any views stated by the IDB client company for whom the project is being built. There is no rota system, but the IDB does seek to spread work among consultants. Whenever possible, preference is given to local professional practices capable of undertaking the work.

From 1 July 1993, the procurement of professional services will be governed by EC legislation as contained in the Public Services Contracts Regulations 1993.

Emergency Provisions Act

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the exercise of the powers contained in section 57 of and schedule 5 to the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: During 1992, I received 24 applications from the Royal Ulster Constabulary for the appointment of persons to exercise the powers conferred by schedule 5 to the 1991 Act.

The following statistics indicate the extent of the use of these powers during the 1992 calendar year.

	Number
(a) number of applications for appointment	[1]24
(b) number of appointments made	[1]23
(c) number of notices to attend issued	[1]30
(d) number of interviews conducted	[1]23
(e) number of search warrants obtained	[1]0
(f) number of persons charged with Schedule 5 offences	[1]1
(g) number of persons convicted of Schedule 5 offences	[1]1
(h) number of search warrants or orders obtained	[2]0
(i) number of production orders obtained	[2]0
(j) number of explanation orders obtained	[2]0

[1]Under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) act 1991.
[2]Under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

I am satisfied that the powers have been used to good effect and that they are extremely useful in the continuing efforts to disrupt and curtail terrorist fund raising and to bring offenders to justice.

Bus Services

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progresss has been made towards implementation of the recommendations contained in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report of June 1989 on the bus services in Northern Ireland provided by Ulsterbus Ltd. and Citybus Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have today placed in the Library of the House, the third and final response to the report which has been prepared by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland in consultation with the bus companies and the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company. I am glad to confirm that good progress has been made on the implementation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's recommendations since this matter was last reported to the House in March 1991. The response now indicates that 42 of the 58 recommendations made by the MMC have been implemented in full and that the remaining 16 recommendations have been accepted and their implementation is continuing.

I am pleased to inform the House that research published recently by the General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland has shown that there has been a significant improvement in services provided by the bus companies since the council carried out similar research in 1987. This reflects in some measure the steps taken by companies in response to the MMC recommendations and the oversight of their implementation by the Transport Holding Company and the Department. In February 1993, the companies fulfilled the commitment in the Northern Ireland citizens charter by publishing their bus passengers charter. I am confident that the companies will meet the targets it sets for standards and quality of service and that, over time, will strive to improve standards even further, achieve better value for money and, in consultation with their customers, provide greater choice and a better and more attractive service which the public are entitled to expect.

Industrial Electricity

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the transitional relief to monthly billed industrial electricity consumers in Northern Ireland, announced by him on 25 March, is in place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Yes. Transitional relief in the form of rebates on electricity bills, will be paid to about 3,800 monthly billed industrial and commercial customers. This will enable the tariff increase for those customers, which took effect from 1 April 1993, to be reduced from an average of 15 per cent. to 9 per cent. The relief will be paid out of a trust fund of £12·9 million which has been established and funded out of the dividend of £16·5 million declared by NIE in respect of the year to 31 March 1993. A subsidiary company of Northern Ireland Electricity plc will act as trustee. These arrangements have been notified to and cleared by the European Commission.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Northern Ireland Office is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 6 July 1993]: Available information can be obtained from the following publications, copies of which are held in the Library.

(i) "Public Bodies 1992" lists the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments and includes the audit arrangements for each executive non-departmental public body.

The responsibilities of the Audit Commission or National Audit Office do not extend to the six Northern Ireland Departments, which have their own similarly appointed body—the Northern Ireland Audit Office.

(ii) The Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints is responsible for undertaking the investigation of complaints against non-departmental public bodies. The Commissioner for Complaints (Northern Ireland) Act 1969 and the "Statutes Revised (2nd edition) Cumulative Supplement" list the non-departmental public bodies subject to investigation by the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints.

All public servants are subject to the citizens charter and non-departmental public bodies are therefore encouraged through their sponsor Departments to adopt charter principles.

The other information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

School Drama Departments

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many school drama departments he has visited in his official capacity.

Mr. Brooke: Although invitations to school drama departments are more likely to go to Ministers in the Department for Education, I visited the Guildhall School of Music and Drama on 3 March.

Theatre in Education

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many representations he has received regarding the future of theatre in education provision.

Mr. Brooke: Since the start of the current campaign on behalf of theatre in education, I have received more than 30 such representations.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultation he has had with (a) the Arts Council of Great Britain, (b) the regional arts boards, (c) the Department for Education and (d) local authority associations regarding the future of theatre in education provision.

Mr. Brooke: My Department has discussed theatre in education provision with the bodies listed in (a), (b), and (c), and additionally with the Welsh arts council.

Regional Arts Boards

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which education officers working with regional arts boards he has met in his official capacity.

Mr. Brooke: I have met no regional arts board—RAB—education officers for formal discussions. During regional visits, I have met informally several RAB officers whose responsibilities include educational issues.

Tourist Accommodation

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consideration has been given to a pan-European standard scheme for classifying and grading tourist accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: None. There is little industry support for such a proposal.

Tourism

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) how many full and part-time civil servants are employed in his Department on monitoring the activities of the British Tourist Authority; and what will be the cost of the salaries in the current financial year;

(2) how many full and part-time civil servants are employed in his Department monitoring the activities of the English tourist board; and what will be the cost of their salaries in the current financial year.

Mr. Sproat: There are 20 staff employed in my Department's tourism division, including two who work part-time. It is part of the division's role to ensure that the British Tourist Authority and the English tourist board make effective and efficient use of the money voted to them by Parliament. The division's salary budget for 1993-94 is £448,820.

HEALTH

Nurses

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses were at work in the areas served by (a) the Trent regional health authority and (b) the Doncaster district health authority in the years 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Nursing and midwifery staff (excluding agency) in Trent Regional Health Authority and Doncaster District Health Authority as at 30 September 1991: whole-time equivalents

1991	Number
Trent Regional Health Authority	37,950
Doncaster District Health Authority	2,630

Notes:
Figures are rounded to the nearest ten whole-time equivalents.
Trusts are included in the totals.

Ophthalmology

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what were the average waiting times for in-patient and out-patient treatment for ophthalmology in each year since 1985 for each regional health authority and in England;

(2) what was the year end waiting list for (a) in-patient and (b) out-patient treatment in ophthalmology for each regional health authority and in England in each year since 1985.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the table. Information about waiting times for ophthalmology treatment—in-patients and day cases—is not available prior to March 1988. Figures for March 1993 are not yet finalised, but provisional figures show that no one was waiting more than two years at 31 March 1993 in any region for hospital in-patient or day case treatment. Information on the number of people waiting for out-patient appointments is not available centrally.

EC Health Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on total health care per head of population expressed in purchasing power parities in each EC country.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service will be spending £647 for every man, woman and child in the United Kingdom in 1993-94. Figures for the European Community are not available on a comparable basis.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the report of the task force on myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Sackville: A task force chaired by Dr. David Tyrrell has been established involving medical and scientific experts, representation from the myalgic encephalomeylitis voluntary organisations and an observer from the Department of Health. The task force will look at the existing literature and research with a view to disseminating the information to health care professionals. It will be for the task force to advise on whether its findings should be published.

Abortions

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to issue guidance to health authorities on the appropriate provision for payment for abortions carried out in their area.

Mr. Sackville: None. It is the responsibility of individual health authorities to decide how best to provide and fund local health services.

NHS Numbers

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total estimated cost of issuing new national health service numbers.

Mr. Sackville: The costs of implementing the national health service number replacement programme are estimated at £22 million at today's prices, over the period 1992 to 1995.

Out-patients Departments

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what surveys have been taken as to the number of people who have had to wait more than 30 minutes before seeing a doctor in an out-patients department during each of the last 12 months.

Dr. Mawhinney: Performance against the patients charter, including the standard on 30 minutes waiting time in out-patient clinics, is monitored on a quarterly basis. A variety of methods can be used to obtain data, including surveys.

Every purchasing authority is in the process of producing their first annual report on their providers' performance against all aspects of the patients charter.

Information Management

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total estimated cost of the information management and technology strategy for the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: The major thrust of the information management and technology strategy for the national health service is that the implementation of computer systems is a local responsibility. Local managers take investment decisions in line with their business requirements and are expected to obtain best value for money. Comprehensive details of estimated investments are not available centrally.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total estimated budget of the information management group of the national health service management executive for the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: The total budget for the information management group for 1993-94 is £51,408,132.

NHS Administrative Registers

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make it her policy that no other Government Department or body will have access to information stored on national health service administrative registers;

(2) what action the Government will take to ensure that information stored on national health service administrative registers will be used only for the purposes for which it is intended.

Mr. Sackville: Administrative registers are being developed in the national health service to enhance the care of patients and improve the management efficiency of the service. Any access to and use of information on the registers by other bodies will be strictly controlled for those purposes in accordance with agreements reached with the Data Protection Registrar.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total estimated cost of establishing the national health service administrative registers.

Mr. Sackville: There are five pilot projects in England to trial the establishment of local national health service administrative registers. These sites are due to complete their work in late 1994 and the lessons learnt, including information on costs, will be the basis for decisions on national implementation.

Drugs Expenditure

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of national health service spending in each year since 1979 has been spent on drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

Year	Total NHS drugs bill as a percentage of total NHS expenditure Per cent.
1979-80	10·2
1980-81	9·4
1981-82	9·6
1982-83	10·2
1983-84	10·7
1984-85	10·4
1985-86	10·5
1986-87	10·6
1987-88	10·7
1988-89	10·8
1989-90	11·2
1990-91	10·7
1991-92	10·9

Note: 1992-93 expenditure figures are not yet available.

Healthy Eating

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to promote healthier eating habits in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The nutrition task force, set up under the "Health of the Nation" White Paper, has this week issued, for public consultation, its outline programme for co-ordinated action to address the dietary targets in the strategy. The programme covers the areas of education and information; catering; the food chain; and, the role of the national health service and health professionals. Copies of the programme will be placed in the Library.

Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Slimming Illnesses

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were admitted to hospitals in England and Wales suffering from the acute effects of anorexia and other slimming illnesses in the latest available year.

Mr. Bowis: The latest available figures for England—1989-90—show that there were 1,420 recorded finished consultant episodes with diagnoses of anorexia nervosa and a further 180 finished consultant episodes with the diagnosis of bulimia. Episodes involving the acute effects of these diseases are not separately identifiable. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being introduced to help people suffering from anorexia and other slimming-related illnesses; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Health Authorities are responsible for meeting the needs of people with eating disorders but the Department has advised on and drawn attention to the importance of such disorders in the "Mental Illness Key Area Handbook", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Hospital Services, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to discuss the future of hospital services in Liverpool with the relevant community health councils; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Liverpool Central and Southern community health council and Liverpool Eastern CHC have both responded to the consultation exercise carried out by Liverpool district health authority on proposals for the future development of health services in Liverpool.

The responses have been referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State who will consider them carefully in deciding on Liverpool DHA's proposals.

Paediatric Services

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated by paediatric services, in each year since 1988 in the north western and Mersey regions, broken down by hospital.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bruce Martin, chairman of North Western regional health authority and Sir Donald Wilson, chairman of Mersey health authority, for details.

Merseyside Hospitals

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will visit the Broadgreen, Alder Hey and Royal Liverpool University hospitals in the near future to discuss with the staff of those hospitals possible developments in the services they provide; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be meeting all the trust chairmen, in Mersey region, at Alder Hey hospital, as well as meeting district health authority and family health services authority chairmen.

Provision of services at these hospitals are a matter for the trusts concerned together with their purchasing health authorities.

Broadgreen Hospital, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received about the future financing of Broadgreen hospital, Liverpool; and if she will carry out a review of the present arrangements.

Mr. Sackville: We have received a number of letters from the general public about the future of Broadgreen hospital over the past few months, but none specifically about future financing. I shall be meeting with local Members of Parliament to discuss the future of Broadgreen next week.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will shortly be considering the proposals of Liverpool health authority for the future development of health services in Liverpool, which affect Broadgreen, and which have been referred to her for a decision.

Dysentery

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of dysentery were reported in Nottingham during the last 12 months and in each of the previous five years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Reported cases of dysentery in Nottingham 1987-1991

Year	Number
1987	8
1988	5
1989	148
1990	23
1991	38

Note:
The total number of reported cases in Nottingham for the last 12 months is 110[1].
[1]Week ending 19 June 1992 to week ending 18 June 1993.

There was a national increase in notifications of dysentry in 1991 and early 1992 with a subsequent fall in notifications in the second half of 1992. In addition to its usual role of surveillance and giving advice on the control of outbreaks of the disease, the Public Health Laboratory Service has established a working group of people with expertise in this area to determine whether any additional steps should be taken.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has approved the Human Fertilisation and Embryology authority's revised code of practice.

Mr. Sackville: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's revised code of practice was approved and laid before the Houses of Parliament today. Copies of the code of practice have been placed in the Vote Office.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the numbers of NHS and midwifery staff by pay grades withn the groups of senior nursing and midwifery staff, educational staff, clinical nursing and midwifery staff, learners and other staff; if she will list the number of Project 2000 nursing students, in (a) 1989, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) 1992; and if she will give the percentage change between each year.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 23 June 1993]: The information for 1992 is not currently available. The information for 1989-91 will be placed in the Library.

The fall in nurse numbers is a result of the continuing transfer of senior nursing staff to the managerial grades and the growing numbers of Project 2000 trainees who are not counted in the manpower figures.

SCOTLAND

Kirkcudbright (Food Warnings)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list details of all incidents where the local population at Kirkcudbright have been advised not to drink water or eat shellfish, the time scale involved in each case and the reason given for the advice in each case, for the last five years.

Sir Hector Monro: Since 1988, Dumfries and Galloway regional council has not issued any advice to Kirkcudbright consumers not to drink water from the public supply. There are a number of private water supplies in the area; Stewartry district council monitor these routinely and from time to time have advised individual owners of poor quality private supplies to boil the water before drinking it pending improvements. Records of these cases are not held centrally.

Advising the general public not to eat shellfish is a matter for the appropriate district council's environmental health department. Stewartry district council has done this once—June 1993, Dhoon bay—following notification to the council by the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department that paralytic shellfish poison toxin levels were above the agreed safety limit. The Department does not have records of similar advice being given for any other reasons.

Waiting List Initiative

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will identify, for each health board, the amount of money that has been spent in the private sector through the waiting list initiative each year since 1990.

Mr. Stewart: The information is as follows:

Health board	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Argyll and Clyde	406	54	136
Ayrshire and Arran	376	26	—

Scottish Tourist Board

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full and part-time civil servants are employed in his Department on monitoring the activities of the Scottish tourist board; and what will be the cost of their salaries in the current financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Four full-time staff and one with part-time tourism responsibilities. Total salary costs are £107,660.

Voluntary Organisations (Funding)

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total funding to voluntary organisations in Scotland (a) through local authorities and (b) through the Scottish Office direct in the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Stewart: The figures for grants paid to voluntary organisations in Scotland by local authorities are not available centrally. Direct grants paid to voluntary organisations by the Scottish Office in 1992-93 totalled £25·7 million.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many designated sites of special scientific interest are in (a) Inverclyde district and (b) Renfrew district; and if he will list them.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 July 1993]: The information is set out in the table. Some of these sites also lie within other districts as indicated.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Site	Other districts containing part of site
(a) Inverclyde District
Dargavel Burn	Refrew
Dunrod Hill
Erskine Langbank	Renfrew
Glen Moss	Renfrew

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many of the functions of the Scottish tourist board are to be relocated from Edinburgh to Inverness by 1 April 1995; and if he will list them;

(2) what assessment he has carried out of the costs of relocating Scottish tourist board staff and functions to Inverness by 1 April 1995; how many staff will be involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1993]: I expect the Scottish tourist board to establish a substantial office presence in Inverness, representative of the range of its functions. The numbers of staff involved and precise costs can be determined only once the STB has identified which jobs are to be transferred; I expect, however, overall expenditure to be kept within existing resources.

Tourism

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the reduction in the number of area tourist boards envisaged as part of the tourism support arrangements announced on 29 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1993]: I am asking the Scottish tourist board to consult local interests and to make recommendations. I anticipate that this will take a period of some months. Thereafter, I shall consider its proposals carefully and make an announcement as soon as I can.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to strengthen the composition of the Scottish tourism co-ordinating committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1993]: I am consulting members of the group and shall make an announcement as soon as I can. My aim is to ensure that the group represents the interests of the tourist industry in all its facets.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the board level appointments envisaged as part of the tourism support arrangements announced on 29 June will be made to represent geographic spread within Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1993]: I intend to make cross-board appointments to the boards of the Scottish tourist board, Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. The purpose of these appointments is to ensure collaboration between the bodies rather than to represent geographic spread of membership.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the implications of local government reorganisation for the role of local authorities in tourism support arrangements following his review of Scottish tourism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1993]: The arrangements which I have announced will ensure that local authorities remain, both before and after local government reorganisation, major players in the development of Scotland's tourist industry.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the organisations and individuals who responded to the Scottish Office tourism review indicating which of them expressed a view on (a) the relocation of staff and functions from Edinburgh to Inverness and (b) the requirement for an annual strategic plan for Scottish tourism; what plans he has to publish a summary of the responses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1993]: Responses were received from:

	Number
Statutory agencies	8
Tourist industry representative organisations	25
Tourism businesses	195
Area Tourist Boards and representative organisations	34
Local authorities (plus COSLA)	54
Local Enterprise Companies	17
Other organisations and individuals	88

The need for a national strategy which set out clear objectives and operational arrangements for the industry was a theme which ran through many of the responses, although differing opinions were expressed as to how this might be achieved. The decision to relocate Scottish tourist board staff to Inverness was taken because the Government concluded that it was in the interests of tourism businesses in the highlands and islands that the Scottish tourist board should have representation there.

In accordance with normal practice, all responses to the review have been made available to the public. I have no plans to publish a summary.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Rehabilitation Centre, Preston

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the residential employment rehabilitation centre in Ingol, Preston.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mrs. Audrey Wise, dated 8 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to him about the future of the residential employment rehabilitation centre in Ingol, Preston. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

As you will know from previous correspondence, the decision to close the Employment Rehabilitation Centre at Ingol resulted from our plans to improve the quality and accessibility of employment assessment and rehabilitation for people with disabilities. The decision was taken only after we were satisfied that a network of agents was in place which could provide at least as good a service as that offered by Ingol.

The centre was closed on 31 December 1992. Tenders were invited and the site has now been sold subject to contract. Until the sale is concluded, you will appreciate that it would not be right for me to comment on possible future uses.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Youth Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many early leavers on youth training in each of the last five years in the London East area had completed (a) 10, (b) 20, (c) 30, (d) 40, (e) 50, (f) 60, (g) 70, (h) 80, (i) 90 and (j) 104 weeks of their course.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available in the exact form requested. The following table gives a breakdown of early leavers by length of stay in weeks for the London East area for the last five years.

Notes:

[1] Early leavers are those whose actual completion date was earlier than anticipated at the time they started training. This group will include those starting employment and those who subsequently take up another youth training course or a full-time course elsewhere.

[2] 1992-93 figures are provisional.

[3] DK/NA stands for not known or not answered. A very small proportion of returned leavers certificates are not fully completed. In this case a very few certificates did not have sufficient information to work out the length of stay in training.

[4] Less than 0·5 per cent.

Labour Statistics

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for the last three years (a) the number of people in full-time employment, (b) the number of people in part-time employment, (c) the number of self-employed and (d) the number of people simultaneously employed and self-employed.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information from the labour force survey is given in the table.

Persons employed full/part-time and self-employed

Age Discrimination

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made by his advisory group for older workers on the issue of employment discrimination; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: My advisory group is studying good practice with a view to issuing guidance to employers; I have issued a challenge to employers who discriminate on grounds of age to justify their policies; the group is seeking ways of raising public consciousness on this issue; the group has met twice and agreed a programme of work. It is actively advising me on the best ways to disseminate the message that age discrimination is harmful to the individual, to business and to the economy.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Disallowed Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list by month for the last 12 months and by employment region in England the number of people disallowed unemployment benefit;

(2) if he will list by month for the last 12 months and by employment region in Scotland the number of people disallowed unemployment benefit;

(3) if he will list by month for the last 12 months and by employment region in Wales the number of people disallowed unemployment benefit.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 8 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Questions about the number of people disallowed unemployment benefit in each of the past 12 months in the employment regions in England, Scotland and Wales. This is something which falls within the responsibilities he has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, the information you asked for is not available in the format you have requested. The statistics relating to adjudication officers decisions are not collated on a monthly basis but are compiled quarterly. This information, which includes an analysis of the grounds for disallowance, is published in a document, the "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions". Copies of this document are held in the Library. The latest available information is for the quarter ending 31 December 1992. The report for the quarter and year ending 31 March 1993 will be published by the end of July.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will not be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Health and Safety Executive

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints he has received about telephone access to advice from the Health and Safety Executive using the single public inquiry point in Sheffield or via the HSE free leaflet line.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the six-month period from 1 January 1993 a total of 18 written complaints have been received. During this time, 55,338 telephone inquiries from members of the public were dealt with by the enquiry point. Most inquiries are addressed to the Health and Safety Executive area offices.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the proportion of female part-time workers on adult rates in Great Britain in April 1992, whose hourly earnings, exclusive of overtime, fell below (a) £3·95, (b) £5·26 and (c) £5·52; and what is the nearest equivalent information held in respect of part-time male workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested can be found in the table:

Part-time employees on adult rates—pay unaffected by absence
Proportion with hourly earnings excluding overtime below the following amounts:

	April 1992 (Per cent.)
	£3·95	£5·26	£5·52
Women	49·40	75·90	78·90
Men	49·20	70·60	72·60

Youth Cohort Study

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the percentage of the first sweep of each cohort of the youth cohort study who were in (i) full-time education, (ii) a full-time job, (iii) on youth training or other scheme, (iv) unemployed or (v) other.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table:

Youth cohort study, sweep 1, cohort 1 to cohort 6
Activities of 16 and 17 year-olds, England and Wales

(Per cent.)

Proportion of cohort in	Cohort
	1	2	3	4	5	6
Full-time education	37	39	42	50	58	66
Full-time job	29	22	23	24	18	13
Youth training scheme	17	28	26	22	14	11
Unemployed	15	10	8	3	7	7
Other	2	1	1	2	2	2

Notes:

1. Cohorts 1 and 2 covered pupils in state schools only;

independent schools were included from cohort 3 onwards.
2. Definition of unemployment does not follow ILO definitions as used in the Labour Force Survey. The unemployed exclude young people in full-time education.

Source: Youth Cohort Study.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the percentage of those who hold (i) GCSE/GCE O-level A-C, (ii) other GCSE/GCE and (iii) no qualifications in each sweep of each cohort of the youth cohort study who were in (a) full-time education, (b) a full-time job, (c) on youth training or other scheme, (d) unemployed or (e) other.

Miss Widdecombe: As the information is contained in a considerable number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member.

Youth Training

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of (a) 18-year-olds, (b) 17-year-olds and (c) 16-year-olds in January (i) 1991, (ii) 1992 and (iii) 1993 who were on youth training schemes.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is collected when a trainee leaves youth training. As some trainees who were on schemes in January 1992 and January 1993 will not yet have left, reliable figures are not available. In January 1991, of those on youth training schemes in Great Britain 27 per cent. were aged 16, 46 per cent. were 17 and 27 per cent. were 18 or over.

Redundancy

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated total amount spent on redundancy pay since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Primary responsibility for the payment of statutory redundancy payments lies with employers. Information is not available on the number or costs of payments made by employers.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may make payment from the national insurance fund to employees whose employer is unable to pay. The redundancy fund was merged with the national insurance fund in February 1991. The cost of payments for each available year is as follows:

£ million

Year	Cost
1979-80	19·3
1980-81	42·0
1981-82	53·0
1982-83	72·2

WALES

Accident and Emergency Hospital Units

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the latest year, for each accident and emergency hospital unit in Wales, (a) the total number of patients admitted for treatment, (b) the number of patients admitted at night and (c) the number of nights that the unit was closed for admissions.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of patients admitted to a hospital bed as an in-patient following treatment at an accident and emergency department, the number admitted at night and the number of nights that each unit is closed for admissions is not available centrally.

The available information relates to the number of out-patient attendances at accident and emergency departments and is given in the table:

National Health Service (Incident Reports)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department collects on the volume of untoward incident reports at national health service provider units in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office does not routinely collect information of this general nature.

Economically Inactive People

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many and what percentage of (a) men between 16 and 65 years and (b) women between 16 and 60 years were recorded by the 1991 census in Wales as economically inactive;

(2) how many people, and what percentage of adults aged between 16 years and the pensionable age, were recorded by the 1991 census in Wales as economically inactive.

Mr. Redwood: The numbers and percentages of (a) males, (b) females and (c) adults in Wales aged between 16 years and the pensionable age recorded by the 1991 census as economically inactive are given in the table. "Economically Inactive" includes housewives, students and others who are making an important contribution to community life.

Note: Information for age-groups 16 to 65 and 16 to 60 for men and women respectively are not available.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current value of the assets of the Forestry Commission in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest valuation of the Forestry Commission's assets in Wales, as at 31 March 1992, was £651·6 million.

Hospital Infection Control

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of directly-managed hospital units and hospital trusts in Wales indicating whether or not they have established an infection control committee and an infection control team.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh Office guidance issued in 1990 required all Welsh health authorities to establish infection control committees and infection control teams for all hospitals.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the cost to the NHS of hospital-acquired infection in Wales and the number of lost bed days from such infection.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has by county of the number of cases of food poisoning for each month of 1993 to date; and what were the figures in 1992 and 1991 for the comparable period.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the table:

Notifications of food poisoning—(data are for weeks ending)

Day Surgery

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance his Department issues to (a) general practitioner fund-holders and (b) health authorities on the specifications they should include in their contracts with providers of day unit surgery to reduce the special risks attendant upon day surgery.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has not issued any guidance on this matter to commissioners of health care as, in general, service specifications for developments of this kind are for local agreement, drawing on examples of best practice and professional advice.

Optical Appliances Vouchers

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total number of optical appliances vouchers redeemed in Wales in each year since 1986; and what was the total cost of the optical appliances voucher scheme in Wales in each year since 1986.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the table:

	Optical appliance vouchers redeemed[1]	Total cost of the optical appliance voucher scheme (£000)[2]

Pensioners

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of pensioners in each district authority area in Wales were in (a) sheltered housing and (b) residential care in each year since 1987.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The proportions of persons aged 65 and over living in residential care homes in each year since 1987 are shown in the table. Data at district level are not readily available. Information on the numbers living in sheltered housing is not held centrally.

House Renovation Grants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what statistics he has collected on the level of expenditure on house renovation grants by each Welsh district council in the present financial year; which authorities have confined themselves to grants aiding unfit houses only; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The forecast gross capital expenditure on house renovation grants in 1993-94 for each Welsh district council is given in the table. The authorities whose April forecast does not include expenditure on discretionary renovation grants are Delyn borough council, Islwyn borough council, Radnorshire district council and Lliw Valley borough council.

GP and GDP Surgeries

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the dental surgeons practising under the national health service in each local authority area in the counties of Gwynedd and Clywd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the general practitioner surgeries located in each local authority area in the counties of Gwynedd and Clwyd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Lists of individual general dental surgeons and general practitioner surgeries are not maintained centrally. Each family health service authority maintains local directories of dentists and doctors.

Welsh Language Projects

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the specific Welsh language projects which he has funded since 1987 under section 21 of the Education Act 1980; and what plans he has to fund further such projects.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A wide variety of activities has been funded under section 21 of the Education Act 1980 since April 1987. These activities range from long-term programmes extending over many years to the production of a single school book. While it is not possible to define these important activities as separate projects, the list sets out all the organisations which have been funded under this scheme.

A circular inviting applications for funding next year will be issued shortly.

Wales Tourist Board

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full and part-time civil servants are employed in his Department on monitoring the activities of the Wales tourist board; and what will be the cost of their salaries in the current financial year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Two staff are employed full time and four employed part-time in the Welsh Office on monitoring the activities of the Wales tourist board. Their total salary costs for these responsibilities amount to £76,767.

Young Offenders

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that there is secure accommodation for young offenders in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provision of secure accommodation is a local authority responsibility and no authority in Wales currently provides long-term secure accommodation. In order to facilitate the appropriate development of this provision, the Welsh Office undertook a review, the report of which was published in August 1991. The main recommendation of this report, the provision of an 18-place regional secure unit, has since been taken forward by a joint Welsh Office and local authority working party comprising representatives of all the South Wales county councils except South Glamorgan which opposes the development. The working party is currently awaiting a report from the consultants who have been appointed to take forward work on the design of the unit as well as a site option appraisal. I very much hope that the consultants' reports, which is expected imminently, can be endorsed quickly by the working party so that work on the new unit, which is intended will be in place in 1995, can commence as soon as possible. We have already announced that we are prepared to make available grant of up to £4,500,000 to meet the capital cost of the new unit.

Radiographers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of funding he proposes for post-qualification training for radiographers; what structural changes he proposes to permit such training to take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. Post-qualification training is a matter for the individual employers.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

1. Mr. Mans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals she has to strengthen the incentives for environmentally sensitive ares in the north-west.

Mr. Jack: A new environmentally sensitive area was launched in the Lake District in January this year. Covering some quarter of a million hectares, it is by far the largest ESA in England.

15. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to give the public greater access to environmentally sensitive areas in East Anglia.

Mr. Jack: Our consultation document on the implementation of the EC agri-environment package was designed to demonstrate the possibilities for greater access to ESAs in East Anglia.

18. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to promote more environmentally sensitive areas in Mid Essex.

Mr. Jack: We have looked at the possibility of introducing new environmentally sensitive areas in Essex and have issued proposals for such an area stretching from the River Stour in the north to Canvey Island in the south.

26. Dr. Spink: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress she has made in identifying and protecting environmentally sensitive areas of the Essex coastline.

Mr. Jack: We have issued proposals for a new environmentally sensitive area covering parts of the Essex coast from the River Stour in the north to Canvey Island in the south.

Genetically Modified Organisms

13. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received about the release of genetically modified organisms into the atmosphere in connection with research undertaken on behalf of her Department.

Mr. Soames: None, but all releases of genetically modified organisms for research purposes are subject to consent under the appropriate regulations to ensure safety to human health and the environment.

Scotch Whisky

14. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will meet representatives of the Scotch whisky industry to discuss the prospects of the industry and the workers employed in it.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend will be happy to meet representatives of the industry to discuss any relevant issues.

Plant Breeders

16. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will consult British plant and seed producers about the proposed EC plant breeders rights and restrictions.

Mr. Jack: The Government continue to be in regular contact with organisations representing plant breeders, seed producers and growers on matters relating to the proposal.

Food Labelling

17. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals she has to define and police meat contents in food labelling.

Mr. Soames: The composition and labelling of meat products are already controlled in some detail in regulations made under the Food Safety Act 1990. They are enforced by local authority trading standards officers.

Lime Fertiliser

19. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food how many representations she or her predecessor has received over the last 18 months on the subject of introducing financial assistance to farmers who wish to fertilise land using lime; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: None. However, my officials have regular liaison meetings with the Agricultural Lime Producers Council, the latest of which was on 27 May 1993.

Bananas

20. Mr. Hall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the future of the EC regime for banana imports.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The new harmonised arrangements for the import of bananas into the Community came into force on 1 July.

Common Agricultural Policy

21. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food what is her assessment of the effect of the expansion of the common agricultural policy on European finances.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The implications for the Community budget of enlarging the European Community depends on the individual circumstances of the countries concerned. However, all the countries for which accession negotiations are currently in progress are expected to be net contributors to the Community budget.

24. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has for the reform of common agricultural policy finances in light of proposals to increase the membership of the European Community.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Edinburgh European Council agreed the arrangements for financing the Community's expenditure, including expenditure on the CAP, until 1999. The enlargement of the Community is not expected to lead to any significant change in these arrangements.

25. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals she has for reforming the common agricultural policy finances.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Edinburgh European Council agreed the arrangements for financing Community expenditure, including expenditure on the CAP, until 1999. Under this agreement the agricultural guideline will be retained in its existing form.

Foxes

22. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been undertaken into the methods of controlling foxes.

Mr. Soames: The ministry is not currently undertaking any research on the control of foxes to prevent damage to agriculture.

Research on foxes has been directed at methods of control to be used should an outbreak of rabies occur in the United Kingdom. This work has concentrated on developing a method of controlling foxes by poison baits whilst minimising the risks to other wildlife and to domestic animals.

Balance of Trade

23. Mr. Bates: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action she is taking to reduce the balance of trade deficit in food and drink.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have introduced several initiatives to encourage the industry to produce and market the goods which customers want both at home and abroad.

Set-aside Land

27. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of land farmers will be able to set aside under the new schemes in the United Kingdom under the EC.

Mr. Jack: Under the arable area payments scheme, the set-aside requirement is 15 per cent. for rotational set-aside and 18 per cent. for non-rotational. The Commission is expected to bring forward further proposals allowing farmers to set aside additional land on a voluntary basis.

Food Hygiene

28. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations she has received on the subject of food hygiene.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health takes the lead on the Food Hygiene (General) Regulations 1970, as amended, and the hygiene of foodstuffs directive. This Department does, however, receive representations on food hygiene from time to time.

Most recent representations include comments from a cash and carry company about the temperature control requirements and from a large retailer about the European Community's approach to food hygiene legislation.

Dogs (Livestock Killing)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the estimated cost to farmers in England of the losses they have suffered as a result of livestock being killed by dogs for each year since 1987.

Mr. Soames: Such statistics are not collected by the Ministry. However, the National Farmers Union estimates that up to 10,000 livestock are killed or injured every year in England and Wales as a result of attacks by dogs.

DEFENCE

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much radioactive waste the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston has sent to the Atomic Energy Authority site at Dounreay; and what the waste consisted of.

Mr. Aitken: The Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston does not send waste to the Atomic Energy Authority site at Dounreay.

Iraq

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 November 1992, Official Report, column 250-51, which countries provided Iraq with dual-use technology since 1981 which could have been used to manufacture artillery; and if he will provide details of the dual-use technology provided by the United Kingdom to Iraq since 1981.

Mr. Aitken: Details of all United Kingdom products licensed for export to Iraq for the years 1987 to 1990 were provided to the Trade and Industry Select Committee and published—Trade and Industry Select Committee, Minutes of Evidence on Exports to Iraq HC86-i, Tuesday 26 November 1991. Further information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort. As to exports to Iraq from other countries I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Gentleman on 18 November 1992, Official Report, column 250.

SA80 Weapon

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to review the issue of the SA80 weapon to the infantry.

Mr. Aitken: No.

RAF Support Command

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current operational role, including auxiliary roles, of each RAF station in Support Command.

Mr. Hanley: The primary and secondary roles of RAF Support Command stations are as follows:

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of commanding officers of each RAF station in Support Command.

Mr. Hanley: For personal security reasons the names of those holding official appointments of air commodore rank and below are not generally released to the public domain.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment and the party which the former hon. Member represented.

Mr. Hanley: Former membership of the House of Commons is not a relevant qualification for appointment and is not centrally recorded. We are aware of only one example. Sir Antony Buck QC, the then Member for Colchester, North, served on the independent board of visitors for the military corrective centre, Colchester from 1980 to 1992. At that date he stood down as a Member of Parliament and relinquished his appointment.

Appointments are reviewed every three years and Sir Antony's last reappointment was in 1989. The post was as a member of the board and was not salaried.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Hanley: There is no requirement for my Department to hold such information.

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what links his Department has with the defence forces of Burma.

Mr. Hanley: There are currently no substantive defence links between the Ministry of Defence and the armed forces of Burma.

Depleted Uranium Ammunition

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond), of 1 July, Official Report, column 632, when he was informed of the concerns expressed by the three military personnel regarding fears of inhalation of depleted uranium dust.

Mr. Hanley: The exact date on which these personnel first sought medical advice is not recorded in their medical records, but it is understood to have been after their return to the United Kingdom from the Gulf on 21 January 1991. The monitoring showed no detectable depleted uranium contamination.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) of 1 July, Official Report, column 632, at which hospital or medical centre was the monitoring to which he refers conducted.

Mr. Hanley: The monitoring was carried out by the Defence Radiological Protection Service at the Institute of Naval Medicine, Gosport, on 8 February 1991.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the depleted uranium shells fired at the Ministry of Defence range at Kirkcudbright between 1982 and June 1993 were subsequently recovered.

Mr. Aitken: Two complete rounds and one fragment have been recovered.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department's memorandum on anti-armoured ammunition with depleted uranium penetrators placed in the Library of the House in March 1979 is still applicable.

Mr. Aitken: Clearly the strategic environment has changed radically since the publication of the memorandum, but the statements of the underlying principles of the programme and the means by which it is carried out remain valid.

Swan Hunter

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) of 2 July, Official Report, column 642, whether the Ministry of Defence will now be paying Swan Hunter more than the agreed successful tender for the work on the three Type 23 frigates.

Mr. Aitken: We have agreed an incentivised arrangement with the receiver under which any cost under or overrun will be shared between the receiver and my Department on a pre-determined ratio subject to an upper cost ceiling, which does exceed the original contract price. It is too soon to say whether the original contract price will be exceeded.

Peacemaking Operations

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to a system of dual contract for personnel in Her Majesty's services to enable volunteers to make a standing commitment to international peacemaking operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: We do not believe that a system of dual contract as described would improve the United Kingdom's ability to provide armed forces for international peacekeeping operations.

Royal Military Schools

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the chief executive of the Duke of York's royal military school in 1993-94.

Mr. Hanley: The following key targets have been set for the chief executive of the Duke of York's royal military school in 1993-94:

Curriculum

To achieve at least 5 GCSE passes at Grades A to C for 80 per cent. of pupils by August 1993.

To achieve 90 per cent. of A Level passes at Grades A to E by August 1993.

To achieve 35 per cent. of A Level passes at Grades A and B by August 1993.

To achieve 100 per cent. award rate for BTEC National Diploma courses by August 1993.

Pastoral

To list minimum boarding standards for all houses by April 1994.

To formulate a policy on extra-curricular activities by July 1993.

To formulate a policy on assessing, monitoring and reporting by March 1994.

Finance and Administration

To prepare a 5 year financial plan to meet per capita goal by October 1993.

To maximise efficiency in works property management.

To save £150,000 on the school's in year LTC 93 bid by March 1994.

Development

To carry out a pay and conditions review for all school staff by April 1994.

To produce and market the school prospectus effectively to the Royal Navy, Royal Marines, Army and Royal Air Force by July 1993.

To complete preparations for co-education by April 1994.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the chief executive targets of the Queen Victoria royal military school in 1993-94.

Mr. Hanley: The following key targets have been set for the chief executive of the Queen Victoria school in 1993-94:

Academic and Curriculum

To achieve at least 3 Standard Grade passes at Credit and General Levels (1-4) for 90 per cent. of S4 pupils.

To achieve at least 5 Standard Grades (1-3) for 60 per cent. of S4 pupils.

To achieve 3 Higher Passes at A-C Grades or Scottish Vocational Education Council (SCOTVEC) equivalents for 60 per cent. of S5/S6 pupils.

To continue the phased implementation of the National 5-14 Programme in line with Scottish Office Education Department (SOED) recommendations, with full co-ordination between Primary and Secondary Departments by 1 September 1994, including a system for parental responses on quality.

Pastoral

To monitor the effectiveness of the School Pastoral Policy and Organization Document and complete its review by 1 September 1993.

Extra Curricular Provision

To maintain and improve at least 50 extra-curricular activities, both physical and cultural, involving pupils aged 10-15 in at least 3 per week and those aged 16-18 in at least 2.

Management and Development

By June 1993, to report on the feasibility of admitting girls and fee-paying pupils, and the extent of provision required for them.

By June 1993, to develop and implement a strategy for income generation using the School's facilities, thereby achieving a level of income of 1 per cent. of the total School budget.

By April 1994 to confirm the pay and grading structures in the school and associated allowances and rents.

By April 1994 to instigate job descriptions for all teaching staff.

To implement teacher appraisal and development procedures in line with SOED guidelines and timetable including a pastoral element.

By April 1994 to have in place a report on management and financial information systems.

By April 1994 to continue and enhance efficiency measures effected in Financial Year 1993-94 in order to absorb increased costs associated with developments in the School curriculum without increasing pupil per capita costs.

Warship Refits

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral statement of 24 June, Official Report, columns 446-50, how he will consult those affected by his proposals for warship refitting.

Mr. Aitken: A consultation document has been issued today.

The document will be provided to representatives of those of my Department's staff who may be affected by the proposals, hon. Members with a constituency interest, the relevant local authorities, the dockyard management companies and other interested parties. Copies of the document have also been placed in the Vote Office and in the Libraries of both Houses.

Comments on the proposals are to be made to my Department by no later than 10 September.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are Members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of Members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Davis: There are two hon. Members of this House who are also members of the non-departmental public bodies to which my right hon. Friend makes appointments. These are my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, West and Torridge (Miss Nicholson), who was appointed a member of the Medical Research Council for the period 12 August 1991 to 31 July 1995; and my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman), who was appointed a member of the Agricultural and Food Research Council for the period 1 January 1991 to 31 July 1994. Both Members receive an honorarium of £4,600 per annum.

In addition, Lord Chorley is a member of the Natural Environment Research Council. He was first appointed on 1 August 1988 and reappointed on 1 August 1991 for a further term of three years. He, too, receives an honorarium of £4,600 per annum.

Information is not available on whether any members of the non-departmental public bodies for which my right hon. Friend makes appointments have spouses either in this House or in another place. Similarly, information is not available on whether appointees have been parliamentary candidates, except where candidates were elected.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many maintenance assessments have been issued by the Child Support Agency since it came into operation;

(2) how many inquiry forms have been issued to absent parents by the Child Support Agency at the latest date for which figures are available;

(3) how many (a) non-income support and (b) income support cases have been referred to the Child Support Agency at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 7 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many maintenance assessments have been issued by the Agency; the number of enquiry forms issued to absent parents; and how many non-income support and income support cases have been referred to the Agency.

Although information is not available at this stage relating to the number of non-income support/income support cases referred to the Agency, I can tell you that during the period 5 April to 28 May over 53,000 maintenance application forms were received. In the same period over 19,000 maintenance enquiry forms were issued, and over 700 maintenance assessments were calculated and the parents notified.

At this early stage these figures should be regarded as provisional and may be subject to amendment.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Residential Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to extend the period for which residential allowance is paid to new care home residents who attend hospital during their period in residential care.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 10 May at column 340.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing Productivity

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on trends in manufacturing productivity over the past year.

Mr. Nelson: Manufacturing productivity in the three months to April was 7·8 per cent. higher than a year earlier. Apart from the three months to March, this was the highest growth rate for over six years.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Africa (Aid)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy concerning aid to Africa; what consultations he has with voluntary organisations that work in Africa prior to taking policy decisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Sub-Saharan Africa is a priority for British bilateral assistance. In 1991-92 we disbursed £334 million in grant aid, excluding Commonwealth Development Corporation investments.

We have regular contact with non-governmental organisations on a range of operational and policy issues. The establishment of the British Overseas NGOs for Development last month will promote greater co-ordination between NGOs and ODA.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Heritage Buildings

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what funds are made available by his Department to county councils for the maintenance and repair of heritage buildings owned by them.

Mr. Brooke: Such funding is provided through the grant schemes administered by English Heritage, one of the Department's sponsored bodies. During 1992-93, English Heritage made 46 offers to county councils under its main grant programmes, representing £0·5 million in total. In addition, it contributed over £7 million, in the form of town schemes and areas grants, to owners of listed buildings through partnership arrangements with local authorities.

Local Authority Guidance

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the new guidance for local authorities on historic buildings and conservation areas will be available for public comment.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I have just issued for comment a major new statement of Government policy for historic buildings and conservation areas. This is the first major re-statement of the Government's policies for conservation since March 1987. It reaffirms our determination to protect the 500,000 listed buildings and 7,500 conservation areas which are so important a part of this country's cultural heritage. It emphasises the role of the planning system in striking a balance between the interests of conservation and the need to provide for sensible development. At the same time it reflects recent changes in the legislation; major court judgments since 1987; and some recent reassessment of priorities, for instance for the listing of historic buildings.

This statement will be revised in the light of public comments and then published jointly by our two Departments as planning policy guidance note 15. As such, it will be of central importance for some years to come for a wide range of decisions affecting historic buildings and conservation areas. We hope, therefore, that everyone with an interest in conservation policy will let us have his or her comments on the draft.

At the same time we are issuing a consultation paper on the effectiveness of planning controls in protecting the character and appearance of conservation areas. The paper seeks views on the extent to which problems currently exist and on possible solutions. It invites full public discussion of a range of options, with a view to striking the right balance between protecting the heritage and minimising bureaucratic controls over businesses and private citizens, both of which are important objectives of Government policy. The decisions we take in the light of public responses to this consultation paper will be reflected in the final version of PPG 15.

I have arranged for copies of both documents to be placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Passive Smoking

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to protect workers in the tourism and leisure industry from the danger to their health of passive smoking.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The protection of workers from risks to health from passive smoking at work is already covered by section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, which applies to all industries.

Medical Waste Incinerators

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines and procedures exist or are proposed on the role and responsibilities of the Health and Safety Executive in monitoring and supervising medical waste incinerator facilities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive's responsibilities in respect of incinerators, including those which handle medical waste, extend to enforcing the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and regulations made under the Act in respect of the health, safety and welfare of employees and the health and safety or others who may be affected by work activities to the extent that such activities are not covered by other more specific environmental legislation not enforced by HSE.

Of particular relevance are the Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1992 and the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988, which are each supported by an approved code of practice. Both regulations require employers to assess the risk to their employees and to others who may be affected by the work activity, and carry out steps to bring into effect and maintain the level of control required by their assessments. The COSHH regulations specifically expand and clarify the duties of employers regarding hazardous substances at work to which employees and others may be exposed.

At visits to incinerators, HSE's role is to ensure that compliance with the relevant legislation is achieved by employers and workers at the workplace. The Health and Safety Commission's Health Services Advisory Committee has published guidance on the safe disposal, including incineration, of medical waste and HSE inspectors refer to this guidance during inspection and other visits to incineration facilities.

Emissions from incinerators and operating conditions are covered by environmental legislation and are the responsibility of other enforcing authorities.

TRANSPORT

Bicycles (Carriage by Rail)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the future of carriage of bicycles by rail following privatisation; and if the will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have received a number of representations from cycling organisations and others.

We expect private sector rail operators to be more responsive to the demands of all their passengers, including cyclists. Following a meeting I had with the cycling groups recently, they have agreed to produce a pamphlet explaining the commercial opportunity cyclists present to the operators of rail services and the ways in which services can be made more attractive to cyclists. I have agreed to bring this pamphlet to the attention of prospective franchisees.

Disability

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations with organisations representing workers with disabilities were undertaken before the reconstitution of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee.

Mr. Freeman: We consulted a wide range of organisations representing both transport and disability interests, including organisations of, and for, people with disabilities.

Consultants

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the consultants currently employed by his Department, Railtrack and the British Railways Board on work relating to the implementation of the Railways Bill together with their terms of reference.

Mr. Freeman: My Department's consultants and their areas of advice are listed in the table:

Linklaters and Paines—Legal issues
Samuel Montagu and Co.—Merchant Banking
KPMG Peat Marwick—Accountancy
Coopers and Lybrand—Access charges
Richard Ellis—Property matters
Dewe Rogerson—Marketing
PJR—Management and organisation
Mercer—Freight: Access and regulation
—Franchising
Ernst & Young—Information systems

Consultants employed by the British Railways Board are a matter for the board. Railtrack is at present a division of the board.

Buses

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which county councils he formally consulted in relation to the consultation paper on operation of local bus services outside London.

Mr. Freeman: The paper was sent to the Association of County Councils and to all those county councils which asked for a copy. We are ensuring that all county councils are aware of the consultation.

Public Transport, London

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the type and scope of parliamentary questions from hon. Members in respect of London's public transport service on which he will not provide substantive answers.

Mr. Norris: It is for the House authorities to decide what questions are accepted, for answer by Ministers. Where a question has been so accepted, I will always, as far as practicable, provide a substantive answer on the matters for which I am responsible.

Rail Bridge, Barmouth

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement in the current situation in respect of the rail bridge link to Barmouth and the Cambrian coast line.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from British Rail that there are no significant problems with the Barmouth rail bridge.

Rolling Stock

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the criteria used to determine the figure of £150 million as the total available for a rolling stock leasing project; and if the sum will be treated as public expenditure.

Mr. Freeman: The purpose of the leasing concession announced in the autumn statement was to encourage the development of a private sector leasing market in the transition to the privatised railway. The figure of £150 million reflected a judgment on the size of the concession the Government considered prudent to make, given the need to offer the leasing industry some genuine experience of rolling stock leasing.

Only rental payments made by the public sector under the lease will score as public expenditure as they are made.

Rail Users' Consultative Committees

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers the rail users' consultative committees will have to publish their reports into closure proposals under his railway privatisation plans.

Mr. Freeman: The Government intend that rail users' consultative committees should be free to publish their reports on closure proposals and will propose that the Railways Bill be amended to that effect.

Trust Ports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has made of (a) the potential regenerative effect of privatisation of trust ports in the regions and (b) the regenerative effects of such privatisations which have already taken place.

Mr. Norris: Privatised trust ports will be able to broaden their capital base and, as appropriate, diversify their activities, within a framework of accountability to shareholders.

This will be to their advantage in the development of the port and the local economy which it serves. It is not therefore necessary for the Secretary of State to undertake such studies.

Through Rail Tickets

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made as to the availability of through tickets to passengers starting journeys at Chepstow, Cromer, Felixstowe, Knaresborough, Newmarket, Whitby, Bishop Auckland, Burnley, Milford Haven and Welshpool stations after rail privatisation;

(2) if his proposals for the continuing availability under rail franchising arrangements, of through tickets, will include ticket sales at unmanned stations.

Mr. Freeman: We have made it clear that through tickets will be available at as many stations as possible. The precise coverage is not yet determined.

Rolling Stock

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what sums his Department has approved for capital expenditure by British Rail for the Network SouthEast system, excluding replacement of existing rolling stock and equipment;

(2) what sums he has authorised for investment expenditure on regional railways in 1993-94, excluding replacement of rolling stock and existing equipment but including all new facilities and expansion of the existing system.

Mr. Freeman [holding answers 7 July 1993]: The Government have set British Rail's external financing limit at £1,495 million for 1993-94. This should allow investment of some £1·1 billion. Priorities within that figure are for British Rail to determine, but they will include investment related to the channel tunnel which will benefit Network SouthEast infrastructure as well as international services. The estimate for investment by Network SouthEast in 1993-94 excluding rolling stock and channel tunnel preparations will amount to approximately £95 million and for Regional Railways approximately £44 million. In addition British Rail is exploring the scope for utilising private finance to enable further improvements to be made.

From next April, the responsibility for infrastructure investment will lie with Railtrack. It will take a strategic view of investment and will be charged with producing an indicative 10-year investment plan.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Repurchased Homes

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate by district the number of homes repurchased and allocated by the Housing Executive and housing associations, respectively, the total amounts spent and the priority categories of the households to whom the homes were allocated.

Mr. Atkins: The information in relation to properties repurchased by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and housing associations, excluding the Northern Ireland Co-ownership Association, as a result of the housing initiative announced by the Chancellor in his autumn statement, is given in the table.

All the properties repurchased by the Housing Executive have been allocated to households in urgent housing need or to transfer applicants whose vacated properties were then used to house urgent housing need applicants. Of the eight properties repurchased by housing associations, six have been allocated to households in urgent housing need and two are being repaired prior to allocation.

Properties repurchased by the Housing Executive and housing associations under the house purchase initiative.

HEALTH

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had regarding the retention in St. Bartholomew's hospital of a casualty unit capable of treating cardiac failure and other life-threatening events and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received a number of representations regarding the accident and emergency department at St. Bartholomew's hospital. Where appropriate, details have been referred to North East Thames regional health authority which was responsible for consulting on the proposed closure of the accident and emergency department.

St. George's Hospital, Tooting

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many nursing and auxiliary staff have been made redundant at St. George's hospital, Tooting in each of the last three years;

(2) at the latest date for which information is available what percentage of the facilities at St. George's hospital, Tooting, were in full use, in part use and closed;

(3) what has been the salary and wages or remuneration of the following grades (a) business managers, (b) nurses and midwives, (c) administration and clerical, (d) ancillary staff, (e) non-national health service staff and (f) the chairman of the trust at St. George's hospital, Tooting, in each of the last three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Dr. Elizabeth Vallance, the chairman of St. George's Healthcare National Health Service Trust, for details.

The chairman's remuneration is £19,285 a year.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which district health authority chairmen are also chairs of NHS trusts; and if he will name the trusts and authorities involved.

Dr. Mawhinney: Members of district health authorities are ineligible under national health service regulations to serve concurrently as directors of NHS trusts.

Medical Waste

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her latest estimate of the scale of demand in England and Wales over the next 10 years for new facilities for disposing of medical waste, broken down (a) by region, (b) by volume, (c) by the proposed means of disposal and (d) by the type of operator envisaged;

(2) if she will give details of current proposals for further units for incineration of medical waste, including the location of the units and the firms or organisations which will operate them.

Dr. Mawhinney: Around 125,000 tonnes of waste produced by the national health service in England each year is disposed of as clinical waste. Health authorities are individually responsible for making arrangements for disposing of their waste. Each health authority has confirmed that its waste is disposed of in accordance with the interim standards of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, and that by 1995 it will meet the full requirements of the Act. Incineration is expected to be the normal means of disposal, and will be carried out by health authorities themselves, or public or private contractors depending on local circumstances.

The Department has issued strategic guidance, copies of which will be placed in the Library, to assist health authorities to formulate and implement environmental policies. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mental Illness

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric patients were resident in mental illness institutions operated by her Department in each year since the commencement of the Mental Health Act 1983, distinguishing between those compulsorily detained under the Act and those voluntarily admitted.

Mr. Bowis: The available information is shown in the table.

The table provides the number of patients resident in mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units, and special hospitals at 31 December; number formally detained under the Mental Health Act 1983, and number treated informally, England, for the years 1983 to 1986, and the total number of residents under the mental illness specialty in NHS hospitals and units at 31 March for the years 1989 to 1992.

Year	Residents: formally detained	Treated informally	Total
31 December
1983	6,216	104,194	110,410
1984	5,892	99,636	105,528
1985	6,423	94,738	101,161
1986	6,295	88,821	95,116
31 March
1989	n.a.	n.a.	83,900
1990	n.a.	n.a.	81,800
1991	n.a.	n.a.	70,800
1992	n.a.	n.a.	64,700

Data for 1987 and 1988 are not considered reliable; data for 1989 to 1992 cannot be identified separately.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps her Department is taking to monitor the impact of the NHS management executive letter TEL 93/2 on the time within which detained patients' appeals are heard and the ability of NHS trusts to convene early and effective hearings;

(2) when she intends to bring forward legislative proposals to amend the Mental Health Act 1983 so as to correct the error identified in NHS management executive letter TEL 93/2;

(3) what training is available to non-executive directors of NHS trusts to equip them for their responsibilities towards patients and the public, with particular reference to hearings pertaining to patients' appeals.

Mr. Bowis: The Mental Health Act Commission keeps in touch with national health service trusts about the arrangements for hearing patients' appeals. We will consider carefully any proposals it makes.

We recognise the pressures placed on non-executive directors of NHS trusts as a result of the problem described in the NHS management executive's letter TEL 93/2. This can only be corrected by primary legislation and we shall be seeking the earliest opportunity to introduce it.

We are committed to ensuring that high-quality training is provided to chairmen and non-executive directors of trusts. A wide range of training and induction is available locally and nationally, and the NHS management executive will be making proposals this autumn for enhancing and improving the way in which training and support is provided. On the issue of managers' power to discharge detained patients, training and guidance are available from the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts, in conjunction with the Mental Health Act Commission, and from the NHS Trust Federation. A copy of the NHS management executive's letter TEL 93/2 will be placed in the Library.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times section 4 of the Mental Health Act 1983 has been used each year since the Act came into force.

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the table.

The Mental Health Act 1983 came into force in September 1983. The table gives the number of admissions under section 4 and changes during the year from other sections and from other Acts to section 4 and data for that year have been analysed in terms of the 1983 Act.

Table provides data on the use of section 4 of the Mental Health Act 1983: covering admissions to national health service facilities, private nursing homes and special hospitals under this section, and changes in legal status of patients in national health service facilities from other sections or other Acts to section 4 in each of the years 1983 to 1989-90.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the national director of MIND will receive a full reply to the letter sent to her dated 11 May 1993.

Mr. Bowis: I met the national director of MIND informally earlier this month and am having a full meeting with her on 12 July when we shall be discussing a range of issues including matters raised in her letter.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training is provided for primary health care teams, social workers and carers in the field of mental illness; and what plans she has to improve that training.

Mr. Bowis: Guidance to health authorities and local authorities on developing human skills and resources for all mental health workers is contained in the "Mental Illness Key Area Handbook", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where in her Department the responsibility for providing the resources for training programmes for health care workers and others concerned with mental illness in the community lies.

Mr. Bowis: The responsibility for providing resources for training programmes lies with health and local authorities from within their overall financial allocations.

Training Initiatives

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how she intends to facilitate the resourcing of major national training initiatives in health care, with particular reference to those offered by open distance learning providers.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service management executive has consistently supported the development of major national training initiatives which improve the delivery of care to patients. Such initiatives provide professional and managerial development opportunities for a wide range of NHS staff. Given the prevalence of shift and rota working within the NHS, some of these initiatives are delivered through open and distance learning.

It is the policy of the management executive to support these programmes through meeting their development costs. Decisions about the investment in training for particular individuals must remain a decision for local managers, in the light of local need to develop better services.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Abortion

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with police forces about the steps taken to protect women who choose to seek legal abortion from intimidation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. Enforcement of the Public Order Act 1986 as it relates to threatening words or behaviour likely to cause harassment, alarm or distress is the responsibility of chief officers of police.

Winston Silcott

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given by his Department to a reference to the Court of Appeal in the case of conviction for murder of Winston Silcott.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is considering a report of inquiries made on its behalf by the Metropolitan police. In the light of the results of that consideration my right hon. and learned Friend will decide whether there are grounds for any action on his part.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the content of the acquis built up by intergovernmental co-operation between the 12 member states referred to in the press release of the meeting of 1 and 2 June of the Ministers responsible for immigration in Copenhagen; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The "acquis" will be those instruments and agreements between the member states which the applicant countries will be required to accept on acceding to the Community. This will include legally binding instruments such as the Dublin convention. Discussions between the member states on other items to be included are at an early stage.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what work has been begun by the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on the Crossing of Borders and Immigration referred to in the Copenhagen meeting of Ministers responsible for immigration on 1 and 2 June.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on the Crossing of Borders and Immigration (CIREFI) is intended to provide a permanent mechanism for regular exhange of information, consultation and collaboration on practical matters between the relevant departments of the member states including information on member states' control procedures and immigration legislation.

It has so far held only one meeting, on 7 April 1993.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the agenda of the ad hoc group on immigration under the Belgian presidency; and how many days have been allocated for its meetings.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Belgian presidency has provisionally allocated a total of eight days to four meetings of the ad hoc group on immigration.

It will be for the Belgian presidency to determine the agenda for each of these meetings as they arise. The main agenda item for the first meeting will be the presentation of the presidency's programme for the coming six months. It is expected that the ad hoc group and its sub-groups will continue work currently in hand both on preparations for implementation of the Dublin convention and external frontiers convention, and under the immigration and asylum work programme agreed by Ministers at the end of the Dutch presidency in December 1991, including on admission for employment, harmonisation of asylum procedures and measures to combat illegal immigration.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the budget of the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on the Crossing of Borders and Immigration; and what are the sources of its funding.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on the Crossing of Borders and Immigration (CIREFI) has no separate budget. Meetings are serviced by a small number of staff from the General Secretariat of the Council of the European Communities and accommodation is provided within the offices of the Council.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for further relaxation of controls at internal borders of the European Community as referred to in the press release of the meeting of 1 and 2 June of the Ministers responsible for immigration in Copenhagen.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend, the then Home Secretary, informed the House in a written answer on 17 December 1992, at column 445, that we would be considering what further changes might be made in the course of 1993 to the United Kingdom immigration arrangements vis-á-vis member states of the Europoan Community, in furtherance of our policy of reducing checks on European Community nationals to the minimum compatible with the retention of effective immigration controls on third-country nationals, together with adequate safeguards against the entry of terrorists and other serious criminals.

The change which we have in mind is that EC nationals arriving at ferry ports from other European Community member states would be required to confirm their EC status by holding up an EC passport or identity card, but immigration officers would not normally examine the document in detail. The officer would, however, make a full examination where there was any suspicion that the document was not genuine or that the passenger was not in fact an EC national. We have not yet reached any decision on exactly when this arrangement might be introduced at ferry ports or on whether, as the European Commission have suggested, it might be possible to extend it to some smaller regional airports in respect of EC passengers arriving from elsewhere within the European Community.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the relationship between United Kingdom immigration policy and the premise referred to in the report of the meeting of Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June on the necessity of control of migratory flows for the successful integration of immigrants lawfully resident in the territories of member states.

Mr. Charles Wardle: At the meeting of EC Immigration Ministers in Copenhagen, which I attended, there was a general consensus that the maintenance of effective immigration controls was an important factor in achieving the successful integration of immigrants lawfully resident in member states of the Community.

This view is entirely compatible with the Government's policy of applying immigration controls which are both firm and fair.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the address and the name of the director of the Centre for Information, Discussion and Exchange on the Crossing of Borders and Immigration.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Centre for Immigration, Discussion and Exchange on the Crossing of Borders and Immigration (CIREFI) has no director. Meetings are chaired by the EC presidency and are held in Brussels in the offices of the Council of the European Communities.

Small Firms (Crime)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to help small firms guard against crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office Crime Prevention Centre has recently issued to police forces a retail security guide for use by beat police officers. It gives detailed guidance on how small retail premises can be protected from burglary and will help police officers to provide appropriate advice to shopkeepers. Specialist crime prevention officers and architectural liaison officers are also available in police forces to advise on particular problems.

The Government have encouraged the development of business watch, shop watch and industry watch schemes —along the lines of the neighbourhood watch model. Many small businesses have also benefited directly from various crime prevention schemes supported and funded by the Home Office safer cities programme. We are also proposing to set up a retail action group.

Erwin Van Haarlem

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds Erwin Van Haarlem was released from prison and deported to Prague.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Mr. Van Haarlem was convicted on 3 March 1989 for an offence under Section 7 of the Official Secrets Act 1920, and was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment, with a recommendation that he should be deported on his release. The then Home Secretary accepted this recommendation. Section 46 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 permits the early release of prisoners who are subject to deportation orders. Mr. Van Haarlem was released under this provision and deported to Prague on 5 April this year.

Prisoners (Visiting Facilities)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of (a) demand for and (b) availability of legal visiting facilities for category A remand residents at (i) Belmarsh and (ii) other prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Peter Bottomley dated July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the demand and availability of legal visit facilities for Category A remand prisoners at HM Prison Belmarsh and other establishments.

It is for the governor of each establishment to monitor the demand for legal visiting facilities to ensure that adequate facilities are available to members of the legal profession so that they can conduct interviews with remand prisoners in the interests of the criminal justice system.

In the case of Belmarsh, there are adequate facilities to cope with the normal demand for legal visits requested by category A prisoners and the governor has made available additional facilities to deal with any urgent or immediate request which cannot be accommodated in the usual way.

London Bombings

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been (a) held under the provisions of the prevention of terrorism Acts (b) charged and (c) released in connection with the Bishopsgate bomb and the London taxi bombs.

Mr. Howard: Following the incidents on 24 April 1993 in Bishopsgate, EC2, Seven Sisters road, N4 and Judd street, WC1, 10 people were detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989. One person was charged with a terrorist-related offence, but the charge was not proceeded with. One person was charged in relation to other offences and one person was returned to Northern Ireland to complete a prison sentence. The remaining seven people were released without charge.

Metropolitan Police/RUC Consultations

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Metropolitan police take to consult the Royal Ulster Constabulary in Londonderry in appropriate cases.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Metropolitan police have a close working relationship with the Royal Ulster Constabulary and will take whatever steps are appropriate to consult the RUC where necessary.

Racial Hatred

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to respond to the Commission for Racial Equality's recommendation in its 1992 review of the Race Relations Acts calling for an independent review of the law on incitement to racial hatred.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In its second review of the Race Relations Act 1976 the Commission for Racial Equality put forward a number of wide-ranging recommendations. These are currently under consideration and a formal response for the review as a whole will be issued as soon as possible.

Domestic Violence

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms Mowlam) of 29 March, Official Report, column 103, how many times the interdepartmental group on domestic violence has met; which Departments participated; and how frequent are their meetings.

Mr. Maclean: The official interdepartmental group on domestic violence, chaired by the Home Office, and with participation from the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Crown Prosecution Service, the Departments of Employment, the Environment, Health and Social Security, the Department for Education, the Welsh, Scottish and Northern Ireland Offices and the Treasury, has met twice to discuss areas in which work on domestic violence can be taken forward at national and local level. It will continue to meet as and when appropriate.

Refuges

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the interdepartmental co-ordination on refuge provisions.

Mr. Maclean: As stated in the Government's reply to the third report from the Home Affairs Committee, Session 1992-93, (Cm 2269), refuge provision is one of a number of matters that will be considered by the interdepartmental group on domestic violence.

Mentally Ill Prisoners

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions during the past five years he has exercised his power of recall under section 42 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in respect of a person who was at time of recall a sentenced prisoner detained in prison.

Mr. Maclean: The total number of conditionally discharged patients recalled under section 42 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in the last five years for which the information is available is as follows:

Year	Number
1987	40
1988	43
1989	36
1990	41
1991	56

Information as to the number of these who were serving a sentence of imprisonment at the time is not separately recorded and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last five years he has used his power under section 50(1) (b) of the Mental Health Act 1983 to release on licence or discharge under supervision a prisoner who has been the subject of a transfer direction and a restriction direction.

Mr. Maclean: I regret that this information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedural arrangements his Department requires to be complied with before he will use his power under section 50(1)(b) of the Mental Health Act 1983 to release on licence or discharge under supervision in the case of a person considered fit to leave treatment in hospital and suitable for release or discharge.

Mr. Maclean: The power to discharge a patient under section 50(1)(b) of the Mental Health Act 1983 can be used to discharge, on life licence, a life sentence prisoner who has been transferred to hospital during the course of his sentence. In such a case, if the patient's responsible medical officer or a mental health review tribunal have recommended that the patient be discharged, the practice has been to consult the Lord Chief Justice and the trial judge, if available, about the length of time for which the patient should be detained in order to satisfy requirements of retribution and deterrence. In any case in which that period has already been served, the views of the parole board would be sought about the discharge recommendation. If the parole board supported the proposed discharge, consideration would then be given as to whether in all the circumstances of the case, it would be appropriate for the patient to be discharged on life licence. In any case in which the decision was taken not to discharge such a patient, and it was not considered appropriate for that patient to remain in hospital, the patient would be returned to prison in order to continue to serve the life sentence.

Consideration is presently being given to what procedures will apply in the case of discretionary life sentence prisoners who have been, or will be, transferred to hospital, and who will benefit from the new arrangements governing their release contained in part II of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Immigration Office, Birmingham Airport

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publicise the availability of the new immigration office at Birmingham airport.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Local organisations have been advised of the new immigration public enquiry office and its opening has received publicity in the Birmingham press. It will be given further publicity following an official opening to take place shortly.

Prisoners' Health Care

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which Prison Service establishments the health care service for prisoners now purchases NHS services; and what has been the annual cost (a) by establishment and (b) in total in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Liz Lynne dated July 1993:

I have been asked to reply to your Question seeking information about Prison Service establishments which are purchasing services from NHS providers and the cost of these services.

The health care services (excluding pharmaceutical services) at present provided under contracts with NHS provider authorities and units, as distinct from contracts with individual practitioners, are indicated in the following table. The aggregate cost of the contracts in this financial year is £225,000. For reasons of commercial confidentiality I am unable to give information about costs in earlier years when there was only one contract.

Establishment	Type of Service
HM Prison Belmarsh	General Medical Services
HM Prison Durham	Psychiatric Services
HM Prison Frankland	Psychiatric Services
HM Remand Centre Low Newton	Psychiatric Services

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which Prison Service establishments negotiations are in progress with the NHS for the provision of health care services.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Liz Lynne, dated July 1993:

I have been asked to reply to your Question about current negotiations between Prison Service establishments and the NHS for the provision of health care services.

I am not aware that any establishment is in formal negotiation with NHS providers at the present time. Invitations to tender for a contract to provide genito-urinary services to three establishments—HM Prisons Brixton, Wandsworth and Wormwood Scrubs—are expected to issue soon.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what complaints procedure exists for prisoners who wish to complain about any aspect of medical care or treatment which they receive from the health care service for prisoners or the NHS contractor.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Liz Lynne, dated July 1993:

I have been asked to reply to your Question about the complaints procedure available to prisoners who wish to complain about any aspect of medical care or treatment.

In Prison Service establishments formal complaints which relate to clincal care or treatment received in prison are normally first considered by the head of health care of the establishment. They may also be referred, either on appeal or by exercise of a right of direct confidential access, to the Directorate of Health Care at Prison Service headquarters where they are considered by a senior doctor. In general this procedure is available whether the service complained of is provided by staff of the Health Care Service for Prisoners or by an external provider under contract, but individual contracts may provide—and one current contract does so provide—for clinical complaints to be considered under NHS procedures.

Other avenues normally available to prisoners, including Boards of Visitors and Members of Parliament, can also be used to ventilate complaints about health care.

WALES

Council Homes (Juveniles)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has issued to local authorities regarding juveniles in council homes, including the use of restraint where necessary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Draft guidance on permissible forms of control in children's residential care was issued for consultation to Welsh local authorities and voluntary organisations in November 1992. As a result of that exercise, which ended in December 1992, the guidance was changed substantially from the draft originally circulated.

The final guidance issued by the Department on 29 April 1993 under cover of Welsh Office circular 38/93 was much stronger and more explicit. It sets out a broad framework of principles and circumstances where a child may be restrained. It is designed to cover young people living in both secure and open children's homes and offers positive and practical advice to staff and managers on the care and control of young people in residental care. At the same time, it recognises that managers will need to decide who best to put this guidance into operation. The onus is on the care worker to make judgments as to whether restraint is required in the predominating circumstances and to determine the degree of restraint appropriate and when it should be used. Copies of this guidance are being placed in the Library of the House.

Mobile Libraries

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many mobile libraries were operating in each local authority area of the counties of Gwynedd and Clwyd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The available information is given in the following table:

Number of mobile libraries

	1980[1]	1985[1]	1992[1]
Gwynedd	7	7	7
Clwyd	17	14	13

[1] At 31 March.

Village Halls

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many village halls were located in each local authority area of the counties of Gwynedd and Clwyd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Medical Waste Incinerators

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidelines and procedures exist or are proposed on the role and responsibilities of metropolitan districts in monitoring and supervising medical waste incinerators in (a) the private sector and (b) the NHS;

(2) what guidelines and procedures exist or are proposed on the role and responsibility of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in monitoring and supervising medical waste incinerator facilities in the private sector.

Mr. Yeo: The incineration of medical waste is a prescribed process under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is responsible for the integrated pollution control of private sector and NHS incinerators with a capacity of 1 tonne per hour or more. They have issued a process guidance note, IPR5/2 "Clinical Waste Incineration", which sets out in detail how these processes should be operated and monitored. Local authorities, including metropolitan districts, are responsible for air pollution control of private sector and NHS incinerators with a capacity of less than 1 tonne per hour; the Secretary of State's guidance note PG 5/1(92) "Clinical Waste Incineration Processes," provides guidance relating to these smaller incinerators. The Secretary of State has also issued waste management paper 25, which gives guidance to waste regulation authorities in relation to their responsibilities in respect of the licensing of the handling and storage of medical waste.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the locations, the names of the companies involved, their capacities and their proposed timetable for development for medical waste incinerators which currently are in receipt of planning consent.

Mr. Yeo: The Department does not keep this information.

Dioxin

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the levels of recorded dioxin contamination (a) in the north-west of England, (b) on Merseyside and (c) in Knowsley.

Mr. Yeo: As part of a larger survey of milk in the United Kingdom, carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, two samples of whole cow's milk were obtained in 1990 from north-west England, but outside the Merseyside and Knowsley areas. Concentrations of dioxins and furans in the milk were within the normal range observed in the United Kingdom (0·04-0·27 ng TEQ/kg milk).

In 1986 a background survey of dioxins and furans in soils of the United Kingdom was carried out by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution. Samples were taken from sites in north-west England but outside the Merseyside and Knowsley areas. A report of the results is in the Library of the House.

In 1992 measurements of dioxin levels in soil and grass adjacent to the Cleanaway incinerator at Ellesmere Port were obtained as part of a national survey of emissions from incinerators carried out by HMIP. The results obtained for soil and grass were 0·26 and 0·11 ng TEQ/kg respectively.

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the budget for the Rural Development Commission in each year since 1990-91; and what is the proposed budget for the next financial year.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 28 June 1993]: The Rural Development Commission's expenditure for the first three years is as follows:

	£ million
1990-91	35·058
1991-92	32·263
1992-93	36·210

The commission's budget for this and the next financial year is as follows:

	£ million
1993-94	39·002
1994-95	41·020

All figures include corporation tax except 1994-95 which is a planning figure only.

SCOTLAND

Local Government

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions he has reached about the future of local government in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I gave yesterday.

Police Reform

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about his proposals for police reform in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The existing police forces in Scotland will continue after local government reorganisation but joint police committees willl be established where forces cover more than one council area.

In line with the principles of the citizen's charter, we wish our police forces to be seen to consult the public they serve about priorities, to publish annual targets and to report on performance achieved against those targets. I expect forces to build on their existing procedures for consulting the public, especially community councils, and for setting targets for various activities as required under the Justice Charter for Scotland. To ensure that performance can be measured against resources devoted to policing, we shall require chief constables to produce their annual reports on a financial year basis and I propose to take statutory power to prescribe classes of information which these reports should contain. Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and the Commission for Local Authority Accounts in Scotland will continue to monitor the performance of forces. Reports by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary on its annual inspections of police forces have been published for some time and we shall expect chief constables in future to make public their responses to the recommendations of inspection reports.

Our police forces have become multi-disciplinary bodies with a wide range of professional skills, deployed by civilians as well as by uniformed officers. We wish chief constables and their subordinate commanders within forces to have greater freedom to deply those resources. Accordingly, I intend to remove the statutory controls exercised by the Secretary of State and by police authorities over police and civilian establishments. The police grant payable to police authorities will become subject to a cash limit, though police authorities will retain a measure of discretion in determining expenditure. I shall take reserve powers to ensure that police authorities provide sufficient funds to maintain an efficient force with adequate manpower; and to ensure sensible collaboration and common standards between forces in the interests of efficiency—including standards for information systems. My Department will shortly be issuing fresh guidance on civilianisation to help ensure that police officers perform only those tasks requiring their powers. Some Scottish forces have already introduced local command units with budgets delegated to the local cammanders and we shall encourage wider adoption of these arrangements.

With my right hon. and learned Friends the Secretaries of State for the Home Department and for Northern Ireland, I shall be considering the recommendations of the report of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards and, after consultation with interested parties, will reach decisions on the recommendations of the report. I am also undertaking a review of police conduct and performance procedures in Scotland and, depending on responses to the consultation paper being issued this month, new procedures will be introduced to deal with unsatisfactory performance and unacceptable conduct in the police service. These changes together should enhance the professionalism of the police by increasing flexiblity to reward good performance and to deal effectively with poor performance.

In conjunction with my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary I shall be considering legislative provision to ensure that constables from different jurisdictions have adequate powers throughout Great Britain.

Where primary legislation is required I propose to take the earliest suitable opportunity to introduce new provisions.

I believe that these proposals will ensure that, in keeping with the requirements of the justice charter, the organisation of the police in Scotland both achieves a proper accountability to local people, and promotes the efficiency and effectiveness of individual police forces in their fight against crime.

Midwives

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many midwives were employed in national health service hospitals each year since 1980; how many community midwives were employed over the same period; and if he will describe the changes in Government policy concerning staffing complements for midwives over the same period.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1993]: The data requested for the years 1980-91 are published in the annual issues of "Scottish Health Statistics". Data for 1992 are contained in "Health Briefing—NHSiS Non-medical/dental Manpower Summary: 1980-1992". Copies of these publications are available in the House of Commons Library. There have been no changes during this period in Government policy concerning staffing complements for midwives. It remains for individual health boards and national health service trusts to decide the level of midwifery staffing appropriate to their needs in the light of local circumstances.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women, in each health board area, were refused the services of a community midwife in 1992 on the grounds of non-availability.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Following inquiries of health boards, I am advised that in 1992 no woman, in any Scottish health board area, was refused a community midwife service on grounds of non-availability.

Women's Refuges

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places are currently available in women's refuge hostels in Scotland; and what is the rate per 10,000 population.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1993]: There are currently 283 places in women's refuge hostels in Scotland; this is 0·55 places per 10,000 population.

Community Care

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve provision for (a) the elderly, (b) children with special needs, (c) adults with mental or physical handicap, (d) adults experiencing and recovering from mental illness and (e) persons with a history of drug and/or alcohol abuse under the care in the community legislation.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Under the new community care arrangements, local authorities, in consultation with health boards and other agencies, are responsible for assessing care needs and developing plans to meet these needs. The authorities have been provided with extensive guidance and considerable additional resources. Local authorities should, therefore, be well placed to ensure that good quality services are available for these vulnerable groups.

The local authority inspection units and the Scottish Office social work services inspectorate are both concerned with promoting higher standards in all types of care provision.

Hospital Building Programme

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the capital allocated for the hospital building programme announced in November 1992 for new build hospitals in Lothian, Lanarkshire and Glasgow remain available for this purpose.

Mr. Stewart: [holding answer 5 July 1993]: Yes.

Care of the Elderly

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effects on the elderly since the implementation on 1 April of the care in the community legislation.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1993]: My officials have regular meetings with staff from local authority social work departments, housing departments, health boards, voluntary organisations and representatives of independent sector home owners concerning the operation of the new arrangements. A programme of monitoring will also take place through the analysis of statistical returns, the commissioning of research and the work of the social work services inspectorate.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by her Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomus non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Jack: Our records show that only one member of the House of Lords has been appointed by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food since 1988. Details of this appointment as requested by the hon. Member are as follows:

Name	Title of Post	Salary	Duration
Lord Mackay of Ardbreknish[1] (John Jackson Mackay)	Chairman, Sea Fish Industry Authority	£28,780 per annum	Three years from 1 October 1990

[1] Appointed jointly with Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The other information requested by the hon. Member is not held centrally. To provide it could be done only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

THORP

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the actual and projected figures for current and future employment at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield with an explanation for the basis of the figures and a sector-by-sector breakdown of the jobs involved.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc. I understand that the company will shortly be publishing information of the type requested.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether any plutonium of weapons-useable quality has been exported to Japan from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The usefulness of reprocessed plutonium for weapons purposes depends on its composition. It is not in the public interest for me to comment further. All reactor grade plutonium is held in secure conditions while in the United Kingdom. Any exports are subject to stringent internationally accepted standards of safeguards and physical protection. The Government would allow the export of plutonium from reprocessing only on receipt of satisfactory assurances that the material would be used only for peaceful purposes.

Miners (Retraining)

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what proportion of miners leaving the industry in each year since 1989-90 went on a retraining scheme on leaving the industry;

(2) what proportion of miners leaving the industry in each year since 1989-90 went on (a) a training scheme funded through the job and career change scheme and (b) a Government training scheme.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal Enterprise has advised us that of the 58,018 former British Coal employees registered for assistance with them since 1989-90, 13·1 per cent., 7,586, have entered retraining. These figures are detailed on a year-by-year basis, with information given on those who went on the job and career change scheme and those who have taken other retraining. Other retraining includes Government schemes and further education support by local education authority grants.

Year	Registered with BCE	JACCS training	Other training	Total training	Percentage of those registered with BCE
1989-90	18,251	1,384	552	1,936	10·6
1990-91	10,441	796	218	1,014	9·7
1991-92	15,536	1,671	155	1,826	11·8
1992-93	13,790	2,475	335	2,810	20·4
TOTALS	58,018	6,326	1,260	7,586	13·1

These figures do not include those who entered retraining directly via other agencies, jobcentres, restart programmes etc.

Information about previous occupation and/or industry before entering a Government training scheme is not collected centrally.

From April 1993 entrants to training for work who have been made redundant as a result of pit closures will be identified if they are not covered by normal eligibility rules.

Coal

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total amount of coal produced in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) England in the last year for which full figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1986.

Mr. Eggar: The amounts of coal produced in England, Scotland and Wales were as follows:

Thousand tonnes

	Wales	Scotland	England	Total[1]
1986	9,295	6,758	88,582	108,099
1987	8,037	6,143	87,475	104,533
1988	7,374	6,086	88,210	104,066
1989	6,789	6,251	85,245	100,605
1990	6,398	6,519	78,146	93,508
1991	5,194	7,072	79,469	94,921
1992	4,873	6,935	68,730	84,874

Source: British Coal, Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics.

[1] Only direct production by British Coal is readily available by country. The total also includes an estimate for slurry etc. recovered and disposed of other than by British Coal from dumps, ponds, rivers etc.

Energy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the proportion of energy used in (a) housing, (b) commercial, (c) industrial and (d) public buildings since 1990.

Mr. Eggar: The percentages of energy consumption by sector are given in the table. Further details will be published in the 1993 edition of the Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics at the end of July. A detailed description of the consumer sectors used is given on pages 14 and 15 of the 1992 edition of the digest.

Sector	Percentage of energy consumed
	1990	1991	1992
Domestic	42	44	43
Commerce	11	11	11
Industry	40	37	37
Public services	8	8	9

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of total United Kingdom energy expenditure was accounted for by (a) transport, (b) buildings and (c) other industries in each year since 1990.

Mr. Eggar: The percentage of United Kingdom energy expenditure by various sectors are given in the table. Further details will be published in the 1993 edition of the Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics at the end of July. A detailed description of the consumer sectors used is given on pages 14 and 15 of the 1992 edition of the digest.

Sector	Percentage of total expenditure on energy
	1990	1991	1992
Transport	45	44	44
Domestic, public services and commerce	39	41	41
Industry	15	14	14
Other (agriculture)	1	1	1

Company Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement outlining his Department's reasons for not acknowledging the existence or otherwise of investigations into the affairs of individual companies' or accountancy partnerships in response to parliamentary questions about business collapses and frauds; and for how long this practice has been in operation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department undertakes a number of inquiries every year into companies under the Companies Acts 1985 and 1989, Insurance Companies Act 1982 and Financial Services Act 1986. Further details are available in the companies annual report published each year. It has long been the policy under Labour as well as Conservative Governments to announce only the appointment of inspectors under certain Companies Act powers. The vast majority of inquiries are not announced both for operational reasons and in order not to prejudice the outcome. Public announcement would undermine the effectiveness of the inquiries and would unduly damage the business of the companies concerned, particularly where no misconduct is discovered.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will publish the estimated costs to his Department and to other Government departments of the move of Warren Spring Laboratory to the Atomic Energy Authority, including the costs of disruption to existing research programmes, staff relocation and redundancies;

(2) if he will publish a list of the organisations he consulted before deciding to close Warren Spring Laboratory.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 29 June 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central on 7 July 1993, Official Report, column 153.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is Her Majesy's Government's policy towards the reprocessing of Iraqi nuclear waste at Dounreay.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 July 1993]: As was explained in the reply of my right hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy of 5 November 1991 to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), Official Report, column 68, the United Kingdom and France expressed willingness to assist with recovery of material from Iraq. During these discussions, the United Kingdom and France went to considerable lengths to accommodate the International Atomic Energy Agency's concerns over the responsibility for the long-term storage of waste from reprocessing and questions over the legal liability for the material. In the event, the IAEA decided to pursue another option.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent information he has received on the activities of the Indian security forces in Indian-controlled Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We receive regular information from our high commission in Delhi on the activities of the Indian security forces in Jammu and Kashmir, as well as media reports. The continuing loss of life on all sides is a cause of grave concern.

Brazilian Embassies (Dogs)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he has given to the Brazilian ambassador to the Court of St. James's in respect of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 and the keeping of Filo Braziliero dogs in Brazilian embassies.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Mr. Asil Nadir

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) of 14 June, Official Report, column 423, what assistance he has now received from Turkish authorities in connection with the return of Mr. Nadir to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Turkish authorities offered co-operation and assistance to investigators of the Serious Fraud Office during their visit to Ankara from 7 to 9 June. They have since provided substantial responses to the major part of a detailed commission rogatoire.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Tests (Nevada)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from the United States Administration in regard to the future use of the nuclear test site in Nevada by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: We are in close contact with the United States Administration on all aspects of nuclear testing. President Clinton announced on 3 July that he was extending the moratorium on testing at the Nevada test site to the end of September 1994, provided that no other state tests before then.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to obtain a copy of the testimony given before the United States Congress on 29 June by the Assistant Secretary of State for Politico-Military Affairs, Mr. Gallucci, in regard to the current evaluation by the United States Administration of the Iraqi military nuclear programme; and if he will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Hanley: A copy of Mr. Gallucci's testimony has been obtained which will be placed in the Library.

RAF Support Command

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flying days have been lost due to bad weather, at each RAF base in Support Command since 1979.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent on maintenance by each base in Support Command since 1979.

Mr. Hanley: Information is available only from financial year 1990-91. The information shown is for property maintenance work costing less than £300,000 which comes under the unit's own budget. Projects costing more than £300,000 are controled centrally and cannot be accredited to the individual unit or establishment without disproportionate cost.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional expense has been incurred by his Department as a result of the passing of UN Security Council resolution 816; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The additional annual costs are currently assessed at around £20,000,000.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the military consequences of the mobilisation of Bosnian-Croat citizens of fighting age in Bosnia-Herzegovina on 30 June and the imposition of curfew; if he will consider the withdrawal of British forces deployed near Vitez; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The mobilisation of Bosnian-Croat citizens to serve in the Croatian Defence Council, a militia type force based throughout Bosnia-Herzegovina and organised for the local defence of Bosnian Croat communities, was in response to the on-going fighting against Bosnian government, mainly Muslim, forces.

It is unlikely the mobilisation will have any implications for the British forces in Vitez. The safety of our troops is paramount, however, and we keep their deployment continually under review.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack) of 1 April, Official Report, column 500, what assessment he has made of UNMO document DTG: 131600Z Mar 93 and note verbale S/24900/Add.27 of 16 March in relation to the identity, origin or destination of the aircraft that violated the no-fly zone over Bosnia-Herzegovina near Gladovici on 13 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Assessment of available evidence of the reported no-fly zone violation on 13 March has not produced conclusive proof as to the nature of the mission, the identity of the aircraft operators, or the location of the aircraft operating base.

Desert Storm Syndrome

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will place in the Library details of all organisations and individuals who have made representations to his Department about the Desert Storm syndrome.

Mr. Hanley: Apart from questions from various hon. Members, which are recorded in the Official Report, and letters from the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Enright), my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Mr. Sykes), my right hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Jopling) and my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt), my Department has record of only eight written representations to date concerning the alleged condition popularly known as Desert Storm syndrome. For reasons of confidentiality I am not able to provide names. There has additionally been recent media interest in this subject and other representations may be in the process of being made as a result.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the medical evidence related to the alleged Desert Storm syndrome.

Mr. Hanley: The wide variety of symptoms which are alleged to make up the condition popularly known as Desert Storm syndrome are prevalent within the general population. There is no evidence that the incidence of these symptoms in the services has increased since the Gulf conflict. There is nothing in the available medical evidence in the United Kingdom that would suggest that the symptoms described cannot be explained in conventional medical terms, but my Department is actively seeking further information and will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Depleted Uranium Shells

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether depleted uranium ammunition was used by United States forces in accidental attacks on British forces during the Gulf war.

Mr. Hanley: No.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Commercial Leases

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what new proposals he has to improve the law on leases on commercial property.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As I announced in my answer on 31 March to my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Hendry), Official Report, column 197, the Government have, after careful consideration, decided to implement the recommendations in the Law Commission's report on Landlord and Tenant Law: Privity of Contract and Estate (Law Com. No. 174), for future leases but not for existing leases.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning has also announced the publication of a consultation paper on upward-only rent reviews, confidentiality clauses and dispute resolution procedures in relation to new commercial leases. The Government will carefully examine the responses before considering whether it is appropriate to legislate or take any other action on any of these issues.

Appointments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department further to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 788, what changes have taken place since 1 January in the total number of (a) Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, (b) Lords Justices of Appeal, (c) Heads of Division, (d) High Court judges, (e) circuit judges, (f) recorders, (g) assistant recorders, (h) stipendiary magistrates, and (i) full-time chairmen who are (i) men, (ii) women, (iii) barristers, (iv) solicitors, (v) black or Asian, and (vi) ex-Oxford or Cambridge; and if he will give revised figures for the average ages in each category.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The available information, as at 1 July 1993, is set out in the table, with net changes since 1 January 1993 shown in brackets. As before, the figures for black or Asian office-holders are believed to be correct, but since the formal recording of the ethnic background of applicants for judicial office began only on 1 October 1991, such information may be incomplete. Aggregated information is not generally kept on the university background of judges or their average ages and no new information is available in relation to these matters.

Legal Aid

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects a final decision to be made on the eligibility for legal aid of Mrs. J. M. Ward, 4 St. John's road, Cirencester, Gloucestershire.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Decisions on the grant of civil legal aid are a matter for the Legal Aid Board. I understand that the legal director of the Legal Aid Board wrote to the hon. Member on 7 July explaining in detail the background to this case and the current position.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Asil Nadir

31. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on further discussions he has had on issues arising from the Asil Nadir case.

The Attorney-General: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General how many (a) witten and (b) oral representations he received from honourable Members regarding the case of Mr. Nadir before his departure from the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: Pursuant to my answer given on 10 June 1993, col. 334, to the honourable Member for Walsall, North, I should add to that list letters written by two honourable Members to the then Home Secretary about Mr. Nadir to which my predecessor replied on points relating to the arrest and investigation. Because of the indirect route by which they came to my office they were not recorded on the departmental register of Members' correspondence so as to be included in my original answer. The overall number of Members who have made representations to me or my predecessor is therefore eight rather than six—since the honourable Member for East Hampshire (Mr. Mates) made both oral and written representations, he figured twice in my answer of 10 June. I have not included questions tabled by honourable Members in replies relating to representations.

My reference to correspondence from whichever part of the House, Official Report, 30 June 1993, col. 969, was founded on recollection of a list prepared by officials detailing all occasions when the case was raised through parliamentary channels which included reference to a question asked by the right honourable Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 12 November 1990, col. 34.

Magistrates Courts

32. Mr. Bates: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the proportion of Crown Prosecution Service prosecutions in the magistrates courts which are successful.

The Solicitor-General: For the year ending 31 March 1993, 97·6 per cent. of cases which proceeded to a hearing in the magistrates court resulted in either a guilty plea or a conviction.

Constitutional and Legal Functions

33. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to reassess the constitutional and legal functions of his office.

The Attorney-General: The constitutional and legal functions of my office have an essential part to play in the administration of justice. My object is to uphold them.

Crown Prosecution Service

34. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the staffing of the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has recently completed a recruitment campaign which has resulted in a further 45 experienced lawyers being recommended for appointment. There are now very few vacancies for either legal or administrative staff.

International Investments Ltd.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General what recent representations have been made to the Gibraltar authorities regarding the letter of request for information relating to inquiries into International Investments Ltd. Gibraltar, in liquidation.

The Attorney-General: Officials of the Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland have been in recent oral and written communication with Senior Crown Counsel of the Attorney-General's Chambers in Gibraltar in order to finalise arrangements for the attendance of counsel and the investigating officer from the Royal Ulster Constabulary at a judicial hearing scheduled to take place in Gibraltar on 12 July 1993. This hearing is in response to the letter of request for evidence in relation to the affairs of International Investments Ltd. (In Liquidation) issued by Belfast magistrates court on 1 November 1990 and forwarded to the Gibraltar authorities on 5 November 1990 under the provisions of article 9 of the Criminal Justice (Evidence Etc) (Northern Ireland) Order 1988.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General how many persons of Greek-Cypriot ethnicity are employed in the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office is aware of only one employee whose ethnic origins lie within the Greek Cypriot community. Ethnic survey questionnaires are issued to all staff joining the Serious Fraud Office and are completed on a voluntary basis. The categories covered are those agreed with the civil service unions for the purposes of such a survey and do not isolate Greek Cypriot origins as a separate ethnicity.

United Nations

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General how many staff in his Department have as their primary function work in connection with his duty of providing advice on matters involving adherence to international law in respect of the United Nations and use of force.

The Attorney-General: One member of my Department has as his primary function work in connection with my duty of providing advice on matters involving adherence to international law.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Silverware

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what provision was made in the terms of the sale of House of Commons silverware for scrap to forbid resale or to require erasure of identifying marks or the scrapping of the material.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: This is a matter for the Director of Catering Services and I shall ask her to write to the hon. Member.

Vote Office

Mr. Harris: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on the Vote Office.

Mr Beith: In April 1992 Vote responsibility for parliamentary printing, publications and supply services was transferred from Her Majesty's Stationery Office to the House. An interim arrangement was entered into with HMSO to ensure continuity of existing services. In May 1993, the House of Commons Commission approved in principle the establishment of new systems for the management of the printing and publishing requirements of the House. The particular aim of the changes was to bring closer together within individual Departments the management responsibility for generating House documents and the financial responsibility for paying for those publications. As part of this process, the Commission has agreed the transfer of the Vote Office from the Library Department to the Clerk's Department with effect from 1 November 1993; and the creation within that Office of improved facilities for the production of certain internal House documents.

ENVIRONMENT

Market Testing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the market-testing programme has cost his Department since November 1992.

Mr. Gummer: Since November 1992, the cost of my Department's market-testing programme has amounted to approximately £729,000 and the Department has already achieved efficiency savings in the relevant activities worth about £1 million annually. This is in advance both of the results of the majority of tenders and of calculating the gains expected from Property Holdings' programme of putting out professional services to competitive tender which is due for completion at the end of this year.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whom he has consulted in regard to miscellaneous paper 179 (1993) on the advice given by his Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee in its letter of 10 October 1992 on British Nuclear Fuels plc's proposals for the return of waste resulting from reprocessing of nuclear spent fuel to overseas utilities.

Mr. Yeo: There have been no formal consultations on RWMAC's advice in its report on waste substitution. There remain a number of technical points on which we require further information from RWMAC before their advice can be considered properly.

Building Regulations (Fuel and Power)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to his Department's consultation document on building regulations (conservation of fuel and power); and what proportion (a) endorsed the Government's insulation proposals, (b) wished to see a reduction in, or postponement of, the Government's insulation proposals and (c) sought an improvement in the Government's insulation proposals giving a greater reduction in carbon dioxide emissions and an improved rate of energy conservation.

Mr. Baldry: A total of 170 responses have been received to the consultation document which proposed strengthening of the building regulations for the conservation of fuel and power. The proposals include improved standards of insulation for roofs, walls, floors, windows and doors together with alternative higher standards for roofs and floors.

To date the Department has analysed 70 per cent. of the responses. Of these:

(a) 26 per cent. favour the recommendations in the consultation document. A further 28 per cent. did not specifically comment on the insulation standards, and it could be assumed that they are also content with the proposals;
(b) 8 per cent. wished to see the alternative higher standards for roofs or floors;
(c) 8 per cent. wished to see a reduction or postponement of the insulation proposals; and
(d) 30 per cent. sought an improvement in one or more of the insulation standards.

In deciding what action to take in the light of these responses, the reasoning behind the arguments advanced will of course be given due weight rather than relying on a numerical breakdown of this sort.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when section 61 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will be implemented.

Mr. Yeo: The Secretary of State announced on 24 March, Official Report, columns 633-34, a review of responsibilities for contaminated land and liabilities. The duties and powers of authorities under section 61 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 in respect of landfill sites form part of the subject matter of the review. The Government do not propose to bring section 61 of the Act into force while it is still the subject of that review.

Letting Value

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether the establishment of letting value under part I of the Housing and Urban Development Bill 1993 will be prevented by the absence of or withholding of estate records; and what forms of indirect alternative evidence of letting value including pre-1963 rating records there are, from which such letting values could appropriately be derived.

Mr. Baldry: We have no evidence from landlords, tenants, or professional bodies that the derivation of letting values in relation to the rent test in section 4 of the Leasehold Reform Act 1967 has caused difficulties. We do not anticipate any difficulties with establishing letting values for the purposes of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Bill. Most professional valuers have the knowledge and experience to do it.

Estate records are not essential to the assessment of letting values, although they might provide evidence to show that a particular lease is not at a low rent.

Indirect alternative evidence includes pre-1963 rating records, calculations deduced from capital values and the experience of solicitors and valuers in practice at the relevant time. In many cases, in particular for very old leases, the rent will often be so low as to create no doubt that it is a low rent as defined.

Olympic Games

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest efforts to attract the 2000 Olympic Games to Manchester.

Sir George Young: The Government are doing all they can to back Manchester's bid to stage the Millennium Games in Britain. In particular:—

We have made available up to £75 million to support the bid and the immediate construction of key facilities. Excellent progress is being made on the Olympic arena, the national cycling centre and the acquisition and clearance of the site for the Olympic stadium in East Manchester.

There has been a large number of visits by International Olympic Committee members to Manchester in recent months and over 70 members will have seen what Manchester offers by the time the IOC decide the nomination on 23 September. Minsiters are playing a full part in these discussions.

We have given full backing to Manchester's recent initiative for a $25 million Millennium Foundation to help with the training and travel cost of teams competing in the Manchester Olympic Games. This far-sighted proposal will promote equality of opportunity and provide assistance for teams who need it.

The Prime Minister welcomed members of the IOC to Downing street on 28 June; he is meeting IOC President Samaranch again this week; and he has announced that he will be going to Monte Carlo to help promote Manchester's bid at the time of the IOC vote in September.

Water Contamination

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to publish the full reports prepared by the drinking water inspectorate on all water contamination incidents.

Mr. Yeo: Reports by the drinking water inspectorate will continue to be made public where its investigations of the particular incident show that there are lessons to be learnt or reveal issues of general interest.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, following his recent announcement on a further consultation period for THORP, he will set out the terms of reference for the consultation.

Mr. Yeo: The consultation will provide an opportunity for public comment on the additional material mentioned in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 28 June to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson), Official Report, col. 392.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to comply with the Paris Commission resolution regarding radioactive discharges from nuclear reprocessing plants; by what dates he will supply the information detailed in the resolution; by what means he intends to consult the Paris Commission; and how this relates to the further consultation period recently announced for THORP.

Mr. Yeo: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to Paris Commission recommendations 93/5. The United Kingdom did not accept this recommendation. We shall therefore be taking no specific action as a result of it.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the HMIP report on draft authorisations for the discharge of radioactive wastes from Sellafield will be published.

Mr. Yeo: The inspectors' report will be made available when the further round of public consultation which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 28 June is initiated.

Housing Associations

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy as to the proportion of seats which should be reserved for tenant representatives on the management committees of housing associations formed to take over local authority housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: This is a matter for the Housing Corporation as the body responsible for regulating housing associations. The corporation encourages the involvement of tenants on the committees of LSVT associations but does not specify any particular proportion of seats for them.

The corporation also expects committee members to have an appropriate range of financial, legal and management skills relevant to the running of a housing association.

Shelter

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much grant has been paid by his Department to Shelter for each of the last three years; and what proportion of the total grants budget this represents.

Mr. Baldry: Shelter has received grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 of £422,000 in 1990-91; £916,500 in 1991-92, and £995,500 in 1992-93, to provide specialist homelessness advice to citizens advice bureaux outside London and an emergency homelessness telephone advice service in London. These payments represented 21 per cent., 20 per cent., and 17 per cent. of the funds allocated for section 73 schemes around the country in each of those years.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to abolish local authorities' power to introduce registration schemes for houses in multiple occupation under section 346 of the Housing Act 1985.

Sir George Young: The Department has reviewed local authorities' power to set up HMO registration schemes. We have no plans to remove this power.

Local Authority Management

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the report of the joint working party on the internal management of local authorities in England will be published.

Mr. Curry: The working party's report will be published tomorrow and copies will be available in the Libraries of both Houses by 11 am.

Homelessness

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects his survey of local authorities to evaluate the impact of the code of guidance on homelessness legislation on their homelessness policies to be completed; and when he expects to publish it.

Sir George Young [holding answer Friday 9 July]: Research on the evaluation of the code of guidance is currently being commissioned. The study is due to start in August 1993 and is expected to be completed by the end of 1994. The Department expects to publish the results in due course.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the Audit Commission's review of the Local Government Commission costings.

Mr. Gummer: It is for the Local Government Commission to decide whether to publish any opinions provided to it by the Audit Commission. I have therefore written to the chairman of the Commission, Sir John Banham, to ask if he would write to the hon. Member with his comments.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he discussed the matter of nuclear testing with his Chinese counterpart during his recent visit to China.

Mr. Goodlad: No. My right hon. Friend did, however, raise proliferation issues—both in relation to North Korea and the sales of Chinese M-11 missiles to Pakistan.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the German constitutional court to rule on the constitutional validity in Germany of the Maastricht treaty; and what is his estimate of the effect on the ratification process.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The German Constitutional Court held an oral hearing on the constitutional validity of the Maastricht treaty on 1-2 July. A ruling is not expected before the end of September. The Maastricht treaty will enter into force on the first day of the month following ratification by the last signatory state to do so.

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to enable citizens of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to obtain in that country visas to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no plans to issue visas in Skopje at present. The office of the British Government representative in Skopje has just been set up, and is operating as a one-person post. Even when it reaches planned full strength, with two United Kingdom diplomats, it will have neither the capacity nor resources to offer such a service. Whether the post might offer a service at some time in the future would depend on both demand and the availability of resources, in the light of competing priorities.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs where is the nearest United Kingdom diplomatic point to Macedonia at which citizens of that country can obtain a visa to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British embassy in Sofia is able to issue visas to Macedonians wishing to visit the United Kingdom. Macedonians may also apply for visit visas at any other British mission offering a full visa service.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the effect of the multi-fibre arrangement on developing countries' economies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A number of hon. Members have written to me and to ministerial colleagues on this subject. The Government support a progressive and orderly phasing out of the multi-fibre arrangement. We recognise the positive impact that the removal of trade barriers can have on economic development and the eradication of poverty in the third world. Free and fair trade in textiles and clothing is a goal to which we are committed. However, the ending of the MFA must be conditional upon our trading partners elsewhere giving a commitment to open their markets to our exports and to abide more closely by GATT rules and disciplines.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the destination, dates and purpose of each official overseas visit he has undertaken since April 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Secretary of State's visits are as follows:

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the peace negotiations in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We fully support the continuing efforts of Lord Owen and Mr. Stoltenberg to secure a peace settlement, acceptable to all parties and based on the principles of the London conference. The latest peace proposal for Bosnia-Herzegovina is a Serb and Croat initiative which has not been endorsed by the international community. We are actively supporting the co-chairmen's efforts to encourage all three sides to engage in serious negotiations.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise at the next meeting of EC Ministers Croatia's response to the warning of the EC Foreign Ministers on 8 June of their obligations to co-operate with the international community in ensuring a peaceful resolution of the problems in the Krajinas and in Bosnia-Herzegovina; what is his policy towards the introduction of sanctions against Croatia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The meeting of EC Foreign Ministers on 19 July is likely to address how the European Community can contribute further in support of the co-chairman's efforts to achieve a peace settlement in Bosnia, including the question of further pressure on Croatia.

Mrs. Naseem Akhtar

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken by the United Kingdom post in Islamabad on the application by Mrs. Naseem Akhtar and her children (REF: IMM/B7202) to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, I have asked the High Commission in Islamabad for a full report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Sudan

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations the Government have made to the Khartoum Government over their human rights record.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Such representations have been made on many occasions, most recently by the EC troika ministerial mission which visited Khartoum on 22 June, and in which the United Kingdom was represented.

TRANSPORT

Teesside Park

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will provide signs to Teesside park on the A19 northbound and southbound in the vicinity of its junction with the A66;

(2) if he will provide signs to Teesside park on the A66.

Mr. Key: It is not my policy to install such signs at the intersection of two primary routes. However, I am reviewing the particular circumstances of this case.

Superintendent Earnshaw

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department intends to reply to a letter from Superintendent Earnshaw of Stockton police dated 21 April, Ref. DN 504726/1/01.

Mr. Key: A reply was sent to Superintendent Earnshaw on 1 July 1993.

M66, Manchester

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will now take steps to arrange the meeting recommended in paragraph 16.33.1, on access to Nut Bank house, in the inspector's report on the public inquiry into the M66-Manchester outer ring road (Denton to Middleton section) proposals, published on 19 February.

Mr. Key: We are in contact with solicitors acting for the owner of Nut Bank house. A meeting will be arranged as soon as possible.

A1, Lancashire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his Department's current plans for a major road development linking the Lancashire border to the A1; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I have no current plans for a new major road development linking the Lancashire border to the A1. The trans-pennine study considered options for roads in the area. The consultation period on the study has only recently finished and I shall make a statement in due course.

A13, Newham

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the cost of installing a footbridge, together with approach ramps suitable for prams and push chairs, across the A13 Newham way near to its junction with Beckton road or Forty Acre lane.

Mr. Norris: At present, there are no plans for a footbridge at this location. However, if a bridge was to be provided typical construction costs would be of the order of £300,000 depending on circumstances at the site.

Roads

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to publish a White Paper on roads.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to publish a White Paper on roads. He is at present consulting on his Green Paper "Paying for Better Motorways".

Ferries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which roll-on roll-off ferries operating from United Kingdom ports do not yet full conform with safety regulations arising from the Herald of Free Enterprise disaster; by what date the vessels are expected to conform; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: All roll-on roll-off passenger ferries operating from United Kingdom ports must comply with national and international safety regulations including those arising from the Herald of Free Enterprise disaster.

M25

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the various studies he has commissioned or put out to tender to consider the need for widening the M25 beyond eight lanes and the sections of the M25 to which they apply.

Mr. Key: Three commissions have already been let to study the need for the feasibility of providing more than four lanes on the M25. They relate to the following sections:

Junctions 10-12 (A3 to M3)
Junctions 12-15 (M3 to M4)
Junctions 15-16 (M4 to M40)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to announce a preferred route for the link roads proposed alongside the M25 from junctions 12 to 15.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend hopes to have completed his consideration of the issues to enable a decision to be issued soon.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has carried out to date into the effects of building link roads alongside the M25 between junctions 5 and 28 on (a) pollution including carbon dioxide emissions, (b) development pressures and (c) sites of nature conservation and landscape importance.

Mr. Key: Each individual scheme's environmental statement includes an assessment of the impact of the proposals on both atmospheric pollution and any land to be affected. No studies have yet been carried out into development pressures resulting from M25 widening proposals.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his powers to control the levels of tolls on the proposed Birmingham northern relief road, and on his reserve powers to take over the operation of the proposed road.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has no powers to control the level of tolls on the Birmingham northern relief road. The New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 provides for a toll order to specify the maximum tolls which a concessionaire may charge only in the case of major crossings to which there is no reasonably convenient alternative.

The 1991 Act provides that where a concession agreement terminates for any reason before the end of a toll period the Secretary of State shall take reasonable steps to secure the appointment of a new concessionaire; and that he may himself collect tolls pending such appointments or in accordance with an extension toll order.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide an estimate of the proportion of his Department's total expenditure, including an appropriate allocation of running costs, which is spent on (a) road transport, (b) railways, (c) aviation and (d) shipping.

Mr. Norris: Full details of the Government's expenditure plans for transport are published in the Department of Transport report 1993, Cm 2206. Over the three-year period 1993-94 to 1995-96 total planned expenditure is £18,351 million of which 53 per cent. is for national and local roads, 38 per cent. for public transport, including rail, and just over 2 per cent. for air and sea transport; the remainder is accounted for by central administration, the Department's executive agencies, and miscellaneous services.

British Rail

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had from the North West Regional Association about British Rail privatisation; what reply he is sending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: An official reply was sent to the secretary of the North West Regional Association on 1 July in response to its letter of 23 June. I am sending a copy of the correspondence to the hon. Member.

Railways (Vandalism)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, columns 613-4, if he will provide a regional breakdown of prosecutions for acts of vandalism on rail lines.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not readily available in the form requested.

A6(M)

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provisions he has made to ensure there is no conflict of interest between the advice given by L. G. Mouchel and Partners as consultants to his Department in respect of traffic modelling and design for the A6(M) and their acting as consultants to the applicants in respect of planning applications for a superstore on Melford road, Stockport, and a superstore on Stockport road west, where his Department is a statutory consultee.

Mr. Key: I am aware of the consultants' involvement and believe that they are acting in a proper and professional manner.

The application for Melford road has been considered largely in relation to its impact on the existing road network, given its distance from the proposed bypass.

My Department has formed its own view on all the evidence available in connection with the Stockport road west development and has responded accordingly.

Motor Vehicles

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the percentage of motor vehicles on the road that are (a) unlicensed, (b) do not have a valid MOT certificate or (c) whose regular driver is uninsured; what these figures approximate to in terms of numbers of vehicles and drivers and how many prosecutions were undertaken in respect of each category in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Key: In Great Britain there are 35 million drivers holding full or provisional driving licences and 24·8 million licensed vehicles.

It is estimated that there were 1·3 million unlicensed vehicles in use on the public road at the end of September 1992. In 1992-93 over 435,000 vehicle licence evaders were penalised either by prosecution—193,000—or through out-of-court settlement—242,000—recovering £37·5 million in revenue. In addition it is estimated that 180,000 evaders relicensed their vehicles as a direct result of enforcement action recovering a further £14 million.

There is no reliable estimate of the percentage of motor vehicles on the road which do not have an MOT test certificate or whose regular driver is uninsured. In 1991, 253,813 persons were found guilty in England and Wales of vehicle insurance offences and in Scotland 15,816 drivers were found guilty of driving while uninsured. In the same period in Great Britain 141,450 persons were found guilty of vehicle test offences.

Speed Limits

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the trials of the variable speed limits outside schools are to begin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The first experimental site at Howick on the A5092 trunk road in Cumbria has come into operation today. This is the first of the 14 school sites on trunk roads and 100 sites on local authority roads where variable limits are being introduced on an experimental basis. The results will be monitored and, if the signs are effective in reducing drivers speeds, provision will be made to permit variable speed limits to be more widely applied.

M27 Aircraft Crash

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 5 July at column 8, whether the aircraft which crashed on the M27 on 26 May carried a co-pilot licensed to act as pilot in command.

Mr. Norris: I understand that the co-pilot holds a licence which entitled him to act in the capacity of a co-pilot on that particular aircraft, but not as a pilot in command.

Night Flights

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, (1) using the new system for restricting night flights announced on 6 July, how many noise quota points would have been used up by the aircraft that operated into and out of Heathrow airport during (a) the night quota hours of the 1992-93 winter period and (b) the night quota hours of the 1992 summer period;

(2) using the new system for restricting night flights announced on 6 July and the aircraft that have operated or are scheduled to operate into or out of Heathrow airport during the night quota hours of the 1993 summer period, how many noise quota points will be used up during this period.

Mr. Norris: More data on aircraft type, engine fit and maximum certificated landing and taking off weights are required to classify aircraft under the new night restrictions system than under the present regime. Not all this data is available for past movements, so only estimates can be given. These are (a) about 6,000 in winter 1992-93 (b) about 6,225 in summer 1992 and (c) about 6,400 in summer 1993.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many air traffic movements took place at Heathrow airport during (a) the night quota hours of the 1992-93 winter period and (b) the night quota hours of the 1992 summer period.

Mr. Norris: The total number of runway movements—that is, air transport movements and all other movements such as empty positioning flights—during the night quota periods was

(a) 3,413:1992-93 winter
(b) 3,409:1992 summer

Of these movements at (a) 3,078 counted against the main quota, 21 counted against the delayed quota, 225 were by aircraft exempt from the restrictions, and 89 movements were granted dispensations and exemptions according to current arrangements.

Of the movements at (b) 2,649 counted against the quota, 60 counted against the delayed quota, 678 were by aircraft exempt from the restrictions and 22 were granted dispensations and exemptions according to current arrangements.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many air traffic movements he estimates will occur at Heathrow airport during the night quota hours of the 1993 summer period on the basis of the number of aircraft that have or are scheduled to operate into and out of the airport.

Mr. Norris: In total, about the same as in summer 1992.

Bus Companies

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to bring in legislation to require municipal authorities to sell off their bus companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Our manifesto contained a pledge to privatise the remaining local authority bus companies. I am pleased that many authorities are selling their companies voluntarily. It is our intention to introduce legislation at an early opportunity to require the rest to do so.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the Government have spent on the proposed east London river crossing up to 7 July.

Mr. Norris: Approximately £31 million. The bulk of the expenditure has been on scheme preparation but the figure also includes some £3 million on advance works and £9 million on land and property purchase.

Civil Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consideration his Department has given to the mandatory fitment of high-intensity strobe lights to civil aircraft regularly involved in low-level flying activities such as power line and pipeline surveying and crop spraying;

(2) what consideration his Department has given to the provision of air-to-air transponder equipment for civil aircraft regularly engaged in activities at low altitude;

(3) what capability the civil aircraft notification procedure has for the notification of linear activities such as power line and pipeline surveying;

(4) what measures have been introduced by his Department since 1988 to encourage civilian pilots and aircraft operators to make use of the civil aircraft notification procedures; and if he will make a statement as to what further measures are under consideration.

Mr. Norris: Aviation safety matters such as these are for the Civil Aviation Authority, in the first instance. I have therefore passed the hon. Member's questions to the chairman of the authority, asking him to write to the hon. Member.

I am always ready to consider any proposals for changes in primary or secondary legislation which the authority may put to me.

German Merchant Fleet

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he is making to the European Commission about German plans to increase tax concessions to the German merchant fleet.

Mr. Norris: It is our policy to urge the Commission to look into all cases of state aids in the transport sector, including aids to shipowners, in order to secure the removal of those that distort competition. I understand that what is proposed by Germany in this particular case would renew fiscal arrangements that have been in place for some time.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stefan Kiszko

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to provide the families involved with the results of the investigation on the completion of any criminal proceedings arising from the Lancashire police force's investigation into the Stefan Kiszko case.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is for the chief constable of West Yorkshire police and the Director of Public Prosecutions to decide what information may be disclosed to the Kiszko and Molseed families. As the Prime Minister has already informed the hon. Member, West Yorkshire police have assured both families that they will brief them fully about what happened as soon as they are free to do so.

Firearms

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many thefts of shotguns there were in 1991 in each police force area (a) from domestic premises and (b) from all premises.

Mr. Maclean: The following table shows, for each police force in England and Wales in 1991, the number of notifiable offences of burglary and theft in which shotguns were reported to have been stolen from domestic and all premises:

Notifiable offences of burglary and theft in which shot guns were stolen

False Imprisonment

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce measures to ensure that compensation awards to persons having been falsely imprisoned are harmonised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: It has been the long-standing practice for the amount to be paid in an award of compensation under section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, or under the related ex-gratia scheme, to be settled according to the assessment or advice of an independent assessor, currently Sir David Calcutt QC. The assessor applies principles analogous to those governing the assessment of damages for civil wrongs. I am satisfied that these arrangements result in fairness and consistency in the determination of amounts to be paid.

Mr. John Matthews

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on his decision to place an exclusion order on Mr. John Matthews;

(2) what consideration he gives to (a) acquittal decisions by the courts in respect of terrorist-related offences with which a person has been charged and (b) decisions by the Crown Prosecution Service to withdraw charges against such a person, in deciding whether to place an exclusion order on such a person.

Mr. Howard: On Tuesday 6 July I exercised the powers conferred upon me by part II of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 to exclude John Gerard Matthews from Great Britain. Before reaching a decision I carefully reviewed all the information which had been placed before me. On the basis of that information I was satisfied that the criteria set out at section 5 of the Prevention of Terrorism Act were met in this case.

The decision which I am required to take in relation to exclusion orders is different in kind from that which the prosecuting authorities apply in deciding whether to continue criminal proceedings. They consider whether, on the basis of evidence which will be admissible in court, there is a realistic prospect of persuading a jury beyond reasonable doubt that a person is guilty of a specific offence. I have to be satisfied that a person is or has been concerned in the commission, preparation or instigation of acts of terrorism connected with the affairs of Northern Ireland. In making that assessment it is open to me to consider information which would not be admissible in court. Whilst I would have regard to the fact that a person had been acquitted, or criminal proceedings discontinued, that fact would not preclude the making of an exclusion order.

Notifiable Offences, London

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notifiable offences were reported in the Metropolitan police area in the first three months of 1993; and if he will give a breakdown of the figures by category of offence.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not yet available.

Parliamentary Boundaries

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current timetable for the work of the Boundary Commission for England in reviewing the current parliamentary boundaries; and what will be the effect on this timetable of re-examination by the commission of the population figures on which its work has so far been based.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Boundary Commission for England is required, by the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986, to make its final report by 31 December 1994. I understand that it is confident that it will be in time. The enumeration date for its review is February 1991, and the release of subsequent electoral statistics, or indeed a more recent evaluation of the accuracy of the electoral register, will not affect its timetable.

Fire Services, Merseyside

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority following its consideration of the report of Her Majesty's inspector of fire services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has received from the clerk to the Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority a copy of a resolution made at the authority's annual general meeting on 28 June. The resolution relates to the report of an inspection of the Merseyside Fire Brigade conducted by Her Majesty's inspector of fire services during the week beginning 25 January 1993. We shall consider the resolution carefully alongside the report of the special inspection of the Merseyside brigade which was conducted during the week beginning 5 July, once that report is available.

Ex-offenders

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions the Prison Department has had with each training and enterprise council regarding schemes to provide employment for ex-offenders;

(2) how much the Prison Department spent in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992 on funding schemes which provide employment for ex-offenders; and what proportion this was of the Prison Department's budget.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated July 1993:

TRAINING AND ENTERPRISE COUNCILS EMPLOYMENT SCHEMES FOR EX-OFFENDERS

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question seeking information about what discussions the Prison Service has had with each Training and Enterprise Council (TEC) regarding schemes to provide employment for ex-offenders.

TECs are responsible for adult and youth training schemes. Prison Service establishments are encouraged to work with their local TEC in helping to meet offenders' training needs. Discussions between the Prison Service and individual TECs normally take place at a local level; the details are not recorded centrally.

As a result of these local contacts, a number of important joint ventures between prisons and TECs have been developed. To build on these, the Prison Service is working with the Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate and the Probation Service to produce a good practice guide for TECs on meeting the training needs of offenders and ex-offenders. The guide will be issued later this year.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated July 1993:

Expenditure on Employment schemes for ex-offenders

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how much the Prison Department spent in 1991 and 1992 on funding schemes which provide employment for ex-offenders.

The Prison Service undertakes a wide range of work aimed at preparing, training and assisting prisoners to find jobs on release. The cost of this is not separately distinguished. The work is described in "Employment in Prisons and for Ex-Offenders. The Government Reply to the First Report from the Employment Committee Session 1991-92 HC30". I enclose a copy of the Report, which I hope will help to fill out the picture for you. Since the Government's Reply was published, the Employment Service has agreed to provide additional funding to enable the number of prison job clubs and prisons running job search preparation courses to be increased. In consequence, as part of its business plan for 1993-94, the Prison Service aims to increase the number of prisons running job search preparation courses from 24 to 48 and the number of prison job clubs from 5 to 10.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of the working group examining the future of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board have (a) English legal qualifications and (b) Scottish legal qualifications.

Mr. Maclean: There is no working group examining the future of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. As my right hon. and learned Friend the member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) announced on 23 November 1992, col 457, the Government have decided that the present criminal injuries compensation scheme should be replaced in 1994 by one based on a tariff of awards. The intention is to offer a better, more straightforward service to claimants.

Officials are working up the more detailed proposals in the normal course of their duties under the direction of Ministers. The officials take legal advice as and when appropriate. Details of the new scheme will be set out in the White Paper within the next two or three months.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to accelerate the programme for the reception of Bosnian refugees and their dependants announced on 30 November.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In response to the humanitarian organisations' priorities the programme has initially concentrated on former detention camp inmates and their dependants. We have already received a total of 250 ex-detainees and 421 dependants, but there have been difficulties, particularly in securing further releases from the detention camps. In discussion with UNHCR we have made clear our readiness to consider other vulnerable individuals for inclusion in the 1,000.

Anti-Abortion Protesters

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to prevent the entry into the United Kingdom of anti-abortion protesters from the United States.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to prevent the entry to the United Kingdom of activitists from (a) Operation Rescue and (b) Rescue America.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Citizens of the United States of America are subject to immigration control and must qualify to enter under the terms of the immigration rules. My right hon. and learned Friend may direct exclusion if a person's presence would not be conducive to the public good. Consideration will be given to any evidence which would justify exclusion on this ground.

City of London (Road Closures)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with the City of London Corporation on the closure of roads on security grounds; and what is the maximum time that such road closures can be maintained.

Mr. Howard: The experimental traffic scheme now in operation was introduced by the Commissioner of Police for the City of London with the agreement of the Corporation of London, under section 12 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. A scheme introduced under this section may remain in force for up to six months and may thereafter be continued for a maximum of 12 months in all. The City's proposals did not require my approval, although the City corporation and police discussed them with members of my Department before implementation.

Immigration Rules

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the progress of discussions on proposals to remove sex discrimination from the immigration rules; when he expects the conclusions to be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We are currently considering these and other aspects of the immigration rules and hope to publish proposals shortly.

Macedonia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to abolish the visa requirement for citizens of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Car Park Attacks

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis concerning (a) the attacks on women that have taken place recently in supermarket car parks in south London and (b) the consideration he is giving to crime prevention advice to shoppers and to the proprietors of supermarkets about improved security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All such attacks are investigated and an arrest has been made in the recent case of an attack on a women shopper returning to her car parked in a supermarket car park. There is no indication that this type of crime is increasing. Sensible precautions are promoted by the Metropolitan police and the national "Secured Car Parks" scheme operates in London. This scheme extends throughout the Metropolitan police district and is open to all car park owners and operators, including supermarket proprietors.

Sheehy Inquiry

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the experience or qualifications possessed by each member of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards prior to their appointment which were considered to be of particular relevance to that appointment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The chairman and each member of the inquiry between them possessed an impressive range of skills and experience drawn from the management of large private and public sector organisations, a practical understanding of business, and in particular effective service delivery.

Electoral Register

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to bringing forward proposals for a rolling register whereby names can be added to the list of voters throughout the year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The introduction of a "rolling" electoral register is one of the matters being discussed in the post-election review. The five working groups set up as part of the review are expected to report their findings in the late summer. Representatives of the political parties and the local authority associations will then be invited to discuss the reports at a meeting in the autumn.

Racial Incidents

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 443, if he will provide a breakdown of the figures given by ethnic group of victim, for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: The information given to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey can only be further broken down by ethnic group for the Metropolitan police district, and is given in the table.

Recorded racial incidents in the Metropolitan police area

Year	White European	Dark-skinned European	Black/ Afro-Caribbean	Ethnic grouping Asian	Oriental	Arabic/ Egyptian	Origin unknown/ Other	Total
1988	270	54	532	1,348	32	15	25	2,276
1989	384	86	558	1,616	35	25	43	2,747
1990	439	104	649	1,661	46	36	27	2,962
1991	610	114	686	1,893	36	47	2	3,388
1992	654	130	796	1,860	58	42	134	3,674

Note.—These figures do not agree with the table for classified racial incidents as in certain cases there is more than one victim per incident.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is not available, apart from the following information in respect of part (b) of the question:

Lord Belstead
Chairman of the Parole Board
Salary £45,060
Appointed 3 October 1992 until 2 October 1997

Lord Brassey of Apethorpe

Information in respect of the Parole Local Review Committees is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Oxfam

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to consult Oxfam before the G7 conference about the issues to be raised there.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The conclusions in Oxfam's recent report "Africa, Make or Break" were widely considered in the run-up to the summit, and my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development met representatives of Oxfam on 8 July. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister also met members of the all-party group, the "Africa Caucus", on 29 June, and discussed issues raised by the report.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to withhold aid programmes to India until the Indian Government allow independent observer groups from the British Parliament to visit the Indian-occupied area of Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no plans to withhold aid programmes to India.

Vegetable Waste (Exports)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he will take in the light of the representations made to him concerning the production of compost/soil enricher from vegetable waste for export to the third world; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We do not believe exporting compost from the United Kingdom is an appropriate or cost-effective way to improve soil fertility in the developing world.

We aim to address developing country problems through promoting economic growth and self-reliance, and are assisting smallholder farms in Africa and Asia to produce compost from their own organic wastes.

Indonesia

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 April to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), Official Report, column 172, when it became the policy of Her Majesty's Government to seek to influence Indonesia by dialogue rather than by attaching conditions to aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government explained their policy on good government in speeches by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 6 June 1990 and by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development on 25 June 1991. When determining the flows of development aid, Her Majesty's Government studies each individual case carefully. Respect for human rights, among other factors, is taken into account.

Irrigation Projects

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of United Kingdom aid for irrigation projects; which are the main countries involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In financial year 1992-93, we spent £6·54 million on irrigation and associated drainage projects. The main beneficiaries were Pakistan, Bangladesh and Zimbabwe. We also spend about £750,000 per annum on research into irrigation and drainage and fund scholarships in the United Kingdom for irrigation specialists from overseas.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hotel and Restaurant Industry

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from the hotel and restaurant industry regarding deregulation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The hotel and restaurant industry is represented on the sectoral task forces and many individual operators and trade organisations have provided evidence of over regulation. The issues identified are being pursued vigorously with the Government Departments concerned.

THORP

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what approaches he has received from foreign customers for BNFL's THORP regarding the cancellation or amendment of contracts, the return of fuel or whether it will be reprocessed.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Music Industry

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount in exports earned by the British music industry in 1992.

Mr. Needham: Exports of records, cassettes and compact discs as reported by Customs and Excise and shortly to be published by the British Phonographic Industry in its 1993 handbook were £211·9 million in 1992. BPI will also publish an estimate of invisible earnings in the form of royalties returning from overseas of £500 million in 1991.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what monitoring his Department undertakes of firms receiving regional financial selective assistance once their projects have been completed.

Mr. Sainsbury: Regional selective assistance offer letters require beneficiaries to confirm to the Department at intervals of 18 months and 36 months after the last payment of grant, that job totals and assets relating to the project remain in place or to explain any changes and the reasons for them.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 254, what information he has about any of the firms benefiting from regional financial selective assistance now having ceased trading.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department may become aware that individual firms have ceased trading at any time during the normal monitoring of regional selective assistance and this information would be recorded on the case file. However, identifying all such cases would involve disproportionate costs. Firms that discontinue trading after completion of the monitoring period are treated as all other firms and the Department keeps no specific record of them.

Post Office (Privatisation)

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those remaining Crown post offices which it is intended to convert to privatised status.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. Decisions on which individual Crown post offices should be proposed for conversion to agency status are an operational matter for the Post Office. The Post Office always consults publicly on individual proposals in accordance with a code of practice agreed with the Post Office Users National Council.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he held with the Post Office on its decision to convert an additional 200 Crown post offices to privatised status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand that the Post Office has made no decision about the number of Crown offices to be converted to agency status. The Crown office conversion programme delivers costs savings which help to protect the rest of the post office network; it also ensures that the delivery of post office services is responsive to customer needs by, for example, increasing opening hours. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade does not have detailed discussions with the Post Office on implementation of this programme, which is a matter within their operational responsibility.

Public Houses

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 35, how many of the representations from Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. lessees expressed concern over rent levels; how many referred to the effect of a beer tie on rent levels; and how many of the complainants have obtained redress of their grievances as a result of his intervention.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The majority of representations received recently by my Department from Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. lessees expressed concern over rent levels. Levels of rent are essentially a commercial matter between company and lessee. We understand from the company that rent levels negotiated by the company take account of the individual circumstances of each public house, including whether or not it is tied. The Government asked all the major brewers in 1991 to introduce procedures associated with long-term leases to be determined by independent arbitration or through independent assessment by a professional expert where they could not be agreed with the tenants; these are available under the IEL lease. It would not be appropriate for the Government to intervene in individual cases.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 35, what were the specific issues raised with Mr. R. G. Williams, chairman and managing director of Grand Metropolitan Estates Ltd. in respect of Inntrepreneur leases; what was his response; what reduction in rents resulted from the removal of beer ties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The purpose of the discussion was to assist officials in advising me on how to respond to points made in representations to the Department. In particular the Department needed to be clear whether the representations made to us revealed any evidence that the company was not complying with the Beer Orders or undertakings given to the Director General of Fair Trading following the MMC report on the Elders IXL Ltd./Grand Metropolitan plc merger; and further, whether the company was abiding by assurances given to Ministers in 1991 about treatment of tenants. On the level of rents, the release of a pub from tie affects its market rent because it allows the tenant/lessee freedom of choice in sourcing his beer and in obtaining discounts.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 36, what assurances have been obtained from Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. in respect of its treatment of their lessees since 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In meetings with the company, my officials have been assured that the company continues to abide by the assurances given to Ministers in 1991 about the treatment of tenants. In addition, I understand that the company has recently introduced more flexibility into leasing arrangements; for example, the incorporation, where appropriate, of a three-year break clause, exercisable by the lessee only, into the standard Inntrepreneur lease.

Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986

Mr. Bell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the operation of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 22 June 1993]: There has been no formal assessment of the legislation by the Attorney-General. The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has responsibility for the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986. The Department monitors the effectiveness of all legislation for which it is responsible.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what volume, in cubic metres, of intermediate level radioactive waste will remain in the United Kingdom under return of waste agreements between British Nuclear Fuels plc and overseas customers (a) in absolute terms and (b) as a proportion of the waste imported;

(2) what volume, in cubic metres, of low level radioactive wastes will remain in the United Kingdom under return of waste agreements between British Nuclear Fuels plc and overseas customers (a) in absolute terms and (b) as a proportion of the waste imported.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 June 1993]: Since 1976, BNFL's contracts for the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. Under these agreements, the company has the right to return all three types of waste—high, intermediate and low-level—to the country of origin. The possible substitution for low and intermediate-level waste of a radiologically equivalent amount of high-level waste, in addition to the customer's normal HLW allocation, was referred to in my reply to the hon. Member of 7 June 1993, Official Report, column 161.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Council of Ministers meeting on Friday, 2 July in relation to the European regional development fund.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 July 1993]: I refer to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside on 6 July, Official Report, columns 105-06.

Misleading Pricing

Mr. Moss: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the recommendations of the Monitoring Committee on Misleading Price Indications; and if he will publish their report.

Mr. McLoughlin [pursuant to the answer given by the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 7 May 1993, Official Report, columns 276-77]: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms has announced today that the Department is going out to consultation on proposed regulations under section 26 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 which would require resellers of tickets for theatre performances and other such events to tell consumers the standard of the seat being offered including its face value.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ballygowan

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated population of Ballygowan; and what the population of Ballygowan was 10 years ago.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Prior to 1991, the official mid-year estimates of population were not produced to ward level. However, the 1991 census records the population of the ward of Ballygowan as 4,027. Allowing for boundary changes, the comparable 1981 census figure is estimated at 2,949.

Optical Appliances Vouchers

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total number of optical appliances vouchers redeemed in Northern Ireland in each year since 1986; and what was the total cost of the optical appliances voucher scheme in Northern Ireland in each year since 1986.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The information is as follows:

Year	Total number of vouchers redeemed	Total cost of vouchers scheme (£)
1986[1]	67,519	972,808
1987	124,222	2,287,157
1988	122,080	2,485,425
1989	119,207	2,681,090
1990	118,152	2,889,159
1991	[2]141,687	3,573,688
1992	[2]162,365	4,381,207

[1] The 1986 figures represent only six months as the scheme was introduced on 1 July 1986.

[2] The figures for 1991 and 1992 are provisional.

Opera House, Belfast

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost of repairing the Opera house in Belfast after its recent bombing; if he expects this cost to be met from ordinary funding of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The estimated cost of repairing the Grand Opera is £1·75 million. The Compensation Agency has accepted liability for the necessary repairs.

Arts Council

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much funding is allocated to the Arts Council of Northern Ireland for the current year; and what were the figures for the five preceding years.

Mr. Ancram: In the current financial year the Arts Council of Northern Ireland will receive funding amounting to £6·349 million. Allocations in the five preceding years were:

	£ million
1988-89	4·272
1989-90	4·797
1990-91	5·565
1991-92	6·461
1992-93	6·580

President, Irish Republic

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many representatives of Her Majesty's Government have been in attendance during engagements performed by the President of the Irish Republic during each of her private visits to Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: A representative of Her Majesty's Government was in attendance at one event attended by the President of the Irish Republic in February 1992 during one of her five private visits to Northern Ireland. On that occasion the then Secretary of State, Mr. Brooke, hosted a reception in Stormont castle.

Disallowed Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by month for the last 12 months and by employment region the number of people disallowed unemployment benefit.

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 8 July 1993:

As I am responsible for Social Security operational matters, your recent Parliamentary Question on the number of disallowances of Unemployment Benefit in the employment regions of Northern Ireland each month in the last 12 months has been passed to me for reply.

There are 11 Districts in Northern Ireland for social security purposes. The number of people disallowed Unemployment Benefit for each of the last twelve months in the Districts is set out in the table attached.

I hope you find this information helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and copies will be placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

UK-Japan Nuclear Trade

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister whether he discussed the matter of United Kingdom-Japan nuclear trade during his visit to the G7 summit in Tokyo.

The Prime Minister: At our meeting, the Prime Minister of Japan and I discussed a wide range of bilateral and international issues.

Serbia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had during the past two weeks with Lord Owen on the issue of the selective lifting of sanctions against Serbia; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have had no such discussions with Lord Owen during the past two weeks. At the Group of Seven economic summit in Tokyo on 7-9 July, I and other Heads of Government reaffirmed that sanctions will be upheld against Serbia and Montenegro until the conditions in the relevant Security Council resolutions on the former Yugoslavia are met.

Public Bodies

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is the Government's policy towards the appointment of known members of the Labour party to non-ministerial public bodies, including health authorities and hospital trust boards.

The Prime Minister: The Government seek to make all appointments, including those to health authorities and NHS trusts, on merit. Individuals are carefully appraised against the key criteria set for each appointment which cover the qualities, skills and experience required. Details of political affiliation are not specified, and are not required on nomination forms. The successful candidate is the one who meets the criteria, and has the ability and aptitude to meet the demands of the appointment, and to contribute to the effective working of the body concerned.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the destination, dates and purpose of each official overseas visit he has undertaken since November 1991:

The Prime Minister: The information requested is as follows:

SCOTLAND

Mortgage Rescue Schemes

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress Scottish Homes has made with developing mortgage rescue schemes in Scotland; and if he will make a statement relating to future plans for progressing such schemes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I asked Scottish Homes in 1991 to consider the need for such schemes in Scotland. After consulting the Building Societies Association it advised that due to the generally low level of repossessions and the relative buoyancy of the Scottish housing market, specific mortgage rescue schemes were not appropriate in Scotland. The situation is kept under review.

Crown Office

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representatives of the Crown Office have attended courses in racial awareness.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service is an equal opportunities employer whose training courses where appropriate have a component dealing with racial awareness. Procurators fiscal are also encouraged to meet representatives of local community relations councils and similar bodies to discuss issues of concern to ethnic minorities. Crown Office staff meet and correspond from time to time with the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to enable the Crown Office to equip procurators fiscal and depute fiscals to prosecute in cases of racially motivated crimes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not the function of the Secretary of State for Scotland to equip prosecutors to carry out their duties. Procurators fiscal have been instructed by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate always to take into account, when considering whether proceedings are in the public interest, evidence that a crime was racially motivated. They will also ensure that information about such an aggravating factor is brought to the attention of the court before sentence is passed.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (a) how many cases of racial harassment or racially motivated crimes or offences have been reported by Scottish police forces to the Crown Office during the last full year for which such figures are available, (b) how many of such cases have been brought to prosecution by the Crown Office and (c) how many such prosecutions have resulted in convictions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Figures are not available which show the total number of cases of racial harassment reported by the police to procurators fiscal, although in 1992 the police recorded 38 cases in the category comprising offences under the Race Relations Act 1976 and the Public Order Act 1986. Cases involving racial harassment are often prosecuted at common law and in that event prosecutions and convictions are not being recorded in such a way as to allow those which are racially motivated to be counted separately.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were registered as unemployed in the Greenock travel-to-work-area; and what was the figure in (a) 1985, (b) 1988 and (c) 1991.

Mr. Stewart: In April 1993, the number of people registered as unemployed in Greenock travel-to-work-area was 5,726, representing 13·2 per cent. of the work force.

The equivalent figures in April 1985, 1988 and 1991 were (a) 9,368—19·5 per cent.—(b) 9,116—20·9 per cent.—and (c) 5,699—13·5 per cent.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Foreign Tourists

8. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what initiatives the Government are taking to increase the number of tourists from abroad to this country.

Mr. Sproat: The British Tourist Authority receives £32 million from my Department to promote Britain overseas. My hon. Friend will be pleased to know that the number of overseas visits to the United Kingdom over the three months to April is 12 per cent. up on the same period last year.

I am also conducting an urgent and detailed inquiry into regulations affecting tourism to establish the scope for deregulation and so allow the industry to become more competitive.

British Library

11. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received regarding the new British Library site at St. Pancras.

Mr. Brooke: I have received several representations on various aspects of the St. Pancras project.

Theatre-in-Education

15. Mr. John Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will establish an independent inquiry into the funding of Theatre-in-Education.

Mr. Sproat: My Department does not involve itself in the funding of individual arts organisations. It is for the appropriate agencies—in this case, the Arts Councils, regional arts boards and local authorities—to consider support of Theatre-in-Education in the context of their own funding policies and priorities.

English Heritage

16. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he next plans to meet the chairman of English Heritage to discuss funding.

Mr. Brooke: I have frequent meetings with the chairman of English Heritage at which a whole range of issues, including funding, are discussed.

Industrial Heritage

17. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent assessment his Department has made on the implications for the tourism industry of industrial national heritage.

Mr. Sproat: The English Tourist Board has designated 1993 as Industrial Heritage Year with the regional tourist boards undertaking a series of promotional activities on this theme. It is too early to make any assessment of the outcome of the campaign. However, I understand that there has been an encouraging response to the campaign "Experience the Making of Britain".

Arts and Sports, Chelmsford

19. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about opportunities for funding for arts and sports in Chelmsford.

Mr. Sproat: Funding for the arts in Chelmsford is mainly provided by the borough council with Essex county council. Chelmsford borough council supports its own directly managed venues and promotions. The Government-funded regional arts board, Eastern Arts, supports the Chelmsford Spectacular and the Chelmsford Cathedral Festival. All of these bodies offer individual project grants. Chelmsford borough council and Eastern Arts have supported a feasibility study into the possibilities of converting Chancellor Hall into a major regional dance centre and, as a follow-up, are presently launching a more detailed architectural study of Chancellor Hall.

The Government's business sponsorship incentive scheme has this year made an award of £4,000 to a Chelmsford-based arts organisation, the Essex Regional Dance Council, to match sponsorship by United Distillers, London.

In addition to local authority funding, financial assistance for sport is provided through the Sports Council and the business sponsorship incentive scheme for sport, both sponsored by my Department, the Foundation for Sport and the Arts (FSA) and the Football Trust. In recent years Chelmsford has benefited from a number of these sources, including a grant of £100,000 from the FSA in 1992 to rebuild an indoor cricket school at the Essex County Cricket Club ground.

The Crescent, Buxton

20. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the latest information he has on plans to restore the Grade I listed Crescent in Buxton.

Mr. Sproat: A public local inquiry into my right hon. Friend's draft compulsory purchase order for the former St. Ann's hotel has been arranged to take place in Buxton on 17 August. If the order is subsequently made, my right hon. Friend's intention is to dispose of the building to High Peak borough council, which would carry out the necessary repairs.

Sports Grant

21. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what level of grant will be given to the new United Kingdom Sports Commission and Sports Council for England.

Mr. Brooke: I announced on 9 July, Official Report, column 599-602, that the Government did not intend to proceed with the creation of the United Kingdom Sports Commission.

Television News

22. Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessments he has made of the ability of the Independent Television Commission to preserve the quality of the news coverage of ITV.

Mr. Brooke: The ITC became the regulator, rather than the broadcaster, of ITV on 1 January this year. The Commission has shown its determination to ensure that the ITV companies comply with the provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1990 and the conditions of their licences.

Press Regulation

23. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has held with owners and editors of national newspapers about the proposals by the Press Complaints Commission to strengthen self-regulation.

Mr. Brooke: None; but I have regular informal contacts with a range of owners and editors of national newspapers and am well aware of their views on press self-regulation, as on other matters. On 5 March I met representatives of the Press Standards of Finance Ltd. to discuss the industry's response to Sir David Calcutt's review of press self-regulation.

Hotel Tax

24. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what response he has made to the proposal by the Association of Metropolitan Authorities for a tourism tax on hotels.

Mr. Sproat: I am aware of the document produced by the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, although I have not been approached for a response. I shall monitor developments with interest, although local taxation is primarily a matter for the Department of the Environment.

I am glad to see that the paper acknowledges the difficulties inherent in introducing a tourism tax. Many sectors of the tourism industry are opposed to the idea, and the impact of such a tax on tourism earnings would have to be very carefully considered.

British Broadcasting Corporation

25. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to discuss the renewal of the BBC charter with governors of the BBC.

Mr. Brooke: None at present. I discussed the future of the BBC, and other matters, when I met the board of governors and senior managers on 16 June.

National Museums

26. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he proposes to visit the national museums of Northern Ireland, Scotland, Wales and England to discuss funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: I visit many museums throughout the United Kingdom. I have direct funding responsibility for the national museums of England only.

Taylor Report

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress has been made on the implementation of the Taylor report.

Mr. Brooke: Six clubs in the FA Premier League and First Division of the Football League have already met the requirement of seating for all, and many others will achieve this objective within the next few months.

National Lottery

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress is being made towards determining the site for the headquarters of the national lottery.

Mr. Sproat: My hon. Friend is an extremely effective champion of anything that is in the good interests of Basildon. I congratulate him on that. In this case, of course, the choice of a site for the headquarters of the national lottery is not a matter for Ministers, but for the chosen operator of the national lottery. The choice of the operator, which will be made by the Director General of the Office of the National Lottery—OFLOT—will not be made until after the National Lottery Etc. Bill has received Royal Assent, and the Director General of OFLOT has been appointed.

My hon. Friend may care to identify potential candidates for the role of operator of the national lottery, before one such candidate is chosen, and explain to them all, and seek to convince them of the benefits, as he sees them, of Basildon as a site, so that whoever is chosen is fully briefed on Basildon. No doubt other hon. Members may also seek to convince potential operators of the benefits of other sites for the headquarters of the national lottery

Windsor Castle

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when work on the repairs at Windsor castle are expected to be completed.

Mr. Brooke: The reconstruction of the fire-damaged areas is planned to be completed in 1998. I am pleased to announce that the Duke of Edinburgh will be chairing a committee to advise on the restoration project. The deputy chairman will be the Prince of Wales. Other members are the president of the RIBA, the chairman of the Royal Fine Art Commission, the chairman of English Heritage, the Lord Chamberlain and two other members of the royal household, and the Permanent Secretary of my Department.

Regional Theatre

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received about the future of British regional theatre.

Mr. Brooke: The Arts Council recently conducted an artistic review to set its funding priorities. Following that review, I have received a number of letters about the future of particular theatres and support for drama. The levels of funding given to theatres and drama companies are matters for the Arts Council.

EDUCATION

LEA Spending

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to improve the analysis of local education authority spending figures by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: For the 1992-93 financial year, we aim to have a complete data set by January 1994, about two months earlier than hitherto.

Achievement of this aim depends on LEAs completing and submitting the relevant returns on time.

Non-teaching Staff

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide for each local education authority the numbers of (a) non-teaching staff in schools and (b) non-teaching staff employed centrally, providing for each group a breakdown by job function into (i) education support staff, (ii) premises related, including school meals, caretakers and (iii) administration.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the full-time equivalent numbers of education support and administrative staff employed in maintained schools in England in January 1992—the latest date for which information is available—is shown in the table. Information on premises-related staff in schools is not collected centrally.

Similar information on centrally employed non-teaching staff is not collected by the Department, although tables showing the total numbers of teachers and lecturers and of other staff employed in the education service of each local authority have been placed in the Library.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the estimate of the unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management of school schemes for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Forth: Unspent balances in respect of all local education authority-maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England at the end of the 1990-91 financial year, as recorded on LEAs' annual revenue outturn returns to the Department of the Environment, amounted to £322 million. The estimated figure for 1991-92 is £394 million.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many complaints his Department has received from parents concerning the conduct of head teachers or governing bodies during a ballot for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department does not collate information on the number or source of complaints about conduct during ballots on grant-maintained status, nor on whose conduct is complained about.

All such complaints are considered carefully and are investigated as appropriate. Particular attention is given to complaints alleging breaches of the law or where there may have been improper influence on the outcome of a ballot.

Special Needs

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many special needs schools there were in each of the last five years; and if he will break down the figures by category of special need.

Mr. Forth: Information about the number of maintained and non-maintained special schools is shown in the table. Many of these schools make provision for more than one kind of learning difficulty, so it is not possible to provide a breakdown of these figures by category of special need.

1989	1,332	82
1990	1,317	81
1991	1,299	81
1992	1,274	78

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children had statements of educational need, in each of the last five years nationally and by each educational authority.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 7 June 1993, Official Report, columns 25-28.

Cumbria County Council (Court Case)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the costs incurred by his Department following his court case with Cumbria county council.

Mr. Robin Squire: Fees in respect of this case are not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member when the information is available.

Education Assets Board

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, columns 19-20, if he will describe in general terms the nature and use of the premises at each educational establishment where his determination of an Education Assets Board recommendation is awaited.

Mr. Robin Squire: Of the 14 cases awaiting final determination by my right hon. Friend, only nine of them involve the transfer of land and/or property. These are as follows:

Grant-maintained schools

Dartford Grammar School for Girls, Kent—A dispute between the school and Kent county council over (i) transfer of an area of playing field, (ii) pedestrian rights of access and (iii) transfer of a further area of land.

Great Barr School, Birmingham—A dispute between the school and Birmingham county council over the ownership of an adjacent sports hall and an area of playing field which is used by both the school and the local community.

Kingsley Park School, Northamptonshire—A dispute between the school and Northamptonshire county council over the transfer of a gymnasium block in a building on the school site which is also used by another of the authority's schools.

Pate's Grammar School, Gloucestershire—A dispute between the school and Gloucestershire county council over the transfer of the site of a former secondary school which had been leased to Pate's grammar school while major building work was carried out on their own school site.

Stratford School, London—A dispute between the school and the London borough of Newham over the transfer of the freehold of a house.

Thamesview School, Kent—A dispute between the school and Kent county council on the transfer or retention of a house.

Higher education institutions

Greenwich—A dispute between the London borough of Wandsworth, which inherited the Inner London Education Authority's education responsibilities in the area, and Thames polytechnnic—now the university of Greenwich—over the transfer of the freehold of property known as Manresa house, and the grounds surrounding this property. Wandsworth uses part of Manresa house for adult education.

Falmouth School of Art and Design—A dispute between Cornwall county council and Falmouth school of art and design over the transfer of properties in Falmouth and Camborne, used by the school.

Further education institutions

Somerset College of Arts and Technology—The EAB has determined that the freehold interest in the access road serving the college and Castle school should transfer to the college. Somerset county council have appealed to the Secretary of State against this determination.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education by what statutory authority he either permits or prevents any local education authority or governing body of a school wholly dependent on public funds to engage teachers on pay less than that of agreed national scales or without professional qualifications recognised in the United Kingdom; and if he plans to bring forward proposals for any change of the law in either respect.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1991, school teachers employed by local education authorities or by the governing bodies of voluntary schools must be paid in accordance with a school teachers' pay and conditions document given force by an order of the Secretary of State. School teachers employed by the governing body of a self-governing—grant-maintained—school must also be so paid unless the school has sought exemption from the Act. The Act does not apply to teachers employed by other kinds of school or by private agencies.

Under the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1993, teachers employed at a school maintained by a local education authority, a self-governing—grant-maintained—school or a non-maintained special school must ordinarily possess qualified teacher status as defined in the regulations. There are exceptions for licensed teachers; overseas trained teachers; student teachers; and certain existing unqualified teachers; and a suitable unqualified teacher may be appointed if no suitable qualified teacher, licensed teacher or overseas trained teacher is available. This part of the regulations does not apply to other kinds of school. The Act and the regulations apply to England and Wales.

My right hon. Friend has no current plans to bring forward proposals for changing the law in respect of these matters.

DEFENCE

UN Troops (Cyprus)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to provide phone cards for British troops serving with the United Nations peacekeeping force in Cyprus.

Mr. Hanley: All United Kingdom service personnel deployed in Cyprus receive a local overseas allowance to compensate them for the additional cost of living in that country. The allowance, which is the same for personnel under United Kingdom and United Nations command, contains an element to enable personnel to maintain telephone contact with the United Kingdom.

The only areas of deployment in which service personnel currently receive a telephone allowance are Northern Ireland and the former Yugoslavia. Neither of these attracts an overseas allowance, but in recognition of the particularly difficult and dangerous circumstances a telephone allowance is given.

There are no plans to change the current position.

Defence Expenditure

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, in real terms and as a proportion of gross domestic product, the expenditure on the armed forces for each year since 1979 and the projections in such terms for such annual expenditure for as many years into the future as is practicable.

Mr. Hanley: Previous and planned expenditure on the armed forces between 1979-80 and 1995-96 was set out in the "Statistical Supplement to the 1992 Autumn Statement", (Cm 2219). Planned defence expenditure between 1993-94 and 1995-96 as a proportion of the forecast GDP gross domestic product—not given in the supplement—is as follows:

1993-94 — 3·7 per cent.
1994-95 — 3·5 per cent.
1995-96 — 3·2 per cent.

Queen's Flight

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which (a) Cabinet Ministers and (b) others are entitled to use aircraft from the Queen's Flight.

Mr. Hanley: Subject to the approval of Her Majesty the Queen, and the availability of aircraft, the following are entitled to use aircraft of the Queen's Flight when travelling on official business.

Members of the Royal Family

The Prime Minister
The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs
The Chancellor of the Exchequer
The Home Secretary
The Secretary of State for Defence
The Secretary of State for Scotland
The Secretary of State for Wales
The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland
The Minister of State for the Armed Forces
The Minister of State for Defence Procurement
The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence
Chief of the Defence Staff
Chief of the Naval Staff
Chief of the General Staff
Chief of the Air Staff
General Officer Commanding London district

Visiting Heads of State and foreign dignitaries of equivalent status to the above.

Members of the Privy Council travelling to attend meetings of the Council outside London.

Navy Salaries

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the amount of pension receivable by (a) a lieutenant commander and (b) a chief petty officer each with 25 years service assuming that each had retired on (i) 1 June 1992 and (ii) 1 June 1993.

Mr. Hanley: For a lieutenant commander and a chief petty officer each with 25 years reckonable service, the amounts of pension are as follows:

Date of retirement	Amount of award £
Lieutenant commander
1 June 1992	11,784
1 June 1993	11,962
Chief petty officer
1 June 1992	7,101
1 June 1993	7,207

Research and Development

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent on research and development from 1991.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's research and development expenditure is detailed in table 1.5 of the 1993 edition of "Defence Statistics". The total gross expenditure in 1991-92 was £2,680 million and the estimated outturn in 1992-93 is £2,912 million.

Service Projects

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the five current service projects involving the most expenditure; and what is the manpower requirement involved in each such project.

Mr. Hanley: The five current service projects involving the most expenditure are shown in table 1.15 of "Defence Statistics" 1993. They are Trident, EH 101, Eurofighter 2000, Rapier Field Standard C and Warrior.

It is not possible without disproportionate cost to identify all staff effort involved in these projects throughout the Department.

Procurement executive staff directly and exclusively involved in the management of these projects are as follows:

Project Manpower

	Number of staff involved
Trident	335
EH 101	42
Eurofighter 2000	91
Rapier (FSC)	41
Warrior	25

Anthrax Inoculation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and women in the Gulf conflict were inoculated against anthrax; and if the inoculation included inculation against penicillin-resistant anthrax.

Mr. Hanley: Vaccines giving protection against a number of biological warfare agents considered to be a threat during Operation Granby were administered to all consenting British personnel on a voluntary basis. The details of these vaccines are classified.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many claims for compensation by veterans of the British nuclear tests are currently pending; what action he is taking on their cases; what factors are delaying his making of a final decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Five such claims are pending. They are being examined in the usual way, to establish whether there is any evidence of exposure to radiation, and if so whether this caused any subsequent disease. So far, however, no case of death or disease among British nuclear test veterans has been shown to have resulted from radiation from the tests.

Successive British Governments have explained that almost all the personnel involved received little or no radiation from the tests. If these assurances were wrong and people actually had been subjected to substantial additional radiation, medical experts would expect to find an excess of total cancer deaths subsequently. But according to the study published in 1988 by the National Radiological Protection Board, the total incidence of death and malignant disease has been no greater among test veterans than for people who were not involved in the tests. We know of no new evidence that would change this position.

Air Defence Alerting Device

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the purpose of the air defence alerting device recently brought into servive with the Army; which systems it replaces and in what roles; what similar equipment is in service with, or on order for, the other services; what are the approximate costs involved; who are the principal contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The air defence alerting device (ADAD) is a passive, infra-red surveillance device, manufactured by Thorn EMI, which has recently entered service. It will be deployed with the Army's and the Royal Marines' close air defence weapon systems to provide passive early warning of potential aerial targets. In addition to the free-standing version, which is now being deployed with the Javelin system, ADAD will be vehicle mounted for use with the self-propelled version of the Starstreak high-velocity missile, due to come into service in 1994. ADAD is a completely new system which will provide a significant enhancement to the Army's close air defence alerting capability, which previously relied on human detection. The overall investment in the programme will exceed £100 million.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the former Members of this House who have been appointed since 1988 by his Departments to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list in each case the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which the former hon. Member represented.

Mr. Nelson: No such appointments have been made.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department since 1988 to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, and salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is as follows:

(a) none.

(b) none.

(c) Marchioness of Anglesy; Member, Royal Mint Advisory Committee; appointed in February 1991 for 7 years; no salary payable.

(d) This information is not held.

Gross Domestic Product (Hong Kong)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he estimates that the gross domestic product per capita of Hong Kong will equal that of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: The future comparative paths of GDP per capita in the United Kingdom and Hong Kong will depend on exchange rate movements and relative growth rates of GDP and population.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list his estimates by range of income for (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94 of the number of tax units receiving mortgage interest tax relief, the average value per mortgagor and the total cost of the relief.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimates are shown in the tables. The figures for 1993-94 are based on the conventional assumption of no further changes in interest rates.

Civil Servants (Offices)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the office accommodation costs for civil servants and give an analysis under appropriate headings including a notional rental amount in respect of premises held on freehold or long-leasehold tenure for (a) 1979 and (b) the most recent period.

Mr. Nelson: The information required is not centrally collected in the format requested. The table sets out the information in respect of departmental accommodation costs for central Government Departments for 1992-93, the last year available. Data for 1979 are not available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his current plans for a review of the 1·5 per cent. limit on public sector pay increases for the next pay round; and what will be the position in that pay round of those employees in the public sector who had been awarded a higher figure than 1·5 per cent. for the present pay round.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government will review the situation with regard to public sector pay at the appropriate time bearing in mind all the relevant circumstances. Public sector pay is an important part of public expenditure and will have to be kept under tight control.

Under the Government's current approach to public sector pay restraint, every public sector group will be subject to one pay settlement only in the range 0 to 1·5 per cent. Those groups who received settlements in excess of 1·5 per cent. last year in respect of the 1992-93 pay round will have their 1993 settlement constrained appropriately.

Public Sector Pension Schemes

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state for each of the main public sector pension schemes the financial year when he expects the average pension in payment to reach £10,000 per annum based on current trends in lengths of service, earnings and price increases.

Mr. Portillo: The table shows when the average pension in payment from the main public service pension schemes would reach £10,000 per annum if the average level of price inflation were 1 per cent. or 4 per cent. in the longer term. These represent the top and bottom of the Government's target range for inflation.

Pension Commitments

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to publish in the next Budget and autumn statement documents a statement of the Government's best estimate of the funded and unfunded pension commitments with an analysis by year and a statement of each unfunded liability of the public sector in excess of £10 million.

Mr. Portillo: We have no plans to do so at present.

Over-paid Income Tax

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the speed with which the Inland Revenue handles repayments of overpaid income tax.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue gives priority to claims for repayment of tax, and this means that many people receive their repayments in a very short time. However, some of the Inland Revenue's specialist offices deal with people who make their claims at around the same time of year and, while every effort is made to cope with these peaks, they slow down the speed with which repayments of tax can be made to the people concerned.

Inland Revenue (Employers' Returns)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons end-of-year returns to employers from the Inland Revenue included promotional material from commercial organisations; how many employers received the material; and what arrangements are made for those who do not wish to receive such material to refuse it.

Mr. Dorrell: No evidence has been produced which substantiates rumours and allegations about the deliberate or systematic inclusion of promotional material from commercial organisations in the annual pay-as-you-earn packs issued to employers.

Third-world Debt

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action his Department is taking to relieve the debt of the poorest third-world countries.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom is leading the way in promoting international agreement on debt relief for those poorest third-world countries which owe most of their debts to Governments. It was a direct result of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's initiative for the poorest and most indebted countries following the International Monetary Fund sponsored programmes of reform, that the Paris Club of major creditor countries began implementing a modified version of the Trinidad terms in December 1991. This had the effect of halving the payments due to creditors and gave a commitment to consider restructuring the whole stock of a country's eligible debt after a good track record of economic reform had been established. Seventeen countries have so far benefited from these terms, resulting in the debt cancellation of almost $1¾ billion during the lifetime of the agreements. Moreover, this Government have relieved developing countries of the burden of over £1,000 million of old aid loans, and all new aid to the poorest countries has been on grant terms for many years.

The United Kingdom Government are, however, aware that, for some of the most desperate cases, Trinidad terms as currently applied are not generous enough. We are therefore taking every opportunity to pursue improvements to the terms with our creditor country colleagues.

Specifically, we would like to see the degree of concessionality increased to a range of 50 per cent. to 80 per cent. on a case-by-case basis for those countries that need it. We would also like to see quicker action on the stock of debt for those countries that already have a proven track record of reform with the IMF. Ministers continue to press these points on discussions with other creditor countries, most recently at the Tokyo summit.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on national debt in Africa.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom Government are leading the way in promoting international agreement on debt relief for the poorest and most severely indebted countries many of which are in sub-Saharan Africa. It was a direct result of my right hon. and learned Friend the Prime Minister's initiative for the poorest and most indebted countries following IMF-sponsored programmes of reform, that the Paris Club of major creditor governments began implementing the Trinidad terms in December 1991.

Seventeen countries have so far benefited from Trinidad terms, including 13 of the poorest countries in sub-Saharan Africa. Under these agreements, over $3 billion of sub-Saharan African debt has been rescheduled by the Paris Club, cancelling over $1 billion during the lifetime of these agreements.

Moreover, the Government have also cancelled nearly £200 million of old aid debts owed by sub-Saharan African countries which are successfully pursuing sound policies of reform. New aid to such countries is now provided only in the form of grants.

However, the Government are aware that, for some of the most desperate cases, the terms as currently applied will not be enough. We are therefore taking every opportunity to pursue improvements to the terms with our creditor country colleagues.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the application of VAT on domestic fuel to concessionary coal; and what representations he has received on the matter.

Sir John Cope: Treasury Ministers have received a small number of representations on this issue. I understand from British Coal that the change in VAT liability for domestic fuel and power will not lead to any changes in concessionary fuel allowances.

Fishing Vessel Decommissioning

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his estimate of what will be recouped by way of capital taxation from the money provided for decommissioning; what information he is providing to fishing vessel owners about their capital gains tax liabilities; and if such information will be made available to owners before they apply for grants.

Mr. Dorrell: Decommissioning grants are taxable in the same way as other grants to the agriculture and fishing industries. But I regret that a reliable estimate of the tax involved could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

The Inland Revenue issues no general guidance to fishing vessel owners about the capital gains tax liabilities arising from their receipt of decommissioning grants. MAFF, which is responsible for administering this grant, does issue a general explanatory leaflet to all who apply for the decommissioning grant pointing out that the grant will be taxable. Vessel owners should contact their own tax office or financial adviser for detailed advice.

Private Medical Insurance

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give figures for the number of people who have received tax relief for private medical insurance in the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Dorrell: Tax relief for private medical insurance for those aged 60 or over was introduced in 1990-91. Nearly 350,000 contracts covering about 500,000 individuals aged 60 or over have received tax relief each year since then.

Inheritance Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals have been granted exemption from inheritance tax in relation to chattels declared to be open to inspection by the public.

Mr. Dorrell: The total number of conditional exemptions from inheritance tax in relation to chattels granted in the years 1983-84 to 1992-93 is 358. Figures are not available prior to 1983-84.

Doubtful Debts

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table setting out for each of the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 (a) the amount allowed for the change in provisions against doubtful debts for corporation tax purposes, (b) the breakdown of these figures between new provisions against doubtful debts, doubtful debts which have since turned bad and doubtful debts which have become good and (c) the average period for which debts which became good were treated as doubtful for corporation tax purposes.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 8 July 1993]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Oil Companies

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional yield to the Exchequer if oil companies had only 24 hours to nominate an actual third-party transaction to match its equity production from the oilfield for 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 9 July 1993]: The yield would probably be less than £10 million with oil price volatility at present levels.

Private Landlords

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised by income tax, capital gains tax and corporation tax from landlords providing private rental accommodation in the past five years.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 9 July 1993]: Estimated revenue raised by income tax and capital gains tax for 1988-89 to 1992-93 from landlords providing private rental accommodation is shown.

£ million

	Income Tax Accrual	Capital Gains Tax Accrual
1988-89	250	250
1989-90	350	210
1990-91	310	100
1991-92	320	80
1992-93	320	40

All estimates are subject to a wide margin of error and the latest two years are projections.

Capital gains tax figures exclude gains made by companies which are chargeable to corporation tax.

Information is not available to produce estimates of the revenue raised by corporation tax from companies providing private rental accommodation.

EMPLOYMENT

Redundancies

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the estimated total number of redundancies in the United Kingdom since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department's main source of redundancy statistics is the Labour Force Survey. This survey gives the numbers of redundancies that took place in the three months prior to interview. The extent of the available information is given in the following table:

Redundancies (not seasonally adjusted): Labour Force Survey, Great Britain

	Numbers
Spring 1989	142,000
Spring 1990	181,000
Spring 1991	388,000
Spring 1992	322,000
Summer 1992	278,000
Autumn 1992	310,000
Winter 1992	344,000

The main source of data prior to 1989, is the confirmed redundancy series. However, this series was discontinued because it proved to be an unreliable indicator of the actual number of redundancies taking place. The series was last published in tables 2.30 and 2.31 of the September 1992 Employment Gazette.

Working-time Directive

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 473, relating to the proposed working-time directive and its effects on offshore oil and gas workers, to which parts of the directive other than working hours the derogation applies; and if he will make a statement on arrangements for leave.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I explained in my reply to the hon. Member on 29 June 1993, Official Report, col 473, that as a result of our negotiations all work at sea would be excluded from the scope of the proposed directive. This exclusion applies to all the provisions of the proposed directive.

Jobcentres

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received during the last 12 months regarding publicising the wage levels of jobs offered via jobcentres.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: One, from the hon. Member himself.

Mining Industry (Doncaster)

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the work force in the Doncaster travel-to-work area were employed in mining in each year since 1987.

Miss Widdecombe: Employment estimates for local areas, including travel-to-work areas, are compiled from the periodic censuses of employment. They cover employees in employment only and exclude the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces. The available information from censuses of employment taken in 1987, 1989, and 1991 is given in the following table:

Employees in employment in deep coal mines and opencast coal working[1]; September of each year.

Female Employees

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by region the percentage of women currently employed in the labour market giving the comparable figures for (a) five and (b) 10 years ago.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is shown in the following table:

National Alliance of Women's Organisations

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what applications have been received for core funding for the National Alliance of Women's Organisations (a) last year and (b) in the current year; and how much money has been paid.

Miss Widdecombe: Since 1992 there have been a number of applications by, or on behalf of, the National Alliance of Women's Organisations for core funding. This resulted in the payment of a £20,000 grant during the 1992-93 financial year.

After careful consideration, as part of the Government's overall review of public expenditure, it was explained, with some regret, that further funding for the organisation would not be possible.

Wage Settlements

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Emplolyment if he will list those industries in which wage settlements in the last 12 months have been below 10 per cent.; and if he will show against each entry the percentage settlement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 June 1993]: Pay is primarily a matter for those who negotiate and determine it; the Government do not monitor the level of wage settlements in detail. The Confederation of British Industry's pay databank shows that for the first quarter of 1993 pay settlements average 2·5 per cent. in manufacturing and 2·8 per cent. in the private service industries respectively. These are the lowest levels reported in the 13-year history of the databank.

Young People

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number and percentage of (a) 18-year-olds, (b) 17-year-olds, (c) 16-year-olds in spring 1991 and 1992 and winter 1992-93 labour force surveys who were (i) in employment, (ii) International Labour Organisation unemployed and (iii) economically inactive and (d) the economic activity rate.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 8 July 1993]: The available information from the Labour Force survey is given in the table.

Job Vacancies

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many of the vacancies notified in each of the last six months to jobcentres (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in Wales were full-time and how many were part-time;

(2) what is the minimum number of hours involved in a job which qualifies to be registered as a vacancy at a jobcentre;

(3) how many of the vacancies notified in each of the last six months (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in Wales were temporary and how many were permanent.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Turner to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 12 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State about vacancies notified to Jobcentres in the United Kingdom and Wales.

The total number of vacancies notified to Jobcentres is collated monthly. Detailed full-time, part-time and temporary vacancy information is available on a quarterly basis. It is collected from offices throughout Great Britain, not the United Kingdom.

The tables attached show the information you requested for the past three quarters for Great Britain and Wales.

You also asked what is the minimum number of hours involved in a job which qualifies to be registered as a vacancy at a Jobcentre. We do not place any such restrictions before displaying vacancies.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee to the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Nottingham Clinic

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish an inquiry into (a) the establishment of the Nottingham clinic and (b) the arrangements in hand for the sale of the Nottingham health authority share of the clinic; and what ministerial approval is required for the sale.

Mr. Sackville: The Nottingham health authority is awaiting the opinion of legal counsel and when this is received the appropriate action will be taken. No ministerial approval is required for the sale of the Nottingham clinic.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have taken place between her Department and Nottingham health authority over the establishment of the Nottingham clinic.

Mr. Sackville: A number of discussions have taken place between the Department of Health and the Nottingham health authority over the establishment of the Nottingham clinic.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what ministerial approval has been given to transactions and developments involving Regency Park Ltd. and the Nottingham clinic.

Mr. Sackville: No approval by Department of Health Ministers has been sought, or given, to transactions and developments involving Regency Park Ltd. and the Nottingham clinic.

Abortion

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of residents' abortions in Preston district health authority is carried out or paid for by the national health service; what is the national figure; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In 1991, of the abortions performed on residents of Preston district health authority in England and Wales—under the Abortion Act 1967—9·2 per cent. were either carried out or paid for by the national health service. The equivalent figure for residents of England and Wales is 50·4 per cent.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has as to the number of children who are themselves HIV negative but who have one or both parents who are HIV positive.

Mr. Sackville: There are no data on the total number of children in the United Kingdom who have one or both parents who are HIV positive. Most such children are HIV negative, but they may be HIV positive if their mothers were infected with HIV prior to giving birth or breast feeding them.

By 30 April 1993, there had been 500 reports of children in the United Kingdom born to women known to be infected with HIV. One hundred and fifty-two of these children are known to be uninfected and the HIV infection status of 168 children has not yet been determined. However, the results of unlinked anonymous HIV surveys indicate that there have been many pregnant women whose HIV infection was not known to obstetric staff so there are an unknown number of children born to HIV-infected women.

Doctors

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many doctors have been struck off the medical register in each year since 1979;

(2) how many doctors have been found guilty of professional misconduct in each year since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: Registration of doctors is a matter for the General Medical Council, an independent statutory body, whose functions are determined by the Medical Act 1983. The GMC publishes information about numbers of erasures and cases of professional misconduct in its annual report, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to make doctors more accountable for their actions; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have recently set up a review to examine the national health service systems for dealing with complaints about family health services; about hospital services; and about matters of clinical judgment. It will not cover NHS disciplinary procedures: a joint working group is currently reviewing the guidance on these procedures for hospital medical and dental staff and for community and public health doctors. Family health services authorities can make representations to the NHS tribunal if they feel that it would be prejudicial to the efficiency of the service for a particular general practitioner to be included in a list of practitioners providing general medical services.

The professional regulatory bodies like the General Medical Council also have an important role to play in safeguarding standards of medical care.

Drugs

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to reduce the cost of the national health service drugs bill; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are taking a number of measures which we hope will reduce the rate of growth in the national health service drugs bill while ensuring that people get the medicines they need. These include action to ensure that general practitioners have full information about their prescribing and how it compares with that of others; to provide GPs with advice on effective prescribing and to encourage them to prescribe generic rather than branded drugs. The GP fund-holding scheme provides incentives for doctors to prescribe economically and incentive schemes are being introduced for GPs who are not fund holders.

We are seeking to constrain drug costs through the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme, which is currently being renegotiated, and by the extension of the selected list scheme from seven to 17 therapeutic categories.

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for legislation to determine the Government's liability for civil damages in cases of adverse reaction to a drug where a product licence has been reinstated on appeal following its suspension by the licensing authority.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Triazolam

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the panel of persons appointed since announcing the revocation of all licences for triazolam products on 9 June.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish her correspondence with the chairman of the panel of persons appointed regarding the decision of the licensing authority to revoke all licences for triazolam products.

Mr. Sackville: My hon. Friend the Minister for Health wrote on 9 June to the chairman of the panel of persons appointed to inform her that the licensing authority's determination would be announced that day. The letter enclosed a note on the licensing authority's position on triazolam. The note is publicly available and a copy is available in the Library.

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conclusion she has drawn regarding the implications of the revocation of licences for triazolam products for the future of the appeals procedure set out in the Medicines Act 1968; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Before deciding to revoke these licences, the licensing authority followed the procedures set out in section 29 of, and schedule 2 to, the Medicines Act and took into account the reports it had received from the Committee on the Safety of Medicines, the Medicines Commission and the panel of persons appointed. The licensing authority is not obliged to follow the advice or accept the findings in these reports but must take them into account. The decision in this case has no implications for the future of these procedures.

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish her correspondence with the chairman of the Medicines Commission regarding the decision of the licensing authority to revoke all licences for triazolam products.

Mr. Sackville: There has been no such correspondence.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to instruct NHS trusts to enter formal consultations with local community health councils and other local interested bodies about proposals for substantial development or substantial variations in services, with a prescribed time of three months, excluding major holidays, by which comments and views are sought; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: District health authorities are already required to consult the local community health councils when substantial changes in local services are under consideration, including services delivered by national health service trusts.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will instruct health authorities to require NHS hospital trusts to publish (a) spending plans and (b) decisions affecting the delivery of services.

Mr. Sackville: No. National health service trusts are already required to publish their strategic directions, summary business plans, and their annual reports and accounts. Service contracts made with health authorities are also available publicly.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria she uses to determine who are appointed as non-executive members of NHS trust boards; and who is responsible for short-listing candidates for appointments.

Dr. Mawhinney: Non-executive directors of national health service trusts are appointed for their personal qualities and the knowledge and skills which they can bring to the post, and not to represent any particular body or interest. The aim is to achieve a balance of different skills on trust boards. Regional health authorities are responsible for identifying and selecting candidates for appointment to NHS trusts when they are initially established, and for recommending these to Ministers. For already established trusts, recommendations on the reappointment or replacement of non-executive directors are made by NHS trust chairmen after consultation with regional health authorities and the NHS management executive outposts.

Care Homes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will revise the regulations in respect of the Registered Homes Act 1984 to (a) extend a person's right to make a complaint to cover all residential and nursing homes in the private and public sectors and (b) require registration authorities to set out a model complaints procedure for use by homes within each registration area, to include a formal appeal mechanism to be used where complaints cannot be resolved satisfactorily after reasonable discussion with the home; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Private and voluntary residential care homes are required by law to operatate their own complaints procedures and to tell residents how they can make complaints to the registration authority. People in local authority homes and people in independent nursing and residential care homes, whose place there was arranged by a local authority, have access to the statutory social services complaints procedures. National health service patients in nursing homes can make use of NHS complaints procedures.

I have no current plans to revise these procedures.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to prevent the offering of financial inducements by private nursing homes to general practitioners to refer patients to those homes.

Mr. Sackville: We have no current plans to do so.

Hospital Closures, London

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the hospitals that have been closed in the London borough of Wandsworth since 1979;

(2) if she will list the hospitals which have been closed in each of the four regional health authorities covering Greater London since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Purchasing Policies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the public consultation process applicable where there are alterations in the purchasing policies of a number of health authorities or general practitioner fund holders involving the move by each of the contract for a small number of patients from one local hospital to another leading to significant changes in the overall provision of the local health services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No. Purchasing shifts are required if national and local objectives for health gains are to be achieved. The national health service management executive has recently issued guidance to the service about how change should be managed under cover of EL(93)10 "Managing Activity and Change through Contracting," copies of which are available in the Library.

Children in Hospital

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the NHS Management Executive is taking to ensure all commissioners require their providers to implement fully her Department's guideline 3.9 in "The Welfare of Children and Young People in Hospital" in respect of the admission of parents with their children into anaesthetic rooms; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Child health services are among the topics selected this year for the regional reviews which the national health service management executive will be undertaking of health authorities' performance. Where appropriate, authorities will be reminded of the evidence which shows that children are calmed and comforted by the presence of parents during the administration of anaesthetics.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the annual report and accounts of the Medicines Control Agency.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have received the report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of section 5(2) and (3) of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921.

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who funds the Medicines Control Agency; what are the current levels of funding in 1993; what have been the levels in each of the last three years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency, as was agreed when it was established on 1 April 1989, is funded entirely by fees from licence applicants and licence holders, except as regards the subsequent processing of work in progress at 31 March 1989—the costs of which are being met by government funds.

As regards the level of funding required, the costs of the MCA for 1993-94 are estimated to be about £19·4 million.

For each of the last three years the costs have been as shown in the table:

	£ million
1990-91	15·2
1991-92	18·2
1992-93	18·5

NHS Fraud

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to receive the report of the Audit Commission inquiry into fraud in the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: We have been advised by the Audit Commissison that the study is due to commence early in 1994. The length of the study and the mechanisms for reporting are still under consideration.

Children in Care

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide information for each local authority in England of the total numbers of children in care in 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991, giving the reasons for the care episodes, the length of the care episodes by sex and by age and the number of children in care under orders.

Mr. Bowis: Information about total numbers of children in care, the reasons for the care episode and the number of children in care under orders for each local authority is given in the publication "Children in Care of Local Authorities year ending 31 March, England", copies of which are available in the Library. The information requested about the length of the care episodes by sex and by age for each local authority is voluminous and will be placed in the Library.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the hospitals closed since May 1979 in (a) the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority area and (b) the Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley health authority area.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. William Ashworth, chairman of Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority, and Mr. Ian Woolley, chairman of Blackburn, Hyndburn and Ribble Valley health authority, for details.

Colostomy Bags

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average prescription cost of a colostomy bag.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available. The average net ingredient cost of prescribing a colostomy bag in 1992 was £1·84.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost to the NHS in each of the past years of providing colostomy bags on prescription.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. The net ingredient cost of prescribing colostomy bags in England for the last 10 years was:

Year	Net Ingredient Cost (£ million)
1982	4·1
1983	6·2
1984	7·1
1985	11·3
1986	13·2
1987	15·7
1988	16·3
1989	19·5
1990	21·1
1991[1]	23·8
1991[2]	24·8
1992	28·0

Notes:

[1] 1982 to 1991 data cover prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors only.

[2] 1991 and 1992 data cover prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average production cost of a colostomy bag; and what discussion has been held with the pharmaceutical industry to ensure an adequate and economic supply of colostomy bags to those who require this facility.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the production costs of colostomy bags is not available. The Department takes into account the cost of products, as well as their general availability, when deciding whether to add individual products to the general practitioner prescribable list or to keep them on the list. If the hon. Member has a particular problem in mind, he may wish to write to me about it.

Abuse of the Elderly

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce legislation to give local authorities duties to investigate abuse of the elderly; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities already have powers to assess situations where abuse of an older person may be happening or suspected. Consideration is currently being given to the proposals set out in the Law Commission consultation paper No. 130, on which the Department of Health will be commenting.

Hydatidosis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of people who have (a) died and (b) had to undergo surgical operations but survived, because of hydatidosis in each of the last seven years.

Mr. Sackville: Deaths from hydatid disease in England and Wales are shown in the table:

Year	Number
1986	2
1987	4
1988	2
1989	3
1990	5
1991	3
1992	6

Source: OPCS.

In 1989-90, the latest year for which information is available, there were 46 finished consultant episodes involving surgical procedures in England. Information for previous years is not available.
Source: Hospital Episode Statistics.

Smoking

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken to achieve "The Health of the Nation" White Paper targets to reduce smoking prevalence in adults and children; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: "The Health of the Nation" White Paper sets out a comprehensive strategy to reduce smoking prevalence including action on price, health education and ensuring effective controls on advertising. It also emphasises the key role of health authorities in leading moves to improve the health of local people including action to reduce smoking.

Hospital Provision

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out the required consultation procedures and the chronology that health authorities should take when restructuring hospital provision.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance for health authorities on consultation procedures is contained in an executive letter, EL(90)185, which was sent to health service managers in September 1990. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Corporate Governance

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of reference of the task force on corporate governance in the NHS; who are the members; when they will report; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Bottomley: The public must have confidence in the way in which the business of their public services is conducted. As both citizens and taxpayers, individuals have a right to expect that those who use their money to provide services carry out their jobs with responsibility and honesty and to the highest possible standards. I have every confidence that most national health service work is conducted in such a fashion. Indeed, the Audit Commission—which, since this Government extended its remit in 1990, has carried out independent and external scrutiny of the NHS—has reported that the overall financial management of all NHS activities has shown a significant and welcome improvement.

In an organisation the size and complexity of the NHS, there can never be any room for complacency. As one or two well-publicised cases have shown, the NHS is not immune from lapses in management standards. We have acted decisively in light of these reports. Sir Duncan Nichol, chief executive of the national health service, has issued guidance to the service on the "Standards of Business Conduct" which places obligations on NHS employers as well as management and staff, and set out our expectations of their integrity and professionalism.

We need to consider, however, what more can be done. On 18 June, I announced that Sir Duncan has set up a task force to spearhead an urgent review of the current guidance to the NHS on corporate governance. The task force will report to the NHS management executive by 31 December 1993. Its findings will help strengthen the existing system of non-executive oversight which is already an important feature of the NHS and a valuable pillar in upholding high public service standards in the health service.

The task force's terms of reference are published today:

To consider, in the light of the recommendations of the Cadbury report and good practice in NHS organisations, the following aspects of corporate governance in the NHS:

- how standards of public business and public service values in the NHS may be reinforced;
- how the role and functions of chairmen and non-executive directors may be matched with their part-time commitment;
- improvements in the arrangements for induction and training of chairmen, non-executives and boards as a whole;
- the role, responsibilities and functions of non-executive directors of health authorities and NHS Trusts in matters of finance and audit.

Research Review

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the report of the committee reviewing research in the London postgraduate special health authorities to be published; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The report of Sir Michael Thompson's committee is being published today. Copies are available in the Library. This review, which I announced in March, provides independent advice to Ministers. I thank Sir Michael and his review advisory committee for their findings which will be valuable in considering the future funding for the special health authorities. The findings will also be taken into account in considering the specialty reviews, the site option appraisals and other work currently in hand on the future of health care provision in London.

Farms (Plant and Machinery)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of investment in plant and machinery in farms in Wales at outturn and real prices in each year since 1986.

Mr. Redwood: The latest available information on the level of investment in plant and machinery on farms in Wales at outturn and real prices in each year since 1986 is as follows:

£ million

	Outturn prices	1985 prices
1986	29·0	29·4
1987	26·0	25·3
1988	27·0	23·9
1989	25·8	21·0
1990	27·9	21·7
1991	25·5	19·5

Public Houses

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many public houses were located in each local authority area in the counties of Gwynedd and Clwyd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Redwood: The data given in the following table show the number of full on-licences and include public houses and other establishments. Information on the number of public houses is not collected centrally. The information is collated on a three-yearly basis and the figures given are for the nearest dates available to those requested. Information is available only by petty sessional divisions and not by local authority areas.

Post Offices

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) post offices and (b) post office counters there were in each local authority area in the counties of Gwynedd and Clwyd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not readily available centrally.

Theatre Education

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received regarding the future of theatre in education provision.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Up to 7 July 38 representations have been received regarding theatre in education.

Low Pay

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage change in income for the lowest-paid 10 per cent. of the population in Wales between 1979 and 1991.

Mr. Redwood: The new earnings survey estimates that, in 1979, 10 per cent. of full-time male employees in Wales earned below £60·10 per week gross with 10 per cent of female employees earning below £39·70 per week. The corresponding figures for 1991 were £147·90 and £114·10 per week: increases of 146 and 187 per cent. over 1979 levels for males and females respectively.

Nuclear Fuel Transport

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he holds with British Rail on the level of repair and maintenance of the railway lines which serve nuclear plants in Wales and are used for transport of spent nuclear fuel.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. British Rail has assured Ministers that essential repair and maintenance work will be undertaken on all routes.

Radon

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date his Department asked the National Radiological Protection Board to start detailed survey work on radon levels in homes in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Contract arrangements for further systematic research across Wales and at district level will be finalised shortly.

Brynglas Tunnels

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of traffic flows between the M4 intersection in Newport that will follow the completion of the work on the Brynglas tunnels relief scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The estimated annual average daily traffic flows on the M4 motorway between junctions 25 (Caerleon) and 26 (Malpas), after completion of the Brynglas scheme, is 55,000 vehicles.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

G7 Science Ministers

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the other G7 Science Ministers to discuss Government support for science; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I last met my colleagues from the G7 countries in Canada on the weekend of 21 to 23 May. We discussed international co-operation in science and a number of issues of common interest.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

"Gamekeepers' Code"

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what examination has been made of the paragraphs in the leaflets by the British Association of Shooting and Conservation entitled "Gamekeepers' Code, July 1992" concerning the use of poisons and gases for killing wild animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I am unaware of a British Association for Shooting and Conservation publication entitled "The Gamekeepers' Code" printed in July 1992. I believe the hon. Member may be confusing this with a BASC publication of the same name printed in July 1982. My officials have recently been in touch with the BASC to discuss certain sections of this code; they have been advised that this publication was withdrawn from circulation three years ago and that the BASC is making every attempt to ensure that any copies still in the public domain are removed from circulation as quickly as possible. The code has now been superseded by the advisory publication, "Pests and Predators and their Control", issued in January 1990.

Embryotomy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what studies have been carried out over the last 10 years by the state veterinary service or the Farm Animal Welfare Committee into the practice of embryotomy; and if he will make a statement;

(2) further to his answer of 22 April to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin), Official Report, column 196, what statistics he has as to the number of embryotomies carried out during the lambing season in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: As explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 22 April, I am not aware of any evidence that embryotomy is carried out on live unborn lambs. The matter will however be considered by the Farm Animal Welfare Council during its current review of sheep farming.

Sea Fish (Conservation) Act

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will seek a moratorium on the implementation of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992 until the other EC countries have enacted similar legislation and established appropriate enforcement machinery.

Mr. Jack: The aim of these restrictions in general terms will be to limit vessels to their 1991 level of activity. I confirmed that vessels permitted days at sea would not be reduced below these levels unless and until we and Parliament were satisfied.

Comfrey

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations she has received concerning the availability of comfrey.

Mr. Soames: I have received representations from the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy and the Action Group for the Relief of Pain and Distress about the recent decision to seek the withdrawal from sale of certain comfrey products containing the highest levels of toxic alkaloids.

I reiterate that this action was taken on the basis of unequivocal recommendations from the independent expert scientific committees that advise Ministers on food safety issues.

Essex Coast

Dr. Spink: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she expects to be able to make a statement about the proposed Essex coast environmentally sensitive area; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We expect to make an announcement on the proposed Essex coast environmentally sensitive area and five other new ESAs at the end of this month or the start of next month.

Fisheries (Legal Action)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the budget allocation to her legal department for fishery matters including prosecutions in each year since 1989.

Mr. Jack: There is no separate budget allocation in the legal department for fishery matters.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 2 February, column 133 and, more generally, to the announcement which I made in the course of the debate on the fishing vessels decommissioning scheme on 7 July, column 413.

Fishery Protection Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) oral and (b) written warnings were given by Her Majesty's fishery protection vessels to (b) British and (b) foreign vessels in each year since 1982 and in the first three months of 1993.

Mr. Jack: Full details of warnings issued before 1988 are not available. Formal oral warnings which have been issued and recorded in Scotland are being replaced by written warnings. In England, Wales and Northern Ireland informal oral warnings are given for extremely minor offences and not recorded. Details of warnings issued to United Kingdom and foreign registered vessels from 1988 are as follows:

Year	United Kingdom		Foreign
	oral Scotland	written	oral Scotland	written
1988	30	99	16	24
1989	30	16	18	48
1990	54	83	8	34
1991	90	159	3	61
1992	48	161	22	48
1993	10	158	1	10

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many foreign fishing vessels were prosecuted as a result of actions by the United Kingdom's fishery protection force in each year from 1982 and in the first three months of 1993.

Mr. Jack: The number of foreign fishing vessels prosecuted as a result of actions by the United Kingdom's fishery protection force in each year from 1983 and in the first three months of 1993 is as follows. Complete figures are not available for 1982.

Prosecutions of foreign vessels

	Number
1983	14
1984	26
1985	29
1986	38
1987	43
1988	55
1989	53
1990	35
1991	45
1992	28
1993	7

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are taken to check for secret fish holds when foreign fishing vessels are boarded by Her Majesty's fishery protection vessels; in what circumstances the ships' plans are inspected on boarding; and how many vessels in each year since 1990 and in 1993 to date have been unable to provide these plans.

Mr. Jack: Fishery protection officers check for any indications of secret fish holds as a matter of routine. Fish room plans are checked against actual dimensions where there is any suspicion of irregularities. At present records of vessels unable to produce fish room plans are not maintained.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what record is kept of oral and written warnings given by Her Majesty's fishery protection vessels to foreign vessels; whether such warnings are cited in subsequent prosecutions; and how many vessels and skippers given written warnings have subsequently been prosecuted for other fishing offences.

Mr. Jack: In the United Kingdom full records are kept of all written warnings and records of oral warnings are also kept in Scotland. Such warnings are cited in subsequent prosecutions wherever it is relevant and legally permissible to do so. Since 1991 after receiving a written warning one skipper of a foreign vessel has been prosecuted for a different offence.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what notification is given to (a) the EC Commission, (b) home Government and (c) EC fishing enforcement forces when foreign vessels have been successfully prosecuted for fishing offences in British waters; what control register of offenders is kept; and what report is made to the Department of Transport registration authorities when United Kingdom-registered foreign vessels are involved.

Mr. Jack: Upon completion of a court case against a foreign vessel the Commission and the home Government are notified by telex of the details of the case including the offence and the penalties imposed. This information is available to the EC inspectorate. Records are held of both offences and prosecutions.

No report is given to the Department of Transport in respect of fisheries offences.

Ammonium Ferric Hexacyanoferrate

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration she is currently giving to spraying parts of the United Kingdom still contaminated by radioactive fallout from the Chernobyl disaster with the chemical ammonium ferric hexacyanoferrate; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Technical studies to evaluate the potential of chemical treatments, including ammonium ferric hexacyanoferrate, for reducing radiocaesium in the vegetation of upland pasture are currently under way on two sites in Cumbria and Wales, as part of the Department's programme of post-Chernobyl research and development. In the light of the results of the studies, the practicability of using these treatments in the Cumbrian restricted area will be assessed.

Foreign Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many foreign fishing vessels were reported to his Department with a recommendation for prosecution in the first six months of 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993; and how many of these were prosecuted or are under consideration for prosecution.

Mr. Jack: The number of foreign fishing vessels recommended for prosecution in the first six months of 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993, and the number of those prosecuted is as follows:

Year (first six months only)	Recommendations for Prosecution	Prosecutions
1990	13	13
1991	18	18
1992	11	10
1993	6	6

Prosecutions of foreign vessels usually take place within three days of the recommendation, hence there are no cases of foreign vessels under consideration for prosecution.

Meat Imports

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken to ensure that meat imported into the United Kingdom from outside the EC meets EC standards.

Mr. Soames: Such imports must comply with United Kingdom meat hygiene and animal health rules implementing EC directives and decisions, including requirements for veterinary certification and health marking. The meat may be imported only at specific border inspection posts where, by or under the supervision of an official veterinary surgeon, all consignments must receive a documentary check, with a proportion also receiving identity and physical checks.

United Kingdom Wine

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken to promote United Kingdom-produced wine in overseas markets; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Government promote exports of English and Welsh wine vigorously. The Prime Minister himself served English wine at a G7 summit. It was also served at various functions during the United Kingdom Presidency of the EC. Seven English wines were available at the British pavilion at the Spanish Expo '92 in Seville. In addition Food From Britain and its export arm, the British Food Export Council, are keen to promote English and Welsh wines both at home and abroad and they can provide expert resources to help the industry.

We are also sympathetic to the wish of the English Vineyards Association to improve the marketing of English wine by the introduction of a new scheme for regional wine, and for new names for the wines.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the amount of wine produced by United Kingdom vineyards in each year since 1987; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The annual production of wine produced from fresh grapes grown in the United Kingdom since 1987 is as follows:

Year	Hectolitres
1987	5,000
1988	4,110
1989	21,447

Year	Hectolitres
1990	14,442
1991	15,429
1992	26,428

North East Salmon Drift Net Fishery

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made towards the phasing out of the north-east salmon drift net fishery; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The National Rivers Authority recently made a new net limitation order which places further restrictions on the number of licences that could be issued for drift netting for salmon off the coasts of Yorkshire and Northumbria, and largely prohibited the reallocation of surrendered licences. The order took effect on 22 January. I understand that, to date, 124 drift net licences have been issued for the 1993 season under the new arrangements. This compares with 143 drift net licences issued in 1992. A further five licences have been offered to eligible applicants but have not yet been taken up. One application is still under consideration.

Beef Exports

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much domestically produced United Kingdom beef has been exported overseas in each year since 1987.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 8 July 1993]: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year	'000 Tonnes
1987	176
1988	119
1989	138
1990	113
1991	121
1992	126

Source: Customs and Excise Trade Statistics

Food Exports

Mr. Booth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives she is taking to stimulate food exports.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 8 July 1993]: Ministers have held export seminars with some 140 companies to discuss what the Government can do to encourage their export performance. We are committed to supporting Food From Britain in its export promotion activities and are considering the report by Mr. Dennis Stevenson into FFB's work. In addition, we work closely with Government Departments in their efforts to improve industry's export performance; we undertake ministerial trade missions; and we support British efforts at overseas trade fairs.

Sea Defences

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken to improve sea defences around Britain; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 8 July 1993]: Responsibility for flood defence and coast protection policy in England lies with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and in Wales and Scotland with the respective Departments. Grant aid is available for capital schemes which meet technical, environmental and economic criteria and in 1992-93 grant of £45 million was paid by the three Departments towards the improvement of coastal defences in Great Britain.

Following a recent survey of sea defences against flooding in England and Wales, carried out by the National Rivers Authority, defences identified as requiring significant work have been attended to or are in the process of being restructured or repaired. The Ministry and the Welsh Office are currently undertaking surveys of coast protection defences against erosion in England and Wales and the results will be used in planning future investment in defences.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Tourist Resorts (Benefits)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment his Department has made of the special problems faced by tourist resorts with regard to the numbers of claimants of DSS benefits.

Mr. Burt: Although the Government recognise that there will be a number of benefit recipients included among the many visitors to tourist resorts, they are not persuaded that it is desirable or practicable to restrict the movement of unemployed people. The free movement of people around the country is an essential feature of an efficient labour market.

In all parts of the country the Employment Service assesses whether or not unemployed people are entitled to the benefits they are claiming, in accordance with social security legislation. Benefit is paid only where the conditions of entitlement are satisfied.

The housing benefit scheme requires local authorites to refuse benefit wherever they feel that a tenancy has been created with the intention of taking advantage of the scheme. This provision is designed to give local authorities a wider power to apply in cases of such abuse whether by landlords, tenants or both in collusion.

Invalidity Pensions

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what considerations underlie the choice of 1 April 1992 as the date from which revised decisions on payment of invalidity pension will apply.

Mr. Scott: 1 April 1992 is the date of a decision by a social security commissioner (decision CS 27/91) concerning the rate of invalidity benefit payable to women on reaching state pension age, and is the earliest date from which similar cases may be reviewed by an adjudication officer.

Invalidity Benefit

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many payments have been made for increased invalidity benefit to men whose wives earn under £80·70 per week since 15 April; and how this new rate of benefit has been publicised.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

For most invalidity benefit recipients who have been receiving payment continuously from a date prior to 16 September 1985, payment of an adult dependency increase ceases altogether when the dependent's earnings are £80·70 or more per week. This amount increases at each uprating and is notified to every beneficiary by issue of a form with the first payment of the uprated amount.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to equalise women's entitlement to invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: At present we have no plans to do so. However, as the hon. Member is aware there is a current court case concerning the rate of invalidity benefit payable to women on reaching state pension age, the outcome of which is awaited.

Child Support

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance his Department issues to the Child Support Agency on the eligible expenses that self-employed fathers can offset against their income when an assessment is made.

Mr. Burt: The relevant guidance by the chief child support officer is contained in part 4 of the Child Support Adjudication Guide, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy not to include the income of the wife when the Child Support Agency assesses the contribution her husband must take towards maintaining the children of a previous marriage.

Mr. Burt: Assessment of child support maintenance is based on a parent's own income and essential expenditure. Details of a wife's income are needed for two aspects of the assessment, as follows:

(i.) to assess whether the wife can contribute towards the support of any child of the couple themselves; and

(ii.) to assess whether maintenance payable by the husband for the children of the previous marriage should be reduced below the assessed level to avoid his second family's resources falling below a prescrived level.

We have no plans to change this.

Pensioners

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of recently retired pensioner couples receive income of at least (i) £30 and (ii) £89·90 a week from (a) an occupational pension, (b) income from savings and (c) both occupational pension and income from savings;

(2) what proportion of pensioner couples receive income of at least (i) £30 and (ii) £89·90 a week from (a) an occupational pension, (b) income from savings and (c) both occupational pension and income from savings;

(3) what proportion of single pensioners receive income of at least (i) £20 and (ii) £56·10 a week from (a) an occupational pension, (b) income from savings and (c) both occupational pension and income from savings;

(4) what proportion of recently retired single pensioners receive income of at least (i) £20 and (ii) £56·10 a week from (a) an occupational pension, (b) income from savings and (c) both occupational pension and income from savings.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is in the tables.

Table 1—The proportion of pensioner couples with income from occupational pensions and savings in excess of (i) £30 per week and (ii) the level of the basic state pension (1989)

	Percentage with income from
	Occupational pensions	Savings	Occupational pensions and savings
All pensioner couples
Of at least £30 per week	39	24	54
Of at least £69·80 per week	20	12	32
Recently retired pensioner couples
Of at least £30 per week	41	25	54
Of at least £69·80 per week	21	12	33

Table 2—The proportion of single pensioners with income from occupational pensions and savings of at least (i) £20 per week and (ii) the level of the basic state pension (1989)

	Percentage with income from
	Occupational pensions	Savings	Occupational pensions and savings
All single pensioners
Of at least £20 per week	24	17	33
Of at least £43·60 per week	15	9	21
Recently retired single pensioners
Of at least £20 per week	29	21	41
Of at least £43·60 per week	19	13	24

Notes:

1. Pensioner units are defined single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age. Recently retired pensioner units are defined as single men aged 65-69, single women aged 60-64 and couples in which the husband is aged 65-69.

2. Figures are based on data from the Family Expenditure Survey of 1989, which is the latest year for which estimates are available. Amounts are in 1989 prices.

3. £43·60 per week was the standard rate of Category A pension payable for the greater part of 1989, and £69·80 per week was the amount payable to a couple entitled to full Category A and Category B pensions.

Private Care Homes

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the details of his Department's implementation of the decision announced by the social security commissioner on 14 October 1992 relating to the eligibility for income support in respect of older people transferred from hospitals to private nursing homes.

Mr. Burt: The chief adjudication officer and the Secretary of State have appealed to the Court of Appeal against the commissioner's decision CIS/23/92 and the case is expected to be heard shortly. In the meantime, payment of the benefit awarded in the decision has been suspended.

Housing Benefit

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to cut the housing benefit taper from 65 per cent.

Mr. Burt: We have no such plans.

Order Books

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to make order books more secure.

Mr. Lilley: As a further important step in our campaign against fraud, I am introducing a new-style order book later this week. The new design will incorporate a number of significant new measures designed to prevent fraud and abuse, including complex features such as more secure watermarks, colour printing and other design properties which make illicit colour copying more difficult.

Benefits

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of males 60 years and over and below 65 years who receive benefit, other than unemployed benefit or those relating to ill health.

Mr. Burt: In May 1992, 127,000 males aged 60 to 64 were in receipt of income support or family credit.

Notes:

1. Sources:
   (i) Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry 1992.
   (ii) Family Credit Statistical Sample.
2. Information on Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit is not available in the form requested.
3. The reply relates to income-related benefits only, excluding Disability Working Allowance.
4. Some of those included in the above figure may be in receipt of the Income Support disability premium.

Incomes

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the increase in real average income before and after housing costs, for each decile group from 50 per cent. upwards, in the upper half of the population between 1979 and the latest date available.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 8 July at columns 215-16.

Benefits (Costs)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what work has been undertaken by the Government Actuary in relation to the projected cost of social security benefits up to 2000.

Mr. Scott: The figures in "The Growth of Social Security" include amounts based on projections made by the Government Actuary. The actuary also provides advice, comments and financial estimates pertaining to other aspects of the social security review.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the effect on the backlog of processing claimants' applications for disability living and working allowances of the accidental cutting through of the cables operating at his Department's headquarters near Blackpool on 6 May.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from George Bardwell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 9 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is Michael Bichard's responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. As he is out of Leeds on Benefits Agency business I am replying on his behalf to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will make a statement on the effect on the backlog of processing claimants applications for disability and working allowances of the accidental cutting through the cables operating at his Department's headquarters near Blackpool on 6 May.

I understand that British Telecom engineers accidentally cut through telephone cables and affected some telephones at our offices at Warbreck House, Blackpool. The situation was rectified within a matter of hours though and I am not aware of any significant delay to claim processing because of it.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Written Answers to Questions

HEALTH

Hospital Doctors

Ms Primarolo: To answer the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 177 if she will make a statement outlining the existing advocacy role of hospital doctors.

Dr. Mawhinney: The hospital doctor's role is to provide effective health care for each of the patients entrusted to his or her care taking account of available resources.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information is available to her Department about the numbers and circumstances of children who are indirectly affected by HIV and AIDS because their parents or carers are infected with the virus; and what assessment her Department has made of the extent of support likely to be required for the children if they cannot be cared for by their parent or parents;

(2) what guidance she has issued as to the information on which social services departments should base their plans for the support or provision of care for children who are indirectly affected by HIV or AIDS because of the illness of their parents or carers.

Mr. Sackville: So far as numbers of children indirectly affected by HIV are concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 12 July 1993, at column 378.

The Children Act 1989 and the guidance and regulations associated with it set out local authorities' duties towards children in need. For services for children both infected and affected by HIV or AIDS this is supplemented by "Children and HIV" which gives detailed guidance to local authorities to assist them in planning and providing services. The guidance encourages HIV awareness amongst service providers, and describes good practice.

The Children Act and associated guidance and regulations provide a policy framework through which local authorities, in collaboration with other agencies, can develop comprehensive plans for all children in need in their locality.

Copies of these documents will be placed in the Library.

Emergency Admissions

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of emergency admissions to hospitals in each health authority in England in 1990-91.

Mr. Sackville: The information from the hospital episodes statistics is not yet available. The collection of the management information on non-elective admissions in the general and acute specialties given in my reply to the hon. Member on 28 June at col. 352, did not begin until April 1991.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the procedure where general practitioner fund holders extend their role by undertaking services such as physiotherapy currently provided by community hospitals so that these services are not put in jeopardy for the majority of service users leading to a knock on adverse effect on the other services provided at the local hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: General practitioner fundholders, like district health authorities, are responsible for obtaining high quality health care for their patients in the most effective way. The challenge for provider units is to develop services which meet the needs of purchasers and patients.

Census, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what supplementary inquiries and research and other work was carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to supplement the census return in Lambeth and to obtain additional information about numbers and details of persons whose details ought to appear as part of the census.

Mr. Sackville: Census enumerators had the task of locating, contacting, and delivering census forms to all households and communal establishments in their areas. Census statistics have been derived principally from the completed forms. Where enumerators located households they believed to be present on census night, but were not able to contact people in them, the numbers and details of the people and households concerned have been estimated and included in the census statistics. Households identified by enumerators as absent on census night were asked to fill in a census form voluntarily on their return. For those who did not complete a form, numbers and details have been estimated and included in the census statistics.

A census validation survey was carried out shortly after the census to check on its quality and coverage. This survey compared information given on census forms with that obtained by experienced interviewers who re-visited a sample of addresses. The sample was not large enough, however, to provide information directly about individual authorities. A report on the survey's findings on coverage will be published later this year.

In preparing the Registrar General's mid-1991 population estimates, allowances were made for under-enumeration in the census, using results from the census validation survey and all other relevant sources. For individual local authorities these adjustments are inevitably less precise than at the national level.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to issue clear advice to people requiring dental treatment of their entitlement to free treatment under the NHS; if she will instruct family health services authorities to provide up-to-date information about the dental services available locally; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Under their terms of service, dentists are required to display prominently at their practices a notice supplied by the family health services authority—FHSA—indicating entitlement to exemption from and remission of national health service dental charges. Leaflets are available from family doctors and dentists and Benefits Agency offices explaining NHS dental treatment and how people may be entitled to free treatment or help with the cost. Copies of these leaflets will be placed in the Library.

FHSAs are responsible for maintaining up-to-date lists of the dentists providing NHS treatment in their localities. The list contains information about the days and hours the dentist is available at the practice, as well as the services offered.

Smoking

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by whom the review, proposed in The "The Health of the Nation" White Paper, of the possible legal control of the use of additives and emission of toxic substances from cigarettes was instituted; who is conducting the review; and which organisations and individuals have been invited to submit their views.

Mr. Sackville: The review will be established in due course.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made towards achieving the targets for reducing smoking prevalence to 20 per cent. of adults by 2000, and by 33 per cent. of 11 to 15-year-olds by 1994.

Mr. Sackville: The results of the biennial survey of adult smoking in 1990 gave levels of 31 per cent. for men and 29 per cent. for women and these were taken as the base for "The Health of the Nation" target. The results of the 1992 survey are not yet available.

The base figure for children's smoking—8 per cent.—is that reported in the 1988 Office of Population Censuses and Surveys biennial survey of smoking among secondary schoolchildren. The 1990 survey showed a level of 10 per cent. but the general trend will not be known until the results of the 1992 survey are available late this year.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the expected reduction in the consumption of cigarettes as a result of the increase in excise duty announced in the Chancellor's last Budget; and what would be the expected aggregated reduction in consumption were the same increase in real terms to be repeated at each successive Budget up to and including 2000.

Mr. Sackville: The consumption of cigarettes would be expected to reduce by between 1 per cent. and 2 per cent. as a result of the March 1993 Budget increase in tobacco taxation, assuming no change in other factors. The aggregated reduction in consumption if the same increase were repeated in each Budget up to and including the year 2000 would be expected to be in the range 9 per cent. to 18 per cent.

Health Care Plans

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue guidelines to require that draft health care commissioning plans on which consultation with community health councils are held include (a) the present state of the service, (b) the proposed changes and (c) the effect of the proposed changes on the existing service and to require that all plans should be in plain English and in other languages where appropriate; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Current guidance, EL(93)10, a copy of which is available in the Library, already requires health authorities to undertake formal consultation when local health services are under review and it is recommended that they should ensure that black, Asian and other minority groups are enabled to play a full part in that process.

Mental Health Services

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for collecting gender-specific information about use of mental health services for her review of information requirements in mental health services.

Mr. Bowis: Data collected on the use of services include information by gender when appropriate.

Contraceptives

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has a proposed timetable for the extension of the limited list to include contraceptives.

Mr. Sackville: The Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs has started to look at contraceptives and will be approaching manufacturers for information about individual products. We expect that they will complete this review by the end of this year.

Cosmetic Treatment

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual cost to the health service of (1) cosmetic treatment and surgery and (2) operations to remove tattoos; and how much is received from patients towards the cost of such treatments and surgery.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Community Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has any plans to revise the guidelines given to local authority social services departments concerning the escalation of unmet need resulting from the implementation of community care.

Mr. Bowis: No such guidlines have been issued.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to improve consultation between her Department and the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Sackville: We established earlier this year a pharmaceutical industry strategy working group consisting of representatives of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI) and senior officials from the Department of Health, the Treasury and the Department of Trade and Industry with the terms of reference:

"To consider jointly the future development of the pharmaceutical industry in the UK, its contribution to the UK economy and its role in the provision of health care; and in particular to consider issues of common interest such as the provision of affordable health care and the encouragement of a strong pharmaceutical industry."

In addition, officials consult regularly with the ABPI and individual companies on specific issues of mutual interest.

Female GPs

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated percentage of female patients who have access to a female general practitioner; and what percentage of general practitioner partnerships have a female general practitioner.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 1 April 1992—the latest date for which the figures are available—approximately 68 per cent. of female patients in England were registered with general practitioners in partnerships which included a female general practitioner; 53 per cent. of general practitioner partnerships had at least one female partner.

Child Migrants Trust

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) of 26 April, Official Report, column 278, if Her Majesty's Government will now make it their policy to provide additional funding for the Child Migrants Trust; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Funds for the year 1993-94 are fully allocated and include a grant for the Child Migrants Trust. Decisions about funding for future years will be taken when the Department knows what resources are available and what the competing demands for funds are.

Paediatric Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the units that provide training for paediatric nurses.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Health Education Authority

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how she intends to secure the continued value and effectiveness of the Health Education Authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The White Paper "The Health of the Nation"—Cm 1986—makes clear the important part to be played by the Health Education Authority (HEA) in achieving the targets for improvements in people's health set in that health strategy. It also emphasises that, complementing the HEA's national role, health authorities throughout England have a key responsibility for health promotion among their local populations. Last December, we approved the HEA's strategy for 1993 to 1998 to carry forward its role in "The Health of the Nation", which includes closer co-ordination with health authorities and other local agencies.

To help achieve these aims, and to ensure the continued effectiveness of the HEA, we have decided—with the agreement of its chairman, Sir Donald Maitland—to carry out a review with the following terms of reference:

"To consider the future role, responsibilities and functioning of the Health Education Authority, taking account of developments since it was established in 1987, notably:

- the new structure of the NHS;
- the 1992 White Paper "The Health of the Nation" and its programme for a long term health strategy;
- the development of Government policy on market testing and contracting out;
- the need for cost-effectiveness;

and to report to the Secretary of State for Health."

The review team will be led by Mr. John Lee—chairman, The Christie NHS Trust, Manchester and formerly a Minister in the Department of Employment.

The other members will be:

- Mrs. Terry Banks—former director of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys;
- Mr. Tonie Gibson—former newspaper editor and chairman of the Peterborough district health authority 1982 to 1992;
- Dr. Bob Haward—regional director of public health, Yorkshire regional health authority.

We expect the review to be completed in November.

Pharmacies

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she is taking to protect from closure small pharmacies in rural and suburban areas which deal with many fewer than 2,000 prescriptions per month.

Dr. Mawhinney: Discussions are continuing with the pharmacists' representatives about how best to restructure fees to encourage better services for patients and improve value for money. In these discussions we have made it clear that we remain committed to ensuring that patients in rural and suburban areas continue to enjoy reasonable access to a local pharmacy.

Homicides

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many homicides involved (a) shotguns and (b) other firearms in each year since 1979; and how many involved people under 16 years.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 7 July 1993]: The information relating to registered deaths is shown in table 1.

For further information, the Coroners (Amendment) Rules 1977 now allow for death registration in cases where an inquest is adjourned because a person has been charged with an offence in connection with the death; these cases are known as accelerated registrations. The correct external cause of injury, for example, "Assault by firearms and explosives" cannot, however, except in those cases relating to transport accidents, be determined until any criminal proceedings are concluded. Consequently, all non-transport accelerated registrations are assigned to the external cause of injury code E988.8—injury by other specified means, undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted—until results of proceedings are known and the death can be reassigned to the correct external cause code—E code.

Homicides are one of the categories most affected by this legislation. Accordingly, for each of the years 1979-92 there are a number of deaths that are the result of the use of a firearm but which as a consequence of the rules do not appear in table 1. Table 2 shows the number of deaths assigned—at the outcome of criminal proceedings—to a broad group of causes which includes "Assault by firearms and explosives". It is not, however, possible to specifically identify those deaths which were the consequence of the use of a firearm, or those deaths where the person was a child under the age of 16 years without incurring disproportionate cost.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS patients had waited for treatment for over a year in the North Western region (a) in March 1991 and (b) in the latest month for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply, 4 May 1993, c. 41]: I regret that there was an error in my previous reply. The last sentence should read

"in England over the same period, the number waiting over a year fell by 55 per cent. to 72,446—the lowest figure ever recorded".

ENVIRONMENT

Limehouse Link Road

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who funded the dance which took place in celebration of the opening of the Limehouse link road on 17 May in the Canary Wharf tower; and what was the full cost of this event.

Sir George Young: The London Docklands development corporation provided a reception in the Canary Wharf tower for staff involved in the Limehouse link project who were not able to attend the opening ceremony. The total cost of the reception was approximately £3,500.

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the full cost, including security arrangements, of the opening ceremony for the Limehouse link road on 17 May.

Sir George Young: A total of £64,000. The main costs were for the hire of a marquee, catering, toilets, stands, the parade, plaques and presentation plates.

Construction Industry

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he is providing to the task force on deregulation in the construction industry; and what assessment he has made of the effect of removing building regulations on reducing carbon dioxide emissions, improving energy conservation and ensuring health and safety in buildings.

Mr. Baldry: Officials in my Department have met members of the task force on deregulation in the construction industry, and have provided them with details of the Building Regulations 1991 and the proposals to amend parts L and F. All proposed changes to the Building Regulations are fully assessed before implementation.

Urban Development Grants

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessments urban development corporations are required to make of the competence of the companies to which they give grants.

Mr. Baldry: Urban development corporations are required to assess the ability of companies to carry through the project concerned; their financial viability; and their track record in undertaking similar projects.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines are issued to board members of urban development corporations governing conflict of interest.

Mr. Baldry: Board members are issued with a code of conduct on appointment, which includes guidance on how to deal with conflicts of interest and what interests should be declared and recorded in the corporation's register of interests.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what rules or guidelines are applied to the tendering process of urban development corporations.

Mr. Baldry: Urban development corporations are required to follow best public sector practice, which is that contracts should be placed on a competitive basis and the lowest tender accepted, subject only to certain clearly defined exceptions where this would not secure best value for money.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the operation of the Merseyside development corporation.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) to his previous question on Thursday 13 May 1993 at column 529.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much each urban development corporation has spent, since its inception, on consultations.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 5 July 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 16 November 1992 at column 48. Updated expenditure on consultants' reports to 31 March 1993, where available, is in the table:

UDC	£ million
Birmingham Heartlands	0·1
Black Country	[1]2·9
Bristol	0·7
Central Manchester	[2]—
Leeds	[2]—
London Docklands	[2]—
Merseyside	3·2
Plymouth	Nil
Sheffield	0·6
Teesside	4·9
Trafford Park	[2]—
Tyne and Wear	4·0

[1] To 31 March 1992.

"Climate Change"

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) of 15 June, Official Report, column 538, how many of the submissions he received on the discussion document "Climate Change" were from (a) Scotland, (b) organisations and (c) members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Out of the 254 responses now received to our discussion document, 31 were from Scotland. Twenty-four of these were from organisations and seven from members of the public.

Albert Dock, Liverpool

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what income has accrued to the Merseyside development corporation from the Albert Dock Company.

Mr. Baldry: In the period covering 1987-88 to 1992-93 a total income of £2,022,659 has accrued to the development corporation from the Albert Dock Company in respect of rents, service charges and sales of flats.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning permission was sought by the Merseyside development corporation to alter the facade, roofline and approach to the Atlantic pavilion at the Albert dock.

Mr. Baldry: MDC did not seek planning permission itself to carry out recent alterations to the facade, roofline and approach to Atlantic pavilion at the Albert dock, since urban development corporations are themselves the planning authorities within their designated areas. Agents acting on behalf of the developers, Linenhall Properties Ltd., sought and received planning permission from MDC.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contracts the Merseyside development corporation entered into with the Arrowcroft Company.

Mr. Baldry: The development corporation entered into only one contract—building agreement—with the Arrowcroft Company in September 1983.

This contract was for the phased conversion and refurbishment of the majority of Albert dock, giving rise to a total of 11 leases.

Dipsticks

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will oppose the provisions of the EC directive on vapour recovery, stage 1, which call for the ending of dipsticks as the principal method of measuring quantities of petrol in storage and road tankers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The proposed EC directive will introduce a system of petrol vapour recovery which is not compatible with the use of dipsticks because they cause emissions of vapour. It is therefore appropriate for the dipstick to be phased out as a means of measurement on road tankers. However, the Government have secured an agreement which allows existing road tankers to continue using dipsticks, and allows a satisfactory period to agree an alternative standard measuring system for new tankers.

PSA Building Management Scotland

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrrangements will be made for maintenance of redundancy and pension arrangements of the PSA Building Management Scotland when the sale of the organisation is completed; and if the Department will be responsible for any redundancy costs incurred by Serco in relation to staff previously employed by the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Baldry: Staff severance entitlements transfer on sale under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and are protected thereafter by employment law. A replacement pension scheme which is broadly comparable in value to the principal civil service pension scheme, will be established. The group stands behind its subsidiaries. The Department will meet the costs of redundancies, should they occur, in the five years after sale on an agreed basis up to a specified limit.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what long-term commitment has been made by Serco, in respect of long-term commitment to maintain a separate Property Services Agency building management organisation based in Scotland.

Mr. Baldry: Serco's objective in acquiring BM Scotland is to expand its business based in Scotland as a separate Scottish company.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whaat estimate Serco has given of the number of jobs that may be lost in PSA Building Management Scotland as a result of the proposed sale of the organisation.

Mr. Baldry: Serco does not expect significant jobs loss as a result of the proposed sale. Future jobs for BM staff will of course depend on the ability of the business to compete successfully for contracts as they are re-tendered.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the purchasers of the PSA Building Management business will be required to continue to provide a design capacity.

Mr. Baldry: The PSA Building Management businesses each have a range of contracts which require a design input. The purchaser will take over the obligation to service those contracts.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of employees of the PSA Building Management Scotland who would need to opt to transfer to the purchasing company to enable the contract to be completed.

Mr. Baldry: I hope that a very large proportion of staff will transfer with the business on sale, but the sale does not need a particular number to choose to transfer for the sale to proceed to completion.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the purchase price offered for PSA Building Management Scotland by the management buy-out.

Mr. Baldry: No. Such information is commercially confidential.

Council Tax

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received suggesting (a) that there should be a council tax band or bands below band A and (b) that there should be a council tax band or bands above band H; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has received some representations, but we are not persuaded that there is a case for changing the present arrangements.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites established under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 he has visited in an official capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Since his appointment on 27 May my right hon. Friend has visited no gipsy caravan sites established by local authorities under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 in his official capacity.

Darwin Initiative

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to make an announcement on the Darwin initiative; and what the role will be of the United Kingdom systematics institutions in the initiative.

Mr. Yeo: On 5 July my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, announced the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on the Darwin Initiative and published a copy of its report; copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. We are now inviting applications from British institutions and organisations, including our systematics institutions, for funding to carry out projects under the Darwin initiative. There is £1 million available this year for projects which meet the objectives of the initiative.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the forecast European regional development fund receipts for 1993-94 and the allocation for 1993-94 for the local authority other services block schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Total forecast receipts from the European regional development fund paid through the agency of my Department in 1993-94 are £221 million. The allocation of ERDF funds to other services block projects will depend on how much has been spent by authorities and claimed from the European Community through my Department by the end of the year. It is not possible to forecast the final figure at this stage. From April 1993, the Government are providing public expenditure cover, automatically and in full, for forecast ERDF receipts.

Renovation Grant System

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the findings of the Planning, Industrial and Economic Development Advisers—PIEDA—report into the new renovation grant system; and if he will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: The report "Monitoring the New Renovation Grant System" by PIEDA was published on Monday 5 July. Copies have been placed in the Library.

"Monitoring the Fitness Standard"

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the findings of the Warwick university report "Monitoring the Fitness Standard"; and if he will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: The report will be published next month. Copies will be placed in the Library.

PSA Building Management

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now give details of the severance sharing agreements with purchasers of the PSA Building Managment businesses.

Mr. Curry: Each of the sales of the five PSA Building Management businesses include arrangements under which the Secretary of State will contribute towards the costs of redundancies up to an agreed value during the five years from completion of the sale.

The amounts concerned for BM South and West, BM South East, BM Scotland and Noreast Building Management are as follows:

	£ million
BM South and West	25·0
BM South East	30·0
BM Scotland	15·0
Noreast BM	29·5

The amount which the Secretary of State will contribute towards the cost of redundancies in the five years after sale in BM Manchester depends upon the result of the staff choice exercise which is currently under way, and will fall in the range of £26·0 to £37·2 million.

The amounts are subject to a pro rata adjustment to reflect changes in the aggregate redundancy entitlements of staff up to completion.

Sellafield MOX Plant

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what considerations led to the timing of his direction of 7 July to Copeland borough council not to grant planning permission to the Sellafield mixed oxide plant at the meeting of the council's planning committee on that day; when his Department first knew about the application; and if he will make a statement;

(2) under what statutory powers, and for what reasons, his officials directed Copeland borough council not to grant planning permission for the Sellafield mixed oxide plant;

(3) when he expects to be able to reach a decision on the application by British Nuclear Fuels plc for planning permission to construct a mixed oxide plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Yeo: On 23 June my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received a request from British Nuclear Fuels plc for a direction that environment assessment of its proposal for a MOX plant at Sellafield was not needed. Although BNFL subsequently withdrew that application the Secretary of State decided that he ought to reach his own view. To provide time to consider the arguments Copeland council was directed, under the provisions of article 14(1) of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988, not to grant permission on 7 July when they considered the application.

We will conclude our consideration of this matter as soon as possible. I will write to the hon. Member.

Local Government, Cumbria

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Local Government Commission's consideration of local government reorganisation in Cumbria; and when he expects to receive its recommendations.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to my hon. Friend the member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 4 February at column 244. The review of Cumbria is scheduled to start on 20 September 1993 and end on 4 December 1994.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names and background details of the lead commissioners for the Local Government Commission's consideration of local government reorganisation in Cumbria; and if he will make a statement on the published timetable for the commission's work.

Mr. Baldry: The Local Government Commission announced on 2 June that the lead commissioners for its review of Cumbria and Lancashire will be Mrs. Ann Levick and David Ansbro. The commission's press release gave brief biographical details for each commissioner and I have placed a copy in the House Library.

We are keeping the commission's work programme under review.

Birmingham City Council

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet considered Birmingham city council's response to the notice served on the authority on 24 April under section 19(A) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the response which Birmingham city council has made to the notice served on the authority on 24 April 1993, and has today given the authority a direction under section 19B of the 1980 Act. The effect of the direction is that the council is required to retender in stages 12 housing repair contracts currently carried out by its own direct labour organisation. If the council wishes to carry out this work after 1 October 1994 then it needs to satisfy my right hon. Friend at each stage that it has fulfilled the competition requirements as laid down in the legislation.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to allow new development in rural mid-Kent as a result of the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Curry: Existing strategic planning policy for Kent seeks to restrict the development of fresh land in the countryside and to give protection to areas of outstanding natural beauty. I fully endorse that policy. Much of the rural area between Maidstone and the Medway towns forms part of the Kent downs area of outstanding natural beauty; elsewhere other conservation policies apply. The current third review of the Kent structure plan specifically recognises the importance of maintaining the separation of the built-up areas of Maidstone and the Medway towns by proposing the designation of a strategic gap, within which large scale development will be restricted. The draft regional planning guidance for the south east, published on 24 March, anticipates growth associated with the rail link being focused in Ashford, and east Kent, and especially in the east Thames corridor.

Fire Services, Merseyside

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority, following its consideration of the report of Her Majesty's inspector of fire services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 July 1993]: We have received from the Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority a copy of its resolution commenting on the report of Her Majesty's inspector of fire services and on the authority's finances. We are carefully considering the authority's comments, but we remain satisfied that its 1993-94 standard spending assessment, calculated in accordance with the Local Government Finance Report (England) 1993-94 approved by the House on 3 February 1993, is fair and reasonable.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to bring forward from 1 August each year the deadline for spending returns from local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 July 1993]: We have no plans to change the 1 August deadline for the return of data relating to revenue and capital outturn expenditure.

TRANSPORT

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the terms and conditions of employment, including basis of remuneration and hours of work of the chairman-designate of Railtrack, the Rail Franchising Director-designate and the Rail Regulator-designate.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has appointed Mr. Robert Horton as a part-time member of the British Railways board and as chairman-designate of Railtrack, under the general terms and conditions applying to BR board part-time members. His time commitment is, on average three days a week and his salary is £120,000 per annum.

Mr. Swift and Mr. Salmon are part-time special advisers to my right hon. Friend. Their terms are those of civil service appointments and their remuneration, in accordance with the conventions, is a matter of confidence between them and the Department. My right hon. Friend has announced his intention, subject to the Railways Bill passing through Parliament to Royal Assent, to appoint them to the posts respectively of rail regulator and director of passenger rail franchising. In that event the level of their salaries will be in the public domain.

Road Closures, City of London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he had with the City of London corporation on the closure of roads on security grounds; and what discussions were held with London regional Transport regarding the impact of road closures on public transport.

Mr. Norris: The City authorities consulted the Department informally about the experimental scheme before they announced it. We understand they also gave advanced warning of the road closures to London Buses Ltd.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what work is being undertaken by either his Department or Union Railways with a view to the construction of a tunnel between Stratford and St. Pancras or King's Cross, as part of the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: Union Railways is undertaking substantial development work for both of the alternative routes shown in its March 1993 report, including possible options for both routes, in association with its study of the St. Pancras and King's Cross terminus options.

River Avon (Navigation)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statute or statutes under which there is a right of navigation of the River Avon in Bristol for any vessel which has paid harbour duties.

Mr. Norris: In general, there is a public right of navigation on tidal rivers. Section 33 of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847, relating to free access for the public to harbour, dock and pier on payment of rates, is applied to shipping using the Port of Bristol by the relevant special Acts and subsequent orders relating to the port.

British Rail (Speed Restrictions)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has regarding track mileage on which British Rail has introduced temporary speed restrictions due to lack of funds for maintenance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Detailed information of this nature is not held by the Department.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to establish the scope for a joint venture with the private sector to renew the infrastructure of the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: The Government today appointed Hambros Bank Ltd. to advise on the scope for such a joint venture. The study marks a new departure in our efforts to involve private finance in railway projects. Up to now the Government have invited the private sector to come forward with proposals which have then been considered on their merits. With this study the Department is taking the initiative. Hambros has been given a remit to develop an outline proposal or proposals which will be attractive to the private sector and fall within the Government's published guidelines for joint ventures. These mean that control of the venture will rest with the private sector who will also be expected to take on genuine risk in return for an appropriate share of revenues. Consortia will be invited to bid for the role of joint venture partner on these terms.

The Government are determined to pave the way for private sector funding on railway projects. Equipment on the west coast main line is reaching the end of its economic life. We are hopeful that private sector funding will enable us to bring forward modernisation of one of the premier railway routes in the country.

Maintenance Staff

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the average hours worked per week by British Railways Board track and signal maintenance staff during the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: During the week ending 3 July 1993 track maintenance staff, excluding those who were absent through sickness or other reason for all or part of the week, worked an average of 52·1 hours. Signalling and telecommunications maintenance staff, during the week ended 24 April 1993, excluding those who were absent through sickness or other reason for all or part of the week, worked an average of 47·4 hours.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects local coastal search and rescue committees to convene their first meetings.

Mr. Norris: In the autumn.

Shipping Standards

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is considering any plans to adopt standards for shipping in the United Kingdom; and what account he is taking of whether such standards are compatible with the framework set by the International Maritime Organisation.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 12 July 1993]: Safety standards for shipping are under continuous review, particularly at the International Maritime Organisation. The standards applying to United Kingdom ships are based upon those developed internationally unless there is just cause to do otherwise, such as the initiative being taken with our European neighbours to establish adequate survivability standards for roll-on-roll-off passenger ferries built before 1990.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Synthesis Evaluation Study

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the full evaluation report for each of the projects on which the Overseas Development Administration's ATP synthesis evaluation study, EV490 of November 1991, was based.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ATP synthesis study was based primarily on three evaluation studies conducted as a series during 1990 and summarised in appendices B, C and D of that report. Copies of those studies have now been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Evaluation material on three projects in Botswana, Bangladesh and Burma were included in the "Power Synthesis Report" which is already in the Libraries of the House. A further study of scattered diesels, in Indonesia was undertaken jointly with the World bank which, in line with its usual practice, has not agreed to its release. The fifth report—"Iocom Telephone Cable Project in India"—contains comercially-sensitive material and has not been released.

Indonesia

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list United Kingdom bilateral development assistance to Indonesia for the last five years including projects and their nature, value, location and the names of United Kingdom companies involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Commitments of United Kingdom bilateral assistance to Indonesia for the period from 1 April 1988 to date have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

International Finance Corporation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of British companies that have secured contracts for International Finance Corporation-funded projects over the last five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: International Finance Corporation —IFC—loans go directly to private sector companies in developing countries. It is these companies that are responsible for awarding contracts to suppliers of goods and services. The IFC is not party to these contracts so is not able therefore to give details of contract awards for any individual country.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will supply the details of dividends the United Kingdom has received from International Finance Corporation investments since the end of the financial year 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Member Governments of the International Finance Corporation do not receive dividends from the corporation's investments. Earnings are wholly retained and recycled for new activity.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Charilaos Costa

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General when Mr. Charilaos Costa left the United Kingdom; what request has been made for his extradition; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: Mr. Charilaos Costa left the United Kingdom in March 1991 and went to the Republic of Cyprus. No application has been made for his extradition because Mr. Costa is a Greek Cypriot and the Republic of Cyprus will not extradite its own nationals.

Mr. Costa left the jurisdiction before he could be charged. However, three warrants exist for his arrest if he were to return.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to lay before Parliament and to publish the annual report of the Crown Prosecution Service for the year 1992-93.

The Attorney-General: The annual report for the Crown prosecution service for 1992-93 was laid before Parliament at 11 am today and then published. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what authority will carry out the checks proposed under article 3 of the recommendation of the Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June on checks and expulsions of third-country nationals residing or working without authorisation; what computer facilities will be provided to the authority; what are the cost implications of such checks and such computer facilities; and if he will place a copy of the guidelines to be issued to the authority in the Library;

(2) what authority (a) was responsible for and (b) carried out the drafting of the recommendation of the Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June on checks and expulsions of third-country nationals residing or working without authorisation;

(3) what plans Ministers responsible for immigration in the member states of the European Community have to harmonise their rules relating to the interpretation of public policy and national security as grounds for expulsion;

(4) what abuse is intended to be addressed by article 4, indent 3 of the recommendation of the Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June on checks and expulsions of third-country nationals residing or working without authorisation;

(5) what steps the Government plan to take to implement article 2 of the recommendation of the Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June on checks and expulsions of third-country nationals residing or working without authorisation;

(6) what consideration has been given to the cost implications of taking measures to implement article 1 of the recommendation of the Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June on checks and expulsions of third-country nationals residing or working without authorisation;

(7) if he will make a statement on the effect of the recommendation of the Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June on checks and expulsions of third-country nationals residing or working without authorisation, on the current pattern of checks on persons admitted to be reunited with their families;

(8) what measures have been taken to implement article 1 of the recommendation of the Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June on checks and expulsions of third-country nationals residing or working without authorisation;

(9) what measures the Government plan to take or continue to take to ensure compliance with article 4 of the recommendation of the Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 and 2 June on checks and expulsions of third-country nationals residing or working without authorisation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The recommendation concerning checks on and expulsion of third-country nationals residing or working without authorisation, which was approved by EC Immigration Ministers at their meeting in Copenhagen on 1 June 1993, seeks to ensure that effective procedures are in place to prevent people from entering or remaining unlawfully in member states, or from working there without authority; and to remove those found to have done so unless there are compelling reasons for letting them remain. It was prepared in the ad hoc group on immigration and its sub group on expulsion, and builds on a recommendation of expulsion practices which was endorsed by EC Immigration Ministers at their meeting in London on 30 November 1992.

The recommendation identifies the circumstances in which it may be appropriate to make checks, but does not have binding legal effect. It specifically states:

"checks and controls on the residence and employment of third country nationals shall be decided upon and carried out by those authorities which are empowered to do so under national legislation".

The recommendation is broadly consistent with existing United Kingdom law and practice and no changes are currently planned as a result of the recommendation, which does not therefore have any immediate cost implications for the United Kingdom.

There are no plans for work to harmonise the interpretation of public policy and national security in this context. The main abuse at which the third indent of paragraph 4 of the recommendation is directed is marriages of convenience.

Anti-abortionists

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concering (a) the entry into the United Kingdom of overseas citizens concerned with disrupting access to abortion clinics and (b) the particular policing implications of maintaining undisturbed access to such clinics.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Representations on both matters have been received from some 30 Members of Parliament and a smaller number of private organisations and individuals. My right hon. and learned Friend may direct exclusion if a person's presence would not be conducive to the public good. Enforcement of the Public Order Act 1986 as it relates to behaviour which may cause harassment or fear of violence is the responsibility of chief officers of police.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with police forces about the steps taken to ensure that women are not prevented from seeking legal abortions, and that clinic staff are not intimidated.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) on 9 July 1993 at column 296.

Tobacco (Illegal Importation)

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been relating to the illegal sale of duty-paid tobacco products illegally imported from other states in the European Community and connected offences; what was the outcome of such prosecutions; and what was the level of penalty imposed.

Mr. Maclean: Court proceedings data for 1993 will not be available centrally until the autumn of 1995. However Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have advised that there were 275 tobacco offences detected under section 170 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 within the period January to May 1993.

Police (Expenditure)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, in real terms and as a proportion of gross domestic product, the expenditure on police forces in England and Wales for each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is in the following table:

Year	Total expenditure on the police
	Real terms £ million at 1991-92 prices	Proportion of GDP Per cent.
1978-79	3,099	0·66
1979-80	3,426	0·71
1980-81	3,455	0·74
1981-82	3,810	0·82
1982-83	3,932	0·83
1983-84	4,070	0·83
1984-85	4,452	0·89
1985-86	4,172	0·80
1986-87	4,346	0·80
1987-88	4,542	0·79
1988-89	4,690	0·79
1989-90	4,986	0·82
1990-91	5,129	0·87
1991-92	5,408	0·93
1992-93	5,664	[1]0·98

[1] Estimate.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Jamaican citizens were initially refused leave to enter the United Kingdom as not being genuine visitors in 1987 and in each subsequent calendar year to date;

(2) how many Jamaican citizens were initially refused leave to enter the United Kingdom as not being genuine visitors between January and June, inclusive, in 1993 and in the same period of 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is in the table.

Jamaican citizens refused leave to enter, and removed from, the United Kingdom

	Main reason for refusal
	Not a genuine visitor[1]	Other reasons[2]
1987	212	57
1988	324	100
1989	692	111
1990	492	88
1991	338	54
1992	344	65
1991 January to June	175	29
1992 January to June	174	24
1993 January to March[3]	96	18

[1] Persons refused under paragraph 22 of the immigration rules.
[2] Some may have sought entry as a visitor but been refused mainly for a reason other than not being a genuine visitor.
[3] Data for April to June 1993 are not yet available.

Failed Prosecutions

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the oral answer of the Attorney-General to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) of 10 November 1992, Official Report, columns 746-47, in how many cases ex-gratia payments have been made by the Government to people who claim to have suffered losses as a result of a prosecution which subsequently failed or was withdrawn.

Mr. Maclean: None, in the particular categories specified by the hon. Member.

Prisoners (Suicide)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of installation of horizontal bars in prisons on the likelihood of prisoners attempting suicide by hanging.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 12 July 1993

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what assessment had been made of the suicide risk posed by horizontal bars in prison design.

It is the responsibility of prison governors to keep accommodation under review. Where unsafe features are identified consideration will be given to remedial measures, taking into account the resources available for refurbishment and minor works programmes and other priorities. We also have to balance the need to minimise the risk of suicide as far as we reasonably can against the importance of preserving a decent and humane living environment for prisoners.

Design standards for new prisons are set out in the Prison Design Briefing System (PDBS). PDBS makes provision for vertical bars in prisoner's living accommodation. For health care centres and segregation units at PDBS specifies additional anti-suicide features.

PDBS standards are kept under review in the light of new research and operation experience, including analysis of all prison suicides. A new anti-suicide cell window design is being tested which aims to make it even more difficult for prisoners to attach ligatures to any part of the window or bars.

We are not aware of any recent case in which a prisoner has been able to commit suicide by attaching a ligature to horizontal bars. If, however, you have any specific concerns about the use of horizontal bars in a particular establishment I should be grateful if you would draw them to my attention and I will arrange for the matter to be investigated.

Mark Jarvis

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the downgrading from category A to C and the subsequent home leave granted to Mark Jarvis, recently sentenced for manslaughter and originally in Winson Green prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 12 July 1993.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Mark Jarvis's security category and his home leave.

When Mr. Jarvis was convicted of rape, armed robbery and abduction of a child in 1985 and sentenced to 12 years imprisonment, consideration was given to placing him in category A: this is reserved for those prisoners whose escape would be highly dangerous to the public, police or the security of the state. While Mr. Jarvis was not regarded as presenting such a threat, he was at that stage clearly one for whom escape should be made very difficult and he was classed as a category B prisoner. On reaching 21 he was reclassified as an adult and in view of the gradual improvement in his behaviour and the signs of his maturity he was downgraded to category C. This category is for prisoners who, while they cannot be trusted in open conditions, are judged to have neither the resources nor will to make a determined escape bid.

Shortly after this his behaviour deteriorated and he was upgraded to category B and moved to a more secure prison. In 1990 his behaviour improved to the point at which it was considered that he should be again downgraded to category C and he remained in that category until he was charged with murder in September last year. He was upgraded to category B and, following his conviction for manslaughter he was transferred to Long Lartin prison.

In May 1992 Mr. Jarvis became eligible for home leave and he applied to stay with his sister and her family. Home leave is designed to help prisoners adjust to life outside prison and should be restricted to those who pose no risk to the community and whose behaviour in prison has been such as to earn this privilege. In Mr. Jarvis's case, his earlier poor record and the seriousness of his offences would be factors against home leave being granted, but reports on his behaviour in Birmingham were excellent and were considered as strong factors in favour of his application. It was also taken into account that he was nearing the end of a long sentence and that his return to the community was imminent. While bearing all this in mind the home leave board considered that it was still too early to grant home leave and the decision was deferred for further reports. These reinforced the view that he was ready for temporary release and that the address at which he intended to stay was suitable.

Mr. Jarvis was released on licence on 14 August last year for four days but failed to return to prison at the end of his home leave. The police were notified that he was unlawfully at large. In the early hours of 2 September, a taxi driver was stabbed to death and Mr. Jarvis was later arrested and charged with murder. He was returned to Birmingham prison on 22 September and an inquiry was conducted into the granting of home leave. Two governors reviewed the papers and concluded that the decision to grant home leave was not unreasonable. Subsequently that decision has been reviewed by the area manager and he has reached the same view.

Clearly, the consequences of the decision to grant home leave to Mr. Jarvis were deeply regrettable and tragic; our sympathy is very much with Mr. Ashiq Hussain's family and friends. The papers on this case have been reported to a Working Party whose task is to review the operation of home leave. With the benefit of hindsight, it may well be that too much emphasis was put on Mr. Jarvis's behaviour in prison and too little on his poor record outside. Under new instructions issued to Governors in October last year, their need to assess the risk in releasing prisoners is reinforced by a more structured approach. Greater emphasis is placed on circumstances outside prison. Had Mr. Jarvis's application been considered after these instructions were issued, it is probable that it would not have been granted.

Mr. Jarvis was tried for murder at Birmingham Crown Court and was convicted of manslaughter on 1 July; he was sentenced to five years imprisonment the following day.

Unsound Convictions

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens convicted of murder and imprisoned have been released on appeal or review as their convictions have been judged unsafe and unsound in each calendar year from 1985.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 8 July 1993]: The information readily available centrally is in the table.

Appeals against conviction only or conviction and sentence for murder or life imprisonment, heard by the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division).

England and Wales			Number of persons

Sunday Trading

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his plans to reform Sunday trading law in England and Wales.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 8 July 1993 c. 207]: I have placed in the Library a copy of a draft Bill together with a covering text explaining the models for reform. I hope this will provide hon. Members with an opportunity to consider carefully the options for reform well in advance of being required to choose between them. We aim to introduce the Bill early next Session.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place on breaches of the Sunday trading laws over the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 24 June 1993, c. 253]: The number of prosecutions brought in 1991 was in fact 388, not 522 as I previously stated, of which 86 were brought to successful conclusions. I apologise for any difficulty which this mistake may have caused.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charters

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to make a further statement on new charters.

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 28 June 1993 at column 654. I have nothing further to add to this statement at this time, but will of course keep him and the House informed of any new charters.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

PA Management Consultants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, columns 605-6, if he will place in the Library the reports by PA Management Consultants on (a) United States biotechnology, (b) the feasibility study—"Factory of the Future", (c) the update of the report on manufacturing into the 1990s, (d) emerging generic technologies, (e) the future of Warren Spring Laboratory and (f) the Warren Spring investigation.

Mr. Eggar: It is not my intention to publish all of the reports in question. The reports which I have arranged to be placed in the Library are (a) United States biotechnology and (c) the update on the report on manufacturing into the 1990's which is due for publication in July. Work has only recently begun on (b) the feasibility study—Factory of the Future. The form of the report to be published on (d) emerging generic technologies, has yet to be decided although a related study "Research Foresight and the Exploitation of the Science Base" published in March 1993 is available from HMSO. With regard to the studies on the Warren Spring Laboratory a copy of the report by PA consultancy has been placed in the Library.

Engineering Companies

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department provides to British engineering companies to sell their products abroad.

Mr. Needham: My Department, jointly with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, provides a wide range of high quality advice and support to exporters which is available to all sectors of United Kingdom industry.

European Council

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the European Council meeting on 2 July; and what progress was made at that meeting with the proposal to accord to Merseyside objective 1 status.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch) on 6 July at columns 105-6.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with his Japanese counterpart on preparations being undertaken in Japan for the receipt of (a) low-level, (b) intermediate level and (c) high-level radioactive waste to be returned after reprocessing at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: In the first instance, these are matters for British Nuclear Fuels plc and its customers in line with the contracts between them. These arrangements are supported by the existing intergovernmental letters between the United Kingdom and Japan. Since 1976, BNFL's contracts for the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. The Government intend that these options will be exercised and wastes returned.

THORP

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his Department was represented at the meeting hosted by the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent, on 15 June at 1 Parliament street, on the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the International Atomic Energy Agency in regard to the establishment of an international or regional plutonium store at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: An informal exchange of views about the possibility of greater international involvement in the storage of plutonium took place in Vienna in December 1992 under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency. Those present agreed that the meeting had been useful in identifying the issues involved in this area and that further discussions should be held.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amounts of plutonium are expected to be reprocessed from the final loading of spent fuel extracted from the prototype fast reactor at AEA Technology's Dounreay nuclear establishment when the reactor is shut down in 1994; what information is received from the operator by Her Mjesty's Government in regard to safeguards obligations to (a) EURATOM and (b) the International Atomic Energy Agency covering civil nuclear materials at Dounreay; and if he will make a statement on plutonium storage at Dounreay.

Mr. Eggar: The plutonium content of the final fuel loading when the prototype fast reactor is shut down depends on the operational programme. Plutonium arisings from the fast reactor fuel reprocessing plant at Dounreay are transferred to BNFL, Sellafield for long term storage. EURATOM will have a continuing obligation to safegard the plutonium and routine reports of all inventory changes will continue to be sent to the IAEA.

Dounreay (Decommissioning)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has received from AEA Technology in regard to the planning timetable for the decommissioning of the Dounreay shaft; and if he has received any request for financial assistance in conducting this decommissioning exercise.

Mr. Eggar: Disposals of radioactive waste to the Dounreay shaft were authorised by the Scottish Office. There is no requirement or timetable for its decommissioning. Studies are however being carried out by the AEA to determine whether any further work should be carried out on this facility. These studies are funded by the Department under the decommissioning and radioactive waste management support programme.

Gas

Mr. Devlin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of (i) the proportion of the firm contract and tariff market over 2,500 therms which is currently supplied by independent shippers, (ii) the total cost savings made by industry as a result of switching to shippers of gas other than British Gas in each of the last three years for which figures are available and (iii) the average reduction in gas bills achieved by these concerns which have switched to a shipper other than British Gas.

Mr. Eggar: By the end of 1992 OFGAS estimates that independent shippers had captured around 20 per cent. of the traditional contract market—above 25,000 therms.

The Department does not collect price information from independent shippers. However, the latest annual report of the Gas Consumers Council suggests that gas costs to all but the largest consumers have been falling, particularly since the opening to competition of the 2,500-25,000 therm bracket last autumn. The latest estimate in July 1993 suggests a reduction of 10 per cent. in price to approximately 13 per cent. of the market in this bracket.

Catering Ware Exports

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to bring about a reduction of catering ware duty of 35 per cent. on goods exported to the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: In the current GATT Uruguay round market access negotiations, the Government continue to press, through the European Commission which negotiates on behalf of the European Community, for a substantial reduction in the United States 35 per cent. duty on catering ware. Good progress was made in talks in Tokyo on 6 July, at which the EC, United States, Japan and Canada produced an agreed report containing elements of a deal on market access including the objective of reaching 50 per cent. reductions in tariff rates of 15 per cent. and above, subject to agreed exceptions and effective market opening by other participants.

Textiles and Clothing

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will continue to press for the reduction of United States tariff peaks on textiles and clothing in the GATT Uruguay round; and if he will make a statement on progress made by Her Majesty's Government in the negotiations.

Mr. Needham: In the current GATT Uruguay round market access negotiations, the Government continue to press, through the European Commission which negotiates on behalf of the European Community, for substantial reductions in peak United States textile and clothing tariffs. Good progress was made in talks in Tokyo on 6 July, at which the EC, United States, Japan and Canada produced an agreed report containing elements of a deal on market access including the objective of reaching 50 per cent. reductions in tariff rates of 15 per cent. and above, subject to agreed exceptions and effective market opening by other participants.

Post Office

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Post Office's plans for its present site at King Edward street, EC1; and what are the current terms of their occupancy.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am told by the Post Office that the King Edward building site currently houses inland sorting; deliveries for EC 1-4 postal districts; international sorting; a counter and callers' office. The Post Office has plans to move inland sorting to the Mount Pleasant sorting office and is also considering proposals for a similar move of delivery work.

The building is owned by the Post Office on a freehold basis.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) all measures taken by his Department in the last 12 months to prevent nuclear proliferation, (b) the number of personnel in his Department working to prevent nuclear proliferation and (c) his Department's total expenditure on control of nuclear proliferation in the last year.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry works with other Departments to implement Government policy on nuclear non-proliferation. Over the past 12 months, my officials participated in the European political co-operation working group on nuclear non-proliferation, the nuclear suppliers group and the Zangger committee.

Coal

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average level of Government subsidy per tonne of deep-mined coal in each year since 1987 for (a) each of the United Kingdom coal fields, (b) England, (c) Wales, (d) Scotland and (e) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Government grants to the coal industry are not provided on an individual coal field or regional basis. Grant aid made available to the coal industry since 1987 is set out in the table.

Grants to British Coal[1] and payments under the Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme[2]

(£ million)

Financial year	Deficit and Deficiency Grant	Social and Restructuring Grant	RMPS(b)	Total
1987-88	200	477	295	972
1988-89	0	297	168	465
1989-90	6,153	1,090	126	7,369
1990-91	0	141	93	234
1991-92	0	457	61	518
1992-93[3]	0	614	43	657

[1] Grants to British Coal are at outturn prices, on an accruals basis, taken from British Coal's annual report and accounts.
[2] Redundant mineworkers payments scheme. Figures exclude administration costs.
[3] 1992-93 figures provisional.

In addition to grant aid, the coal industry benefited by about £1 billion a year over the last three years from the financial advantage resulting from the premium over market prices which the electricity generators were paid for their coal supplies from British Coal.

Foreign Languages

Mr. Beith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has about the availability of subsidies to industry for the purpose of staff training in foreign languages or the publication of marketing and promotional material in foreign languages in each EC country.

Mr. Needham: My Department's policy is to increase language awareness through encouraging the learning of languages, the development of language training and to signpost to those offering training, translation and interpreting services. The Government do not subsidise language training or translation costs for business purposes, although we do support a number of language initiatives to provide business with practical solutions.

Energy Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans), 6 July. Official Report, columns 106-7, what were the voting figures for each decision taken at the European Community's Council of Energy Ministers held on 25 June.

Mr. Eggar: No formal votes were taken at the Council of Energy Ministers on 25 June.

European Community Funding

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the distribution in the United Kingdom for 1993, by each assisted region of (1) each of the Community initiatives under the European structural funds, and (2) schemes under objectives 2 and 5(b) of the European structural funds in terms of (a) allocation of grant in ecu and in pound sterling at current exchange rates in total and sub-divided between European regional development fund, European structural fund and other structural funds, (b) the value of grant for approval in ecu and pound sterling at current exchange rates and (c) the amount spent on each programme in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The structural funds are implemented through multi-annual programmes and in the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Defence Industry (Reduction)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress towards obtaining access to EC intervention funds for British warship yards.

Mr. Sainsbury: I discussed the question with Vice President Van Miert on 8 July. Officials are continuing to progress the case.

Laboratory of the Government Chemist

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what targets he has set the Laboratory of the Government Chemist for 1993-94.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Laboratory of the Government Chemist's primary target will continue to be to recover its full costs from income for customer work. This is a demanding target: in addition to the fact that the laboratory is now required to operate in an increasingly competitive market, it also expects to reduce its controllable costs by 2 per cent. this year.

I have also set it the following secondary targets for 1993-94:

- to increase the rate of completion of reports on analysis of/research into samples by the date agreed with customers from 88 per cent. in the first quarter to over 90 per cent. in the last quarter;
- to achieve more than 85 per cent. of contract research milestones within the time scale agreed with the customer;
- to maintain accreditation from the national measurement accreditation service—NAMAS—for the existing categories of work and obtain NAMAS accreditation for at least one further category of work by April 1994; and
- to acquire laboratory-wide accreditation to BS 5750—ISO 9001—by April 1994.

In addition, I have set the chief executive of the agency the personal target of replying within 10 working days to letters from hon. Members delegated to him for reply.

Postal Charges

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what revenue is generated by users of the recorded, registered and special delivery services of the Post Office; and if he can estimate the share of this revenue attributable to business use.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand from the Post Office that the total revenue generated by its recorded, registered and special delivery services in the financial year to 28 March 1993 was £50 million. The estimated share attributable to business use is in the range of 75 per cent. to 80 per cent.

Miners (Redundancies)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much redundancy pay has been paid to miners employed by the NCB and British Coal for each of the years beginning in 1979 until the latest available date, giving the number of miners.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 9 July 1993]: Redundancy payments made by the NCB and latterly British Coal are a matter for British Coal. Benefits paid and the number of beneficiaries under the redundant mineworkers payments scheme between 1979-80 and 1992-93 are set out in the table:

Benefits and number of beneficiaries under the redundant mineworkers payment scheme

Financial year	Payments £ million	Number of new beneficiaries qualifying each year
1979-80	15	1,700
1980-81	15	3,200
1981-82	48	10,500
1982-83	80	8,500
1983-84	190	20,400
1984-85	200	8,050
1985-86	563	35,900
1986-87	610	33,950
1987-88	295	0
1988-89	168	0
1989-90	126	0
1990-91	93	0
1992-93	43	0

(a) Payment figures in the above table exclude administration costs.
(b) Includes ex-employees of small mine licensees.
(c) The Redundant Mineworkers Payments scheme closed to new entrants at the end of 1986-87.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much redundancy money has been paid out to miners since 1979 in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland, giving the number of miners in each case.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 9 July 1993]: Redundancy payments made by the NCB and latterly British Coal are a matter for British Coal. Payments under the redundant mineworkers payment scheme are not readily available on a regional basis.

Cellphones

Ms Lynne: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account is taken of the effect of cellphones on hearing aid wearers when agreeing to license them.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 9 July 1993]: Studies by the Radiocommunications Agency show that the new generation digital mobile telephones may cause interference to hearing aids. The Wireless Telegraphy Act licences for operators of these systems require them to minimise transmitter power and so reduce the potential for interference. In addition my Department is encouraging manufacturers to improve the immunity of hearing aids.

Konver Programme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade following the Council of Minister's meeting on 2 July, if he will make a statement on the Government's position regarding the European Community Konver programme for defence-dependent areas.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The conclusions reached at the Foreign Affairs Council on 2 and 3 July on the regulations on the future of European structural funds, if confirmed by the Council on 19 and 20 July, will enable member states to make available to areas not designated for objective 1, 2 or 5(b) a limited part of the European regional development fund contribution to the Community initiative Konver. The Government intend to make use of this new flexibility in the United Kingdom's 1993 Konver programme.

The future choice of Community initiatives was not discussed. It will be considered at a future meeting of the Council.

Public Houses

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what individual exemptions have been given under article 85(3) of the treaty of Rome to Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd; and what notices, as required under article 19(3) of EC Regulation 17/62, have been issued in respect of that company's lease agreements.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1993]: I am advised that no individual exemptions under article 85 of the treaty of Rome have been given to Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd, nor has any notice been issued under article 19(3) of EC Regulation 17/62 in respect of the company's lease arrangements.

In my answer to the hon. Member on 15 June, Official Report, column 497, I said that the United Kingdom Government did not keep a record of individual exemptions under article 85 of the treaty of Rome and that such information could be obtained about the brewing industry only at disproportionate cost. I regret that this information was not wholly accurate as information about EC Commission decisions on competition matters is held centrally by the Office of Fair Trading. However this information does not separately identify decisions constituting exemptions from article 85 of the treaty of Rome, nor does it separately identify decisions made in respect of particular business sectors.

It would not, therefore, be possible to provide a complete record of exemptions granted in relation to the brewing industry except at disproportionate cost, as stated in the answer I gave to the hon. Member previously. This is also the case for notices under article 19(3) of EC Regulation 17/62 in relation to the brewing industry as a whole.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 35, what sales outlets other than public houses were included in the figures given for on-trade beer sales.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The figures include on-sales in pubs, restaurants, café-bars and pub hotels.

EDUCATION

Performing Arts

13. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he will review the impact of local education authority policies on students wishing to study the performing arts.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to hold such a review.

Grant-maintained Schools

14. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many different levels of funding exist for grant maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: All grants for self-governing schools are calculated under the Education GM Finance Regulations 1993. Different levels of funding are paid under various grant headings depending on the size and circumstances of the school.

29. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools have had ballots to go grant-maintained so far this year; and how many were successful.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 409 schools have held parental ballots on self-governing (GM) status so far this year. Three hundred and sixteen of those schools have voted in favour of GM status.

25. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has recently made to, or received from, schools in Hampshire which are seeking, or have obtained, grant-maintained status.

Mr. Robin Squire: We continue to receive a steady flow of inquiries from schools in Hampshire which are interested in applying for self-governing status. We also receive representations from time to time from the 16 Hampshire schools which are already grant-maintained, from the four schools which have been approved to become grant-maintained, and from the nine whose applications for self-governing status are currently under consideration by my right hon. Friend.

The Department has been running a series of regional conferences to provide basic information on "Going GM". Those attending have included 81 heads and governors from 46 Hampshire schools.

18. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to make it easier for parents to obtain grant-maintained status for schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Our present Education Bill will streamline the processes involved in a school becoming grant-maintained. Its provisions include: a shorter timetable for balloting and the publication of proposals; annual consideration of grant-maintained status by governing bodies; extra powers for the Secretary of State to void a ballot if there is interference by third parties; modest payments to governing bodies for costs incurred in acquiring grant-maintained status; and limitations on LEA expenditure aimed at influencing the outcome of ballots.

Experience suggests that, taken together, these changes will help eliminate many of the difficulties which can be encountered in acquiring grant-maintained status.

Teacher Training

15. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on recent changes in teacher training.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government's teacher training reforms are designed to ensure that all new teachers have the knowledge and skills they need to raise standards in the classroom. My right hon. Friend announced last summer important changes to his requirements for the training of secondary teachers, with more time to be spent in schools, and schools themselves playing a central role in course design and delivery. He is now consulting on similar proposals for the reform of training for primary teachers.

28. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to ensure that student teachers spend more time training in the classroom.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans).

Community Education

16. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy on the development of community education.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's policy is to maintain and develop opportunities for adults to participate in further education, and to raise levels of attainment, within the framework set by the Further and Higher Education Act 1992.

Comma and Apostrophe

17. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he has plans for greater emphasis in schools to be given to teaching the correct use of the comma and apostrophe.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has recently published proposals for revisions to national curriculum English which give greater emphasis to the teaching of punctuation, including the correct use of the comma and apostrophe.

Truancy

19. Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment his Department has made of the accuracy of truancy figures he plans to publish in his proposed truancy tables.

Mr. Forth: It is for individual schools in the first instance to satisfy themselves as to the accuracy of their returns. The Department has also specified a series of wide-ranging computerised tests which the contractor will apply to each return.

Dearing Inquiry

20. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a further statement on the Dearing inquiry into the national curriculum.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend looks forward to receiving Sir Ron Dearing's advice this month, which will lead to streamlined assessment arrangements in 1994. Sir Ron will also advise before the end of this year on the curriculum and assessment framework for future years.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects the report of Sir Ron Dearing on the curriculum to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend expects to receive initial advice from Sir Ron Dearing later this month on national curriculum assessment arrangements in 1994. Sir Ron Dearing has announced that he will publish his report. Sir Ron Dearing will make further recommendations towards the end of the year on the curriculum and assessment framework more generally.

People's College, Nottingham

21. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the capital allocation to the People's college, Nottingham, for the current financial year.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council's capital allocation to the college for 1993-94 is £568,000. This includes £250,000 which the college expects to spend on fees and initial site investigations for a major new project.

Student Funding

22. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to introduce a more generous system of funding for students in further and higher education.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has no plans to make the support arrangements more generous than they already are by international standards.

Eleven plus Examination

23. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has for the reintroduction of the 11-plus examination.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no plans to re-introduce the 11-plus examination. National curriculum tests for 11 year olds in English, mathematics and science will be the subject of a voluntary national pilot in 1994.

School Leaving Age

24. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the school leaving age.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill provides for the Secretary of State to specify a single school leaving date each year. This will not affect the ages at which pupils leave school.

Teachers' Salaries

26. Mr. Bates To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average teacher's salary in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: The 1992 new earnings survey recorded the average earnings of all school teachers in England and Wales, including head and deputy teachers, as £20,498.

Nursery Education

27. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to meet representatives of the National Campaign for Nursery Education to discuss the campaign.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Key Stage Testing

30. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the future of testing at key stages of the national curriculum.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has asked Sir Ron Dearing to conduct a review of the national Curriculum and assessment framework. He looks forward to receiving Sir Ron's recommendations on future assessment arrangements before the end of this month.

Nursery Places

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the number of nursery places in each of the last five years for (a) children under three years and (b) from three years to compulsory school age; and what are the equivalent figures for each EC country.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the number of nursery places is not collected centrally but the numbers of pupils in nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools in England in each of the last five years and for each age group are shown in the table.

Comparable information on the numbers of nursery pupils in each EC country is not available.

Table 1
Pupils maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools in England in January of each year (1988 to 1992)

Year	Pupils ages at previous 31 August
	Pupils aged 2	Pupils aged 3 and 4[1]
1988	27,310	257,232
1989	25,299	270,285
1990	26,508	280,466
1991	27,763	290,141
1992	27,225	302,510

[1] Excludes pupils who became 5 years of age by 1 January—ie those of compulsory school age.

Special Schools

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many young people are currently resident in special schools; and what is the estimated annual cost.

Mr. Forth: The latest figures are for January 1992. A total of 11,762 pupils were then resident in maintained and non-maintained special schools in England. The total of pupils with special needs resident in independent schools is not collected centrally.

The annual cost of residential placements in special schools is not collected centrally.

Physics Teachers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his most recent assessment on the shortage of physics teachers in schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: There is no overall shortage of physics teachers. Provisional figures for January 1993 show only nine physics secondary teacher vacancies reported for maintained and self-governing schools in England. The 1992 secondary school staffing survey found that only 4 per cent. of physics tuition was delivered by teachers without a post-A level qualification in the subject.

PRIME MINISTER

Serbia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackpool, North (Mr. Elletson) of 5 July, Official Report, column 15, on actions by the Serbian Government, if he will list (a) the actions taken by that Government which Her Majesty's Government considers to have fulfilled the requirements of the London conference and (b) the ways in which they have failed to co-operate satisfactorily with the international community's peace efforts.

The Prime Minister: The Serbian leadership bears a heavy burden of responsibility for the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, and has not met the fundamental requirements contained in the statement of principles of the London conference to end hostilities and the acquisition of territory by force, to engage in serious negotiation with the other parties, to respect the rights and basic needs of civilians, and to meet the obligations of all relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 13 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

World Summit for Children

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the steps taken by his Government to achieve the targets established at the world summit for children.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom response to the declaration and plan of action agreed at the world summit for children is published as Cm. 1984, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Child Migrants Scheme

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set up an inquiry into the child migrants scheme.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. Such schemes date back to the second half of the 19th century and were conducted under duly enacted legislation. They were ended in 1967.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Annunciator Service

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what proposals there are for the modernisation of the House annunciator service.

Mr. Gary Waller: The character generation equipment of the annunciator system is to be updated during the summer recess, following the agreement of the Information Committee to a proposal by the Editor of the Official Report. The new system will display the same information as at present when the House is sitting. Before 1 pm on sitting Mondays to Thursdays, the screens will display information on the forthcoming proceedings of the House. The information will be available additionally in teletext form at other times on television sets within the parliamentary estate equipped to receive it.

There will be a demonstration of the new screen displays on Thursday 22 July in a Committee Room of the House.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will set out the terms of reference for his Department's inquiry into removing unnecessary regulations in the tourism industry.

Mr. Sproat: The inquiry will identify first those regulations which place needless and excessive burdens on the tourism industry, and secondly the action required to free business from the harmful effect of those regulations. It will also determine what action is necessary to ensure that the interests of the tourism industry are taken fully into account before regulations are put in place in future.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what measures are being taken by his Department to ease the burden of regulation on the tourist industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Mr. Coe) on 14 June 1993 at column 619.

Media Products

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the value earned by the United Kingdom from the export of British media products.

Mr. Brooke: Information on exports of media products is not held centrally.

WALES

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken in Wales to inform young people of the dangers of anabolic steroids; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are a number of initiatives, both at a local and national level, within Wales informing young people and others of the dangers of using anabolic steroids.

In 1990 the Welsh Committee on Drug Misuse identified an increasing problem related to the use of anabolic steroids and initiated action to bring the problem to the attention of practitioners. This resulted in pioneering research and pilot prevention programmes being undertaken in West Glamorgan.

Most activity is now undertaken through local health and education authorities. In addition the Sports Council for Wales has recently launched an initiative warning about the use of banned drugs in sport, and this includes anabolic steroids. Part of this initiative will be targeted specifically at schools.

For those individuals who are already involved in steroid misuse, there is advice available on the dangers and on safer practices, including the availability of clean needles and syringes for those who inject their drugs.

Food Technology

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the National Curriculum Council for Wales recommendation that food technology should be an option rather than mandatory at key stage 3.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have received the views of the Curriculum Council for Wales on the proposals for a revised technology order which were issued last December. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and I have announced that the timetable for implementation of a revised curriculum in technology should be delayed by a year. This will permit the outcome of the review of the national curriculum and assessment arrangements to be taken into account in the revision of the order. I can assure the hon. Gentleman that there will be further consultations before any changes are made.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the recent report by the Council for the Protection of Rural Wales entitled, "Wales 2012—the United Kingdom's National Sustainability" report and its role and relevance to Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Campaign for the Protection of Rural Wales' views as set out in its report Wales 2012 will be taken into account, along with others received during the consultation process, in the preparation of the United Kingdom's report to the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the community hospitals which were located in each local authority area in the counties of Gwynedd and Clwyd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As there is no agreed definition of community hospital the information given as follows relates to those hospitals classified as such by the health authorities in question. Other hospitals in the counties have been included to give a complete picture.

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many women died of (a) breast cancer and (b) cervical cancer in each health authority area in Wales in 1992; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1986.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of deaths of female residents of each health authority in Wales where the underlying cause was (a) breast cancer and (b) cervical cancer for each year since 1986 are given in the following tables.

Malignant neoplasm of the female breast (ICD 174)

	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992

Health Authority Costs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the expenditure of the district health authorities in Wales was taken up in administrative costs in the last year for which figures are available; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1991-92 the percentage share of total revenue expenditure that each health authority spends on administration was as follows:

Expenditure on administration as a percentage of total revenue expenditure

Health authority	Per cent.
Clwyd	1·6
East Dyfed	2·7
Gwent	0·9
Gwynedd	2·1
Mid Glamorgan	1·1
Pembrokeshire	1·1
Powys	3·4
South Glamorgan	3·1
West Glamorgan	1·3

Source: Health authorities annual accounts.
Notes:
1. Expenditure on administration is taken to be that covering authority administration and purchasing expenses.
2. 1991-92 is the latest year for which accounts information is currently available. It is not possible to provide figures for previous years on a consistent basis because of changes to the format of accounts as a consequence of the national health service reforms.

PGU Engineering

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether assistance has been offered by his Department to PGU Engineering of Letchworth.

Mr. Redwood: To comment on the Department's relationship with this, or any other individual company, would be a breach of commercial confidentiality.

EC Funding

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure that no finance allocated to Wales by the EC Commission will be lost by delays in processing paperwork in his office relating to such grant applications from Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Projects to take up the whole of the resources allocated to the Welsh structural funds programmes for the calendar years 1992 and 1993 have been identified by the relevant monitoring committees, and formal project approvals are now accelerating. I am confident that all the available structural funds grants will be committed to projects by the end of the year.

Tourism

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that tourism in Wales will continue to be eligible for grant aid under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 that such grants will continue to be administered by the Wales tourist board; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have no plans to review current arrangements.

Disabled People (Planning)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement outlining the discussions that have taken place between his Department and the Wales Council for the Disabled concerning the participation of disabled people in planning.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Following discussions last year the Welsh Office funded the Wales Council for the Disabled to undertake a participation in planning project, the purpose being to compare consultation strategies and to develop guidelines on good consultative practice in the county social care planning process. The Wales Council for the Disabled is expected to present a full report on this project in the autumn.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total budget of the Development Board for Rural Wales in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93.

Mr. Redwood: The DBRW's gross expenditure for these years are as follows:

	£ million
(a) 1990-91	19·591
(b) 1991-92	[2]21·520
(c) 1992-93[1]	[2]25·076

Gross expenditure includes grant in aid and other payments.
[1] Estimated.
[2] Includes premature redemption of NLF debt.

Wales Tourist Board

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total budget of the Wales tourist board in 1991-92 and 1992-93; and how much money was allocated to its north Wales office during both years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The WTB's gross expenditure for 1991-92 and 1992-93 was £12·946 million and £15·287 million respectively. Gross expenditure includes grant in aid and other receipts.

No funds are directly allocated to the north Wales office.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest figures for total expenditure on the valleys initiative for each year between 1988-89 and 1992-93.

Mr. Redwood: Total public expenditure for each of the five financial years of the first programme for the valleys (1988-93) was:

	£ million
1988-89	139·330
1989-90	137·440
1990-91	148·810
1991-92	171·033
1992-93	[1]176·270
Total	[1]772·883

Note.—Figures exclude housing programmes.
[1] Estimated outturn based on the 1992-93 provision.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the conclusions of the evaluation of the valleys initiative conducted by Victor Hausner Associates; and when it will be published.

Mr. Redwood: I have not yet received the final report of the evaluation study. I expect to publish it in due course.

Disabled Children

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many claims have been made for severe disablement allowance by pupils (a) in special schools and (b) integrated into mainstream schools in Wales in each year since 1987; and how many claims were successful in each instance.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been (a) killed and (b) wounded by terrorist attacks in Northern Ireland in each year since 1969.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The available information is set out in the table.

	Terrorist-related deaths[1]	Injuries[2]
1969	6	765
1970	20	811
1971	131	2,592
1972	401	4,876
1973	219	2,651
1974	203	2,398
1975	241	2,474
1976	283	2,729
1977	105	1,387
1978	71	985
1979	112	875
1980	70	801
1981	84	1,350
1982	85	525
1983	66	510
1984	53	866
1985	49	916
1986	55	1,450
1987	84	1,130
1988	87	1,047
1989	58	959
1990	66	906
1991	88	962
1992	75	1,066
[3]1993	31	310

[1]Figures show all persons killed by terrorist actions and therefore include, for example, people killed in sectarian incidents, those killed while handling explosives and those killed in public order situations. They exclude those killed by the police or armed forces.

[2]Figures show all injuries due to the security situation in Northern Ireland and therefore include, for example, injuries resulting from the actions of the security forces.

[3]to 31 May.

Fishing Licences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many concessionary fishing licences have been issued to disabled anglers and anglers with severe mobility problems in Northern Ireland by his Department in each of the last five years; what is the full cost of each licence in each year, and the cost at the concessionary rate; how many similar concessionary licences or permits have been issued by the Fisheries conservancy board and the Foyle fisheries commission in the same years; and what was the full and concessionary cost of such licences or permits.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Concessionary permits were first introduced in 1992 and 40 were issued at a cost of £25·90 as compared with £41·70 for a general season permit. In 1993, to date, 75 have been issued at a cost of £20·00 as compared with £42·75 for a general season permit. The Fisheries conservancy board and Foyle fisheries commission do not have the statutory authority to issue licences at concessionary rates.

Fisheries Review

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the names of the persons who are carrying out the review of the Foyle fisheries commission, indicating the nature of the expertise of the persons concerned, when the review began, when the report will be published, and the persons and bodies consulted by the review team.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The management review of the Foyle fisheries commission is being undertaken by a multi-disciplinary team of consultants from the Belfast and Dublin offices of KPMG Management Consulting. The team assigned to the project incorporates a wide range of expertise including business management, financial management, human resource management, corporate finance, strategic marketing, environmental management, pension funding and aquatic science.

The review commenced in early February 1993 and the report is expected to be finalised in August 1993. As the report will deal largely with a management review it is not envisaged that its text will be released into the public domain. However, should its recommendations lead to changes which would be of public interest, these will be brought to public attention. Those consulted by the review team included the appropriate Departments of Government in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland, the Foyle fisheries commission, the advisory council for the Foyle area, and representatives of angling, draft net fishing, drift net fishing and shellfishing interests.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Colombia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific infringements of human rights he intends to raise with the President of Colombia during his forthcoming visit.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We expect wide-ranging discussions including human rights. But it would not be right to specify points in advance of President Gaviria's visit.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from, or on behalf of, civic groups and local government in Colombia about the environmental and social impact of BP's exploration in the Cusiana oil field; and what response he has made.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have received no such representations.

North Korea

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has recently received from his United States counterpart in regard to the United States Administration's current policies towards the military nuclear programme in North Korea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in close and frequent contact with the Government of the United States over the problem of North Korea's failure to comply with its obligations under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. The United States is actively seeking a lasting solution to the problem by which North Korea would reaffirm permanantly her commitment to the non-proliferation treaty, and abide by her safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. Bilateral talks between the Governments of the United States and North Korea are set to resume on 14 July in Geneva.

Research Projects

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 86, how many research projects in universities have been signed or funded by the Government communication headquarters since that date; which universities were involved; what was the title of each project; and how much each was worth.

Mr. Hurd: There have been no further research projects signed or funded by GCHQ since 1 December 1992.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long a person applying for entry clearance for settlement at the British post in (a) Manila, (b) Accra, (c) Lagos, (d) Kingston, (e) Nicosia, (f) Cairo, (g) Bangkok, (h) Rabat and (i) each post in each country of the Indian sub-continent on 31 March or the latest convenient date could expect to wait for (i) interview, (ii) referral of the case to the Home Office and the requested information being received by the post, (iii) decisions and (iv) an explanatory statement prepared by the post in the event of an appeal against a refusal to be dispatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As at 31 March the timings required at (i) (ii) and (iv) are set out for posts (a) to (h).

The information requested at (iii) is not available. Times vary according to the circumstances of individual cases. Many decisions are made on the day of interview.

Post	(i)	(ii)	(iv)
Manila	4 weeks	2-3 months	1-3 months
Accra	4 days	2 months	3 months
Lagos	2 days	4 months	3 months
Kingston	6 weeks	2-3 months	1 week
Nicosia	1 day	6 weeks	1 month
Cairo	1 day	5 days	2 months
Bangkok	6 weeks	2-3 months	3 months
Rabat	Visa operation centralised in Casablanca from 1 March 1993

(i) As at 31 March the timings required for each post in each country of the Indian Sub-Continent for settlement interviews (in months) were:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4
Islamabad	3 months	3 months	6 months	9 months
Karachi	No queues	—	—	—
Dhaka (end of May)	3 months	7 months	8 months	10 months
New Delhi	1 day	4 months	7 months	10 months
Bombay	1 day	4 months	7 months	9 months
Madras	1 day	7 weeks	5 weeks	Nil
Calcutta	No queues	—	—	—

Settlement queues are organised as follows:

Q1 Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependent relatives over 70 years, special compassionate cases.
Q2 All spouses and all children under 18 years.
Q3 Fiance(e)s and others applying for the first time.
Q4 Re applicants.

Visit visa applications are dealt with within 24 hours except in Islamabad where, due to seasonally high demand, applicants requiring a full interview can expect to wait 5-7 days.

(ii) If referred to the Home Office, inquiries concerning applications may take from 1-12 months depending on individual circumstances.

(iii) Decisions after first interview are taken within 24 hours in the majority of cases in Indian Sub Continent posts.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the size of the population of Gladovici on 13 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has received from the United Nations on the financial viability of the placing of monitors along the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia-Herzegovina; if it remains Her Majesty's Government's policy to support the placing of these monitors; why no action has been taken to place them since the United Nations Security Council resolution on 16 November 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations estimate that the cost of United Nations observation, reporting, searching and—if necessary—denying access to traffic crossing the borders of Bosnia-Herzegovina would be $69 million for the first six months.

The President of the Security Council wrote to the Secretary General on 7 July requesting him to contact member states to establish whether they will make available the required personnel.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 February 1992 to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham), Official Report, column 185, what progress the Croatian Government have made in fulfilling their obligations to minority rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Croatia has made some progress in its approach to minorities, although we consider that its performance should continue to be closely monitored. We remain concerned that efforts to resolve the dispute in the United Nations protected areas and implement the Vance plan for Croatia are blocked, and we urge the parties to return to negotiations.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the text of the United Nations personnel report into the bombing of Gladovici on 13 March at 16:15 hours GMT; when that report was received by Her Majesty's Government; what representations were made to Her Majesty's Government by foreign Governments regarding this incident, the Secretary General of the United Nations or the President of the Security Council; and on what day they were received.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only document we have seen from the United Nations about the bombing of Gladovici was UN note verbale s-24900-Add 27 of 16 March, a copy of which was placed, at the request of the hon. Member, in the House of Commons Library on 23 June 1993. We received no representations on this incident from foreign governments, or from the United Nations. The Bosnian Serb leader, Dr. Karadzic, wrote to the Prime Minister on 31 March about several matters including enforcement of the no-fly zone.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 19 February 1992 to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) Official Report, column 185, what changes there have been in Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Croatia since February 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend explained to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North-West, (Mr. Bellingham) on 19 February 1992 at column 185, all aspects of our policy towards Croatia are under constant review. We are becoming increasingly concerned about Croatia's failure to co-operate fully in efforts to secure peace in the former Yugoslavia and, as Heads of Government made clear at the Tokyo economic summit on 7 to 9 July, stronger measures cannot be excluded.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence Her Majesty's Government have received indicating Croatian violations of UN Security Council resolution 713; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglass Hogg: The United Nations sanctions committee is responsible for evaluating and investigating evidence of possible breaches of the arms embargo on the former Yugoslavia. Where necessary, the committee refers cases to the United Nations Security Council. It did so in September 1992 in respect of a possible violation of UN Security Council resolution 713 involving Croatia. The matter is now with the Security Council.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby, (Mr. Wareing), of 2 July, Official Report, column 654, what UN reports he received on the final destination of these aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby, (Mr. Wareing) on 8 July 1993, at column 239. There have been no reports as to the final destination of the aircraft.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he received from either the Bosnian-Serb authorities or the authorities in Belgrade regarding UNSC no-fly zone enforcement resolutions as a result of the bombing of Gladovici in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Bosnian Serb leader, Dr. Karadzic, wrote to the Prime Minister on 31 March 1993 about several matters including enforcement of the no-fly zone.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if during his visit to Japan for the G7 summit he discussed nuclear testing with his American, French and Russian counterparts.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This issue was raised briefly in discussion with the United States Secretary of State in Tokyo. It was not discussed there with either the French or the Russian Foreign Minister.

Entry Clearance Appeals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many explanatory statements related to entry clearance appeals were awaiting typing at each post in the Indian subcontinent, in Manila, Kingston, Bangkok, Lagos and Accra on the latest available date; how many staff are employed both full time and part time to type statements; and when he expects backlogs to be cleared.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is given in the following table (as at 31 March):

(a) Number of explanatory statements awaiting typing.
(b) Staff whose duties include typing explanatory statements (staff also employed on other typing duties shown in brackets).

Post	(a)	(b)
Islamabad	149	9	(1)
Karachi	Figures not available at this time

Calcutta	11	(1)	—
Manila	37	2	—
Kingston	0	1	—
Bangkok	0	(1)	—
Lagos	10	2	(1)
Accra	0	1	—

The posts in Islamabad, Dhaka and New Delhi estimate that they should clear the backlog in two to three months after the busy summer period.

Ukraine

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Ukraine following the decision on 2 July in the Ukrainian Parliament to claim ownership of all nuclear weapons on Ukrainian territory.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have noted the statement, which also repeated Ukraine's commitment to a non-nuclear future. We shall continue to work with our allies to bring about Ukraine's earliest possible ratification of START I and accession to the non-proliferation treaty as a non-nuclear weapon state.

Settlement Queues

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) children were waiting in each queue at each post in the Indian subcontinent on 31 March or the latest convenient date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of men, women and children waiting in the settlement queues for interviews in the Indian Sub-Continent Posts at 31 March was:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4

Queue 4. Reapplicants.
There are no queues for visit applications other than in Islamabad, where due to seasonally high demand, applicant requiring a full interview can expect to wait five to seven days.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received on the reasons for the United Nations' inspection team in Iraq withdrawing from Baghdad on 5 July; and if the matter has been raised in the United Nations Security Council subsequently.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations inspection team withdrew from Iraq on 5 July because of Iraq's refusal to allow installation of surveillance cameras at two missile test stands. The matter has been discussed at informal meetings of the United Nations Security Council ambassadors.

Canada (Logging)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make representations to the Government of British Columbia to reverse the decision to make a substantial proportion of the remaining unlogged area of the Clayoquot sound region available for logging.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The recent decision on land use in the Clayoquot sound area of Vancouver island was for the Government of British Columbia to make. The Canadian Government and British Columbia authorities are well aware of public concern in the United Kingdom about logging in the Clayoquot sound region.

Sudan

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the steps taken by the Government to help secure a peaceful settlement of conflicts in Sudan, and to safeguard human rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have consistently urged all the parties to the civil war in Sudan to settle their differences by peaceful means, most recently during the EC Troika mission to Sudan on 18 to 22 June, in which the United Kingdom was represented. We were a prime mover in securing the appointment by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva of a special rapporteur to investigate the human rights situation on a public basis throughout Sudan.

Departmental Replies

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's current practice regarding replies sent to hon. Members of the House; under what circumstances replies are sent by officials; how it is decided whether a reply concerning constituency cases is sent by a Minister or an official; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Our present practice is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to reply to letters from right hon. Members and for other Ministers to reply to hon. Members.

The exception is correspondence on visa and immigration issues dealt with by officials of the migration and visa correspondence unit. They seek to reply to all inquiries within three weeks and achieve this target in 84 per cent. of all cases. The services which the unit offers are explained in a booklet sent to all Members last year. It has been revised and will be reissued this week. The unit replies to 94 per cent. of letters received from hon. Members. Ministers reply in the remaining 6 per cent. of cases.

Royal Family

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) of 24 June, Official Report, column 240, what items of expenditure were covered by (a) the cost of the Prince and Princess of Wales's visit to Nepal and (b) the cost of the Princess Royal's visit to India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Items of expenditure paid by the Department have been in the following categories:

(a) for the Princess of Wales' visit to Nepal—hotel expenses; and miscellaneous (including insurance and reconnaissance visits partly for security purposes).

(b) for the Princess Royal's visit to India—travel; hotel expenses; official presents and donations; bank, postal, telephone and telegraph charges; and miscellaneous.

Hong Kong

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who has the power of appointment of (a) the Hong Kong Registrar of Companies, (b) the Hong Kong Monetary Authority, (c) the Inland Revenue Commissioner for Hong Kong, and (d) the Financial Secretary of the Hong Kong Legislative Council.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The Registrar of Companies and the Commissioner of Inland Revenue are appointed by the Secretary for the civil service. The chief executive of the Hong Kong Monetary Authority is appointed by the Financial Secretary. The Financial Secretary is appointed by the Governor.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give (a) the name of the present Financial Secretary of the Hong Kong Legislative Council and indicate whether he is an appointed or a directly elected member and (b) the names of the members of the Hong Kong Monetary Authority together with the banks and other financial institutions they are associated with.

Mr. Goodlad [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The present Financial Secretary is Mr. Hamish MacLeod. He is an ex-Officio member of the Legislative Council appointed by the Governor. The Hong Kong Monetary Authority is part of the Hong Kong Government. The chief executive is Mr. Joseph Yam. He is not associated with any banks or financial institutions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Secret Fish Holds

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Spanish vessels, British and Spanish registered, have been found by United Kingdom to have secret fish holds in each year since 1991; and how many have been prosecuted.

Mr. Jack: There have been no prosecutions, but legislation is being brought forward shortly to provide for the prosecution of the owners or skippers of vessels over 17 m which fail to carry plans of their rooms. Three vessels, two Spanish-owned but British registered and one Spanish registered, have been found to have secret fish rooms since 1991.

Fish Conservation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate has been made of the cost to date of setting up the machinery for the implementation of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1992; and what is (a) the number and location of jobs created, (b) the number of vessels so far registered and (c) the number of appeals initiated.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 12 July 1993.

Seals

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food how many reports regarding incidental catches of seals by fishermen the fisheries officers in England and Wales have received to date under the scheme set up to monitor the extent of this interaction.

Mr. Jack: There have been no reports of incidental catches of seals under this scheme for England and Wales.

Pregnant Ewes

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement on the screening of pregnant lowland ewes to ascertain the number of lambs each is carrying.

Mr. Jack: My Department does not run any such screening programme, but screening is available from various commercial organisations for a fee. We understand that those who make use of it find it valuable as a means of determining appropriate feeding regimes for their breeding ewes.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Environmental Initiatives

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what matters in regard to the financing of environmental initiatives were introduced by the United Kingdom at the G7 heads of state economic meeting in Tokyo.

Mr. Nelson: The environment, and in particular the follow up UNCED, was one of the issues discussed in Tokyo. The G7 agreed to work to ensure that the global environment facility functions as the financial mechanism to provide funding for the incremental costs of implementing the global environment conventions signed at Rio.

Government Departments (Expenditure)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of placing in the House of Commons Library each year for the inspection of hon. Members a microfiche copy of a computer printout of each Government Department's expenditure analysed (a) by account code and (b) by item charged.

Mr. Portillo: Information on which to base such costings is not held centrally, and could not be assembled without disproportionate cost. The detailed management of operational accounts is a matter for individual Departments.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the changes made to his Department's definition of unemployment since May 1979, with the dates upon which the changes were made.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 26 October 1992 at column 496.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage better skills training; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government's strategy is to encourage effective investment in skills by employers and individuals, by stimulating a strong market in training, by encouraging standard setting and by offering training to young people and long term unemployed people. Britain's workforce is becoming more skilled. Over 2·5 million more people in the workforce now have a qualification than five years ago.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest available figures for the numbers of people on Government training schemes in North Derbyshire.

Miss Widdecombe: As at 18 June 1993 there were 1,070 people participating in training for work and 1,708 people in training on youth training in the area covered by the North Derbyshire training and enterprise council.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated total amount spent by the Government on training since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated total spend on training—including vocational education and enterprise—in Great Britain since 1979, in cash prices, is £23·8 billion and, at 1992-93 prices, is £31·6 billion.

Vocational Courses (Allowances)

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the statement of the right hon. Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont), 16 March, Official Report, column 193, if he will list, by training and enterprise council area, how many educational allowances for vocational courses have been granted to the long-term unemployed since 16 March.

Miss Widdecombe: None. Education allowances will be paid under the learning for work initiative which starts in mid August in Scotland and in September in England and Wales.

Gas Appliance Installers

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unqualified gas appliance installers have been prosecuted in the last year that figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested.

In 1991-92, 93 informations were laid under the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1984 and the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) (Amendment) Regulations 1990. These resulted in 86 convictions.

Wages Councils

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the new earnings survey will continue to provide comparable figures for at least five years on those sectors previously covered by wages councils.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 July 1993]: The new earnings survey obtains information on the earnings of employees covered by wages councils by asking employers to report the relevant wages councils. This practice will clearly cease when there are no wages councils. The extent to which information on earnings for selected occupations, industries and age groups can be used as a replacement, will be investigated before next April.

SCOTLAND

Strathclyde Passenger Transport Executive

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effect of his proposals for the reform of local government in Scotland on the preservation of the role of the Strathclyde passenger transport executive; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend recognises the important role of Strathclyde passenger transport executive in transport provision. He has taken this into account in the examination of how the functions of local authorities can best be carried out under the various options for local government reform. The Government's proposals wil refleet fully the consideration given to the executive's role.

Optical Appliances Vouchers

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total number of optical appliances vouchers redeemed in Scotland in each year since 1986; and what was the total cost of the optical appliances voucher scheme in Scotland each year since 1986.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested on optical appliances vouchers in Scotland is in the table. The information is for vouchers issued through the general ophthalmic services.

Optical vouchers and repair/replacement vouchers redeemed in Scotland

Year	Number of vouchers redeemed[1]	Cost of redeeming vouchers £ million
1986-87	[2]—	3·718
1987-88	350,479	6·332
1988-89	317,645	6·747
1989-90	315,266	6·990
1990-91	337,073	8·566
1991-92	410,935	10·596
1992-93	431,956	[3]—

[1] Analysis is made from payments made by health boards in Scotland to ophthalmic medical practitioners (OMPs) and ophthalmic opticians (OOs).

[2] Information on the current collection basis for 1986-87 is not centrally available.

Child Care Policy

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish his White Paper on child care policy and law.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to publish a White Paper on child care policy and law in due course.

Children's Rights

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution he has made to the United Kingdom's first report to the United Nations convention on the rights of the child.

Mr. Stewart: The Government's first report on the United Nations convention on the rights of the child is due to be submitted in January 1994. The Scottish Office will contribute to the report, ensuring that it reflects the situation in Scotland where that is different from the rest of the United Kingdom.

Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from colleges and universities of further and higher education about the adequacy of student incomes; and what was the substance of those representations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 July 1993]: In the past 18 months or so, my right hon. Friend has received representations about student income from only one educational institution, a university, which argued that students faced financial hardship due to the lack of vacation employment and the withdrawal of entitlement to social security benefits.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent research he has commissioned on (a) the adequacy of student income, (b) the level of student debt and (c) whether students are leaving courses prematurely because of financial need; and what were his findings.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 July 1993]: My hon. Friend, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education, announced on Wednesday 21 October 1992 the commissioning of a United Kingdom-wide survey of student income and expenditure initiated jointly by the Education Departments. We hope that the results, which should be available later this year, will bring our knowledge of student income and indebtedness up to date.

There is no evidence to suggest that the proportion of Scottish domiciled award-holding students who leave their courses prematurely is increasing.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what current information he has on (a) the adequacy of student housing, (b) the extent to which students income meets their housing needs and (c) levels of student debt.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 July 1993]: Detailed information on student housing and its cost is not held centrally.

The survey of student income and expenditure announced by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education on 21 October 1992 will provide certain information on housing costs and student debt.

Refuge Hostels

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will commission research into what happens in the immediate aftermath to those women and children who leave refuge hostels.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 July 1993]: Research has recently been completed on domestic violence and the effect on children and families. No further research is planned on the specific issue of women and children who leave refuge hostels.

Police Arrests (Forms)

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the maximum and minimum number of forms which must be completed by a police officer making an arrest followed by (a) release and (b) detention; and what, on average, is the time taken to complete these formalities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 July 1993]: The minimum number of forms which must be completed by an officer making an arrest is two, rising possibly to 20 in exceptional circumstances. On average, the time taken to complete this process is about 60 minutes. Some police forces are introducing automated systems which will reduce the need to complete successive forms manually.

Women's Aid

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much grant has been awarded to Scottish Women's Aid in each of the years since it first applied for grant.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 July 1993]: The total grants paid from 1978-79 are as follows:

1978-79	7,740
1979-80	9,433
1980-81	13,329
1981-82	19,466
1982-83	31,395
1983-84	38,871
1984-85	58,865
1985-86	72,141
1986-87	84,829
1987-88	93,630
1988-89	99,860
1989-90	106,931
1990-91	98,000
1991-92	109,911
1992-93	121,282
1993-94	[1]115,092

[1] Grant offered.

Information for the years 1975-76 to 1977-78 is not readily available.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to criminalise racial harassment and to make racial harassment an aggravation of existing crimes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The Government have no plans to introduce a new offence of racial harassment. Aggravating factors such as racial harassment can be taken into account for sentencing purposes.

Conservation Areas

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites in (a) Strathclyde and (b) the rest of Scotland which will be placed on a list of special areas of conservation under the European Community's Directive 92/43/EEC in the conservation of natural habitats and of wild flora and fauna; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The Government have not yet proposed any sites for designation as special areas of conservation (SACs) under Directive 92/43/EEC. The country nature conservation agencies and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee are at present undertaking the scientific analysis necessary for the preparation of the United Kingdom's national list from which areas to be designated as SACs will be selected.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole have been or are to be, designated as special protection areas under the European Community's Directive 70/400/EEC on the conservation of wild birds; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 July 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) on 16 June 1993.

Wetlands

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all those wetlands, Ramsar sites, under the European Parliament Convention on Wetlands of International Importance Especially as Waterfowl Habitat (1971) in (a) Strathclyde and (b) the rest of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The information requested is set out in the table:

Site name	Region
Bridgend Flats (Islay)	Strathclyde[1]
Cairngorm Lochs	Grampian and Highland
Claish Moss	Highland
Eilean Na Muice Duibhe (Duich Moss-Islay)	Strathclyde[1]

DEFENCE

Fast Jet Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the required (a) vertical and (b) horizontal avoidance distances for camouflaged fast jet aircraft of activities notified under the civil aircraft notification procedure.

Mr. Hanley: Civil pilots can if they wish, notify low level aerial activity under the civil aircraft notification procedure specifying the location and horizontal dimensions of the area in which they will be operating, together with the maximum height of their activities. Commercial activity accepted for notification attracts temporary avoidance status, in which case pilots of military fixed wing aircraft flying in excess of 140 knots are required to avoid the specified area laterally or if overflying it to do so at a minimum height of 300 ft above the maximum specified in the notification. Recreational and other aerial activity does not normally attract avoidance status but when details are provided they are passed to military air crew who will take account of such activities in planning their sorties.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 October 1992, Official Report, column 159, if he is yet able to give an analysis of the noise generated by the F-15E aircraft at low level.

Mr. Hanley: For technical reasons, the F-15E aircraft involved in the trial last September were unable to achieve all of the planned runs over the test site and firm conclusions could not be drawn from the limited data produced. A further trial which was arranged earlier this year had to be abandoned due to adverse weather conditions but has been re-arranged for later this month.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the nature of the sortie, (b) the recorded height, (c) the recorded speed and (d) the home base of the military jet aircraft that overflew the village of Clayton, south Yorkshire on 30 June at approximately (i) 22:00 hours, (ii) 22:04 hours, (iii) 22:08 hours, (iv) 22:12 hours, (v) 22:15 hours, (vi) 22:19 hours, (vii) 22:23 hours (viii) 22:23 hours, (ix) 22:35 hours; and what notification was given to the pilots of the aircraft of two low-speed non-jet aircraft in the area between approximately 22:20 hours and 22:35 hours.

Mr. Hanley: A number of Tornado aircraft from RAF Cottesmore conducted routine low-level training in the area at about the times stated on 30 June. We have no reason to believe any of the military aircraft flew below the permitted height of 1,000 ft. No military non-jet aircraft were booked to low fly in the area at the time, and no notification was received under the civil aircraft notification procedure or by other means of any civil aircraft activity.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the limit on the number of aircraft permitted to operate simultaneously in low-flying area 17 includes any civil aircraft known to be operating in the area at less than 2,000 ft above sea level.

Mr. Hanley: The limit placed by the Ministry of Defence on the number of aircraft permitted to fly in low-flying area 17 at any one time applies only to military aircraft flying below 2,000 ft.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given by his Department to the printing of pipeline routes on military low-flying charts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The national air traffic services have set in hand a review of the civil aircraft notification procedure —CANP. The review will include consideration of whether helicopters conducting pipe and power line inspections should be included in the CANP system and of the possibility of printing pipeline routes on military low-flying charts.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what capacity the ALFENS system will have to provide warning to military pilots of pipeline and power line aerial survey activity.

Mr. Hanley: ALFENS will provide information to military pilots on civil air activity notified under the national air traffic services'—NATS—civil aircraft notification procedure—CANP. Pipe and power line aerial survey activity is excluded from CANP at present but a review is in hand by NATS to consider whether it may be included in future.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list (a) the nature of the sortie, (b) the recorded height, (c) the recorded speed and (d) the home base of the military jet aircraft that overflew the village of Clayton, south Yorkshire on 1 July between the approximate times of 22:04 hours and 22:45 hours;

(2) if he will list (a) the nature of the sortie, (b) the recorded height, (c) the recorded speed and (d) the home base of the military jet aircraft that overflew the village of Clayton, south Yorkshire on 29 June at approximately (i) 22.01 hours, (ii) 22.09 hours, (iii) 22.17 hours, (iv) 22.20 hours, (v) 22.25 hours, (vi) 22.29 hours and (vii) 22.46 hours.

Mr. Hanley: A number of aircraft from RAF Cottesmore were conducting routine low-level training sorties in the area at about the times stated on 29 June and 1 July. We have no reason to believe any of the aircraft flew below the permitted height of 1,000 feet on either of these dates.

Army Discharges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by rank and by year for the last five years the number of Army personnel who were discharged under section 69 of the Army Act 1955; and what percentage this represents for discharges by year.

Mr. Hanley: No discharges from the Army are effected under the Army Act 1955. Officers hold their commissions at the pleasure of the Sovereign, who may take action if the officer is sentenced to dismissal. Soldiers are discharged under Queen's regulations.

The table shows the number of discharges and resignations following convictions under section 69 of the Army Act 1955. The annual figures are also expressed as a percentage of the total exits from the regular Army.

Air Crash, North Sea

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 October 1992, Official Report, column 159, if he is yet able to give the hon. Member a copy of the military aircraft accident summary in respect of the air crash in the North sea on 9 July 1992.

Mr. Hanley: The board of inquiry is not expected to be completed for some time. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member as soon as a summary of the findings is available.

Toxic Pollution Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel have been monitored or treated for symptoms of combined toxic pollution syndrome following deployment during Operation Granby in 1991; and in which hospitals.

Mr. Hanley: The term "combined toxic pollution syndrome" is not recognised in the United Kingdom as a clinical condition. No such figures therefore exist.

Mine Counter-measure Vessels

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the 50 military tasks ascribed to the United Kingdom forces, and identified in his White Paper, Cm 2270, require a mine counter-measure vessel component; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Of the 50 military tasks identified in the White Paper, Cm 2270, 10 require a mine counter-measure vessel component.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the studies for a United Kingdom requirement for land attack cruise missiles for the Royal Navy are to include options for dual-capable systems.

Mr. Hanley: No. The scope of the study is restricted to conventional options.

Nuclear Testing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek assistance from the United States in the development of alternative testing technologies to those of underground nuclear testing.

Mr. Aitken: Under the United States-United Kingdom 1958 agreement, we co-operate closely with the United States on a wide range of nuclear matters, including alternative testing technologies.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the non-proliferation benefits arising from President Clinton's extension of the nuclear testing moratorium.

Mr. Aitken: President Clinton has made clear that the extension of the United States moratorium on nuclear testing is intended to promote a comprehensive test ban. Our view is that a comprehensive test ban would not in itself prevent a proliferator from producing and deploying a crude nuclear weapon and from obtaining the materials with which to do this. But associated measures for verification and inspection, if sufficiently rigorous and applicable to the states concerned, might constrain potential proliferators.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the development of a new sub-strategic nuclear warhead can be completed (a) without further nuclear tests and (b) without further improvements to alternative and non-nuclear methods of developing nuclear weapons.

Mr. Aitken: Yes.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if it is his policy not to conduct any further nuclear tests unless another state does so first;

(2) what is his policy on seeking an alternative site at which to conduct United Kingdom nuclear tests;

(3) what is his policy on conducting any further nuclear tests prior to the non-proliferation treaty extension conference in 1995.

Mr. Aitken: We have no plans to conduct nuclear tests anywhere other than at the Nevada test site. There is, of course, no possibility of our conducting further tests at Nevada during the United States moratorium on nuclear testing, which President Clinton has recently extended until October 1994, unless another state tests meanwhile. We would need to consider in the light of the circumstances at the time whether to avail ourselves of any further opportunities to conduct nuclear tests.

Desert Storm Syndrome

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what liaison has taken place with the French authorities relating to Desert Storm syndrome.

Mr. Hanley: A request for information on this alleged condition has been made through our Defence attache in Paris to the relevant French authorities. The initial response from the French authorities is that they are unaware of any cases of French service personnel who served in the Gulf exhibiting any unexplained symptoms associated with the alleged condition known as Desert Storm syndrome. Such liaison will continue.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received from (a) service personnel, (b) their families and (c) civilian general practitioners relating to Desert Storm syndrome; and if he will publish those representations he has received from civilian general practitioners relating to Desert Storm syndrome which do not contain confidential information.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has received one representation from a serving member of the United Kingdom armed forces and four from, or on behalf of, ex-service personnel who served in the Gulf conflict concerning symptoms which they believe might be connected to the alleged Desert Storm syndrome. No such representations have yet been received that have been made by families of United Kingdom service personnel or by civilian general practitioners.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his staff are currently involved in examining information relating to Desert Storm syndrome.

Mr. Hanley: Staff in a number of areas in my Department have been involved in examining information on the alleged Desert Storm syndrome. None have been specifically allocated to the task, however, and all are undertaking this work as part of their normal duties.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 July, Official Report, column 203, on what date he began liaising with the United States authorities on the question of Desert Storm syndrome.

Mr. Hanley: General liaison on medical matters is maintained continuously but the specific official contact between the Defence medical services and the US authorities on this alleged syndrome took place on 17 June 1993.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning the effect of atmospheric pollution on the health of those personnel involved in Operation Granby.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom service personnel whose respiratory function was most at risk during Operation Granby were those Royal Engineers personnel engaged in clear-up operations near the oil fires. Their respiratory function was measured before they left the United Kingdom and at two-weekly intervals during their assignment in Kuwait. No adverse affects were suffered and no change in respiratory function was seen.

Naval Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the job totals he expects for 1995 and 2000 in naval base staff at Rosyth and Devonport.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will explain the cost adjustment figure of £0·9 million for Rosyth in annex A of his consultative document on future arrangements for ship refitting in the royal dockyards.

Mr. Aitken: An adjustment was applied to the two estimates provided by Babcock Thorn Ltd. for its Rosyth proposals, which were expressed in January 1993 prices, to uprate them to March 1993 prices. This brought them in line with the estimate provided by Devonport Management Ltd., so that a like-for-like comparison of the proposals could be undertaken.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a breakdown of the £134·3 million figure of capital costs for Rosyth and £120·6 million for Devonport in annex A of his consultative document on future arrangements for ship refitting in the Royal dockyards.

Mr. Aitken: The detailed composition of the proposals put forward by the companies are commercially confidential. However, as part of the overall assessment, the MOD's specialist advisers reviewed the Bills of Quantities submitted by the companies in support of their proposals, and we are confident that the proposals are realistic.

Married Quarters

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence married quarters were empty for the last date for which figures were available; if he will break down the figure by number of bedrooms; and how many had been empty for over one year.

Mr. Hanley: As at 31 March 1993, there were 9,166 vacant married quarters. Of these, 2,153 were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, 2,493 were already allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly and 870 were being held for agreed deployment or deployments under study. A total of 1,265 of these married quarters have been vacant for over one year. Information on the number of bedrooms is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence married quarters outside secure perimeters are occupied by (a) civilians who have not served in the forces and (b) ex-service personnel; and what is his policy towards the residence in Ministry of Defence married quarters outside secure perimeters by civilians who have not served in the forces.

Mr. Hanley: It is my Department's policy that married quarters should be reserved for use by service personnel and their families. In certain circumstances, however, civilian employees of the Ministry of Defence or service-sponsored organisations may also occupy married quarters under licence. Any married quarters which are surplus to long term requirements are sold wherever possible, but my Department does try to lease any properties to local authorities and housing associations where there is no short service requirement.

Records of civilian occupants of married quarters are not kept in a form which distinguishes between properties inside or outside secure perimeters and between civilians who have previously served in the forces and those who have not.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated cost of rent forgone for the empty Ministry of Defence married quarters in Stillington street, London SW1 over the past four years; what was the cost of providing (a) caretaking and (b) security in this time; and when he expects the works to be complete.

Mr. Hanley: The refurbishment contract for the married quarters in Stillington street is expected to complete in April 1994. The estimated cost of rent foregone in the past four years is £200,000. Details of the cost of providing caretaking and security are not readily available and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the leasing of empty Ministry of Defence married quarters to housing associations; what contact his Department has had with housing associations regarding the management of Ministry of Defence estates; how many empty Ministry of Defence married quarters have been leased to housing associations in the last year; and how many empty Ministry of Defence married quarters he proposes to lease to housing associations this year.

Mr. Hanley: Empty married quarters, which are temporarily surplus to requirements but for which there is a long-term service need are, wherever possible, offered for leasing to local authorities. In most cases the local authority will take on the lease, but if it does not wish or is unable to do so, it may nominate a housing association to act in its place. My Department will willingly deal with either organisation.

Two housing associations have assisted us in developing our plans for the future management of service married quarters. No empty properties have been leased to housing associations in the last year, but over 900 properties are currently on lease to local authorities or other organisations. Leases of 87 properties to a housing association and 31 to a local authority are under negotiation. Further properties will be offered for leasing if they become available.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence married quarters are surplus to operational requirements at the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Hanley: As at 31 March 1993, 2,069 service married quarters were surplus to operational requirements. A total of 2,015 of these properties were in the process of being sold.

Irish Regiments

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many part-time members of the UDR/RIR there were as at 1 June in each year since the UDR was established; and how many recruits joined the regiment each year.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Battlefield Artillery Target Engagement System

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to order further quantities of BATES equipment for the Royal Artillery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I am pleased to announce that I have approved the placing of an order worth some £60 million with Marconi Radar and Control Systems for additional production of the battlefield artillery target engagement system, known as BATES, which will allow automated control of artillery up to corps level.

The further equipment now on order will be delivered up to 1996 and will act as a "force multiplier" for the Army's major artillery systems, MLRS and AS90, and link them to surveillance and targeting systems.

The award of this contract will safeguard 200 jobs at the Marconi sites at Hillend—Fife, Scotland—where most manufacture will take place, and Frimley in Surrey.

RAF Support Command

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which local travel-to-work area each RAF base in Support Command lies; and what the latest unemployment figures are for each such travel-to-work area.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. A list of the relevant travel-to-work areas (TTWAs), and the RAF Support Command stations they cover follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many men with wives entitled to category B retirement pensions deferred their retirement in each year since 1988; what was the average amount of their basic retirement pension without the inclusion of increments; and what was the average amount after the addition of such increments;

(2) how many married women entitled to category B retirement pensions have not received increments to those pensions although their husbands have deferred retirement and earned increments to their own retirement pensions; what are their estimated numbers in each year since 1988; and what is the average amount of additional pension received in those years by their husbands as a consequence of deferring retirement.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which, following the decision of the Social Security Commissioner in 1992 (CP/64/1988), married women entitled to a category B retirement pension will be entitled to increments to that pension when their husbands defer retirement beyond their 65th birthday.

Mr. Hague: A married woman can earn increments to her category B retirement pension when her husband defers his category A retirement pension beyond his 65th birthday provided she is not, at the same time, receiving one of a specified list of "excluding" benefits and her husband is not receiving an increase of such a benefit for her. On 12 June 1992 the Court of Appeal upheld an earlier decision of the social security commissioner that graduated retirement benefit (GRB) was not an excluded benefit. Therefore the receipt by a married woman of GRB did not prevent her earning increments. Arrangements have been made to adjust pension rates and pay arrears in affected cases. The regulations were changed on 5 August 1992 and from that date GRB is an excluding benefit.

Research Projects

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each research project his Department currently funds with (a) the institution in which it is based, (b) the funds provided by his Department, (c) the number of staff involved and (d) the start and end date.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 5 July 1993]: The table lists projects which are currently being funded or part-funded by the Department, together with the organisation conducting the work. There are currently 18 research staff in the Department.

War Pensions (Karen People)

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on behalf of the Karen people of Burma regarding the non-payment of war pensions to ex-service men who fought for Britain.

Mr. Hague: None. If the hon. Member has a particular case—or cases—in mind, perhaps he could write to me supplying the relevant details.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will define the circumstances in which a recipient of housing benefit is entitled to a special personal allowance as a result of being legally married to more than one partner, as specified in the "Guide to Housing Benefit and Community Charge Benefit", booklet RR2.

Mr. Burt: A recipient of housing benefit is entitled to a special personal allowance if he is a member of a valid polygamous marriage and has more than one of his partners sharing his household.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the annual cost of reducing the housing benefit taper from 65 per cent. to 50 per cent.

Mr. Burt: The cost is estimated to be £500 million per annum.*

Note:

* This estimate is based on data drawn from the 1989-90-91 Family Expenditure Surveys and modelled at 1993-94 prices and benefit levels.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of housing benefit receive a special personal allowance as a result of being legally married to more than one partner as specified in the "Guide to Housing Benefit and Community Charge Benefit", booklet RR2.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will explain the basis on which students are excluded from housing benefit; and what provision is made to enable students unable to find paid employment during the vacations to pay the continued costs of housing.

Mr. Burt: In general it is the educational maintenance system which is designed to provide support for students, not the social security system, and we have no plans to change this. Housing benefit is available during the summer vacation and also throughout the course to vulnerable students such as lone parents, those who are disabled, and those with dependent children. In addition non-student partners can claim on behalf of the couple if they satisfy the normal qualifying conditions. The Government have increased the full-year support available from the education grant and from student loans by nearly 40 per cent. compared with the support available from the grant alone in 1989. Students in particular financial need may seek help from the access funds.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will break down the figure for those persons in receipt of invalidity benefit in Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale Benefits Agency district by the nature of the disability.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each year since the inception of the scheme the number of people of retirement age who have continued to draw invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 25 June at column 323 for information about the numbers of invalidity benefit claimants over state pension age.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what saving in expenditure by his Department would have resulted from abolishing the earnings-related additional pension for all new invalidity benefit claims for the year 1992-93; and what savings he estimates would be made in 1994-95.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

Year	Estimated savings £ million
1992-93	75
1994-95	365

Note: Estimates are expressed in cash terms and take account of associated changes in income-related benefit expenditure.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the growth in invalidity benefit payments since 1978-79 is explained by demographic change.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested.

However, around 2 per cent. of the growth in the invalidity benefit caseload during the period May 1979 to March 1992 can be accounted for by changes in the size and structure (ie age and sex profile) of the population of Great Britain.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many males and females in receipt of invalidity benefit in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale Benefits Agency district are aged (a) under 30, (b) 31 to 44, (c) 45 to 55 and (d) over 55 years.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many males and females in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale Benefits Agency district were in receipt of invalidity benefit for each year since 1987.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not available in the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Polish Forces (Pensions)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people are currently in receipt of payments under the pensions (Polish forces) scheme.

(2) if he will list for each of the last five years (a) the number of applications made to his Department for pensions under the pensions (Polish forces) scheme and (b) the number of such applications which were successful;

(3) what is the annual cost to public funds of payments made under the pensions (Polish forces) scheme.

Mr. Hague: At 30 June 1993 there were 2,221 people in receipt of payments under the pensions (Polish forces) scheme.

The number of applications for pensions under the scheme was as follows:

Year
1988	85 applications
1989	103 applications
1990	126 applications
1991	142 applications
1992	614 applications

Information on the number of successful applications and on the annual cost of payments under the scheme is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Volunteers

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to implement the increase in the notice period for a volunteer receiving benefits from 24 hours to 48 hours.

Mr. Burt: The amending regulation to increase the notice period for unemployed volunteers to 48 hours will come into effect in the middle of August.

Benefit Abuse

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to reduce abuse of social security by people from abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Yesterday I laid before Parliament, regulations to prevent certain persons from abroad being able to claim income support under the income support urgent case rules. They will come into force on 2 August. Most persons from abroad are admitted to the country on condition that they do not become a charge on public funds. This means that they should not receive income support. At present a minority of these people abuse the conditions of their leave to remain here which these changes will prevent. I expect to save about £17 million a year in benefit on the 10,000 persons annually who abuse the present system. Asylum seekers are not affected by this change and will continue to receive benefit while their applications for asylum are being processed by the Home Office.

Mortgage Support

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to limit the availability of income support mortgage interest on very high mortgages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Yesterday I laid before Parliament regulations which will limit to £150,000 the amount of loan capital on which income support will pay interest. This change will come into force on 2 August. The regulations also provide for the limit to be reduced to £125,000 from 11 April 1994, and provide protection for existing claimants. Together with these regulations is a report by the Social Security Advisory Committee, CM(2272). These new arrangements are based on our view that people with mortgages, regardless of their loan commitment, should make arrangements to provide for themselves in times of difficulty. The limits will be kept under review in the future.

Social Fund

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish his annual report on the social fund and the social fund commissioner's annual report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Today my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State laid before Parliament his annual report for 1992-93 (Cm. 2274). Copies have been placed in the Library. The report records that, for the first time, the annual total gross expenditure on all social fund payments exceeded £400 million—a doubling of expenditure since the first full year of the scheme. This includes nearly 1·8 million non-repayable grants and interest-free loans worth more than £314 million; and maternity, funeral and cold weather payments worth £87 million.

Now that the fund has been operating for a number of years, we are reaching a position where we can begin to assess with some confidence how it is working. As the annual report says, we have taken note of the research by York university's social policy research unit (SPRU), along with a number of other reports and our own close monitoring of the fund. We have seen no evidence so far to alter our belief that the basic principles of the discretionary scheme are right. Indeed, there is much in the latest report to confirm that the fund is working very effectively as intended in support of the wider pattern of social security benefits. Against this backdrop and in the light of the SPRU and Social Security Advisory Committee reports, we will be continuing to evaluate the effectiveness of the fund and to introduce operational improvements as required.

For the current year, we have increased the net discretionary budget by £5 million. This has enabled us to raise the gross budget by £44 million since April last year. Overall, since the discretionary fund began, the gross budget has increased by some 70 per cent. This substantial growth in funding demonstrates our continuing commitment in this traditionally difficult area of social security provision.

The social fund commissioner's annual report has also been published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

Putney Royal Hospital

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what correspondence the Minister for Disabled People has had about removing the inscription, "Royal Hospital for Incurables", from the facade of Putney Royal hospital; what action he has taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: While I have seen copies of some correspondence about this matter, I have not been involved directly since this is primarily a matter between the hospital and the planning department of the London borough of Wandsworth.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will instruct the Child Support Agency to collect data on the numbers of parents who use the agency on a voluntary as well as a compulsory basis.

Mr. Burt: I am informed by Mrs. Ros Hepplewhite, the agency's chief executive, that the agency already collects data on the number of applications received from parents who are not in receipt of benefit and who choose whether they wish to use the agency's services.

As the agency has, however, been operational for only three months reliable figures are not yet available for publication.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases, in the last 12 months the Child Support Agency has been involved with the use of DNA genetic fingerprinting methods to establish the paternity of a child during the pursuance of a maintenance claim; and if he will separately distinguish England and Wales.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mrs. R. Hepplewhite to Mr. Gareth Wardell, dated 12 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of cases in the last 12 months in which the Agency has been involved with the use of DNA genetic fingerprinting in order to establish paternity.

The Agency is not directly involved in the process of DNA testing but may in disputed cases apply to the courts for a declaration of paternity. In such cases the Agency supplies conventional evidence in support of its application and the question of DNA testing will not normally arise except at the suggestion of the court and with the agreement of all parties. Where the Agency meets the cost of those fees it will seek recovery from any court costs awarded in its favour.

Figures for the period 1 April 1992-31 March 1993 are not yet available, but in the year ending March 1992, DNA testing was an issue in less than 1 per cent. of the 1,000 cases in which the Department made application to the courts for a declaration of paternity. I am afraid that I do not have a breakdown of figures between England and Wales.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the maximum number of assessments which the Child Support Agency can carry out on an individual in any year for which a fee of £44 is charged;

(2) what has been the total income of the Child Support Agency from assessment fees collected since its establishment.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Mrs. Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mrs. R. Hepplewhite to Mr. Gareth Wardell, dated 12 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the income collected by the Agency in assessment fees and the number of maintenance assessments provided for the sum of £44.

The Agency has to date collected a total of £13,000 in fees, but figures are not yet available as to fees charged for assessment and fees charged for collection.

The annual assessment fee is payable on the date the first maintenance application is made, and at yearly intervals thereafter. There is no restriction placed on the number of assessments carried out in any given year and no additional sum will be levied over the annual fee.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Care Benefits

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disability living allowance mobility component claimants have successfully claimed care components after their 66th birthday.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 12 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many disability living allowance mobility component claimants have successfully claimed care components after their 66th birthday.

Up to 28 February 1993 the total number of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) mobility component recipients that have successfully claimed the care component on or after their 66th birthday is 7,420. A more up to date figure is not available as numbers are only collated quarterly and information about the last quarter is not yet to hand.

The figure provided excludes any DLA mobility component recipient over the age of 66 who may have received the care component subsequent to either a review of the original decision or upon appeal. Statistics for these two types of occurrence are not available.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Disability

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will include, when notifying claimants of their entitlement to disability living allowance and attendance allowance, information about the entitlement to extras such as income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Ms Ann Coffey dated 12 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will include, when notifying claimants of their entitlement to DLA and AA, information about the entitlement to extras such as income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

When a customer is advised of their entitlement to Disability Living Allowance (DLA) they also receive a copy of form DLA 95. This form advises them of their possible title to other benefits. Amongst other benefits outlined in the DLA 95 are Income Support, Housing Benefit and Community Charge Benefit.

Similarly, a customer receiving an award notification for Attendance Allowance (AA) will also receive form DS 668. This provides equivalent information to that contained in the DLA 95.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications he has received for ex gratia payments resulting from delays in (a) disability living allowance, (b) attendance allowance and (c) mobility allowance; how many claims were successful; and what total ex gratia payments have been made for each benefit.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 12 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many applications he has received for ex gratia payments resulting from delays in (a) Disability Living Allowance (DLA), (b) Attendance Allowance (AA) and (c) Mobility Allowance (Moba); how many claims were successful; and what total ex gratia payments have been made for each benefit.

The information requested is not recorded in the format required. I am therefore not able to give you a breakdown by benefit. I can confirm, however, that for the period 9 July 1992 to 7 July 1993 out of 480 applications for ex gratia payments received, in respect of all three benefits, 208 were subsequently withdrawn, 96 were refused and 176 were successful. The total amount paid comes to some £9,200.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Maintenance Allowance

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what plans he has to change the process of maintenance allowance assessments to ensure that mothers who are out of work and wishing to receive an assessment do not have to wait longer than mothers who are in work.

Mr. Burt [pursuant to his reply, 6 July 1993, column 125]: The following information was incorrect:

The Child Support Agency is introducing the new child support maintenance arrangements from scratch and it would have been unrealistic to take on cases over a four-year period.

The Correct information is as follows:

The Child Support Agency is introducing the new child support maintenance arrangements from scratch and it would have been unrealistic to take on all cases immediately. Take-on will therefore be phased over a four-year period.

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Tranquillisers

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received about the time limit for bringing actions applicable to those seeking to make claims arising from the ingestion of benzodiazepine tranquillisers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A number of representations I have received on the subject have touched on the question of time limits, among other issues. Time limits are, of course, a matter for the court.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what recent representations he has received on the progress of the benzodiazepine tranquillisers claims;

(2) what recent representations he has received on the decisions of the Legal Aid Board in relation to the availability of legal aid in pursuit of claims arising from the use of benzodiazepine tranquillisers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have received 70 some representations in the last three months, encompassing various aspects of this litigation.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he intends to meet the Legal Aid Advisory Committee on the question of (a) class actions and (b) claims arising out of the use of benzodiazepine tranquillisers.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I are always interested to hear the views of the Legal Aid Advisory Committee on matters which it wished to draw to our attention. The Legal Aid Advisory Committee, however, has no role in respect of the handling of individual cases or groups of cases, which is entirely a matter for the Legal Aid Board.

Multiple Claims

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether the Lord Chancellor has referred to the Supreme Court rules committee the question of procedures for the handling of multiple claims.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has not referred to the Supreme Court rules committee the question of procedures for the handling of multiple claims. However, the Supreme Court procedure committee has considered this issue and in May 1991 published a "Guide for Use in Group Actions". Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Legal Aid

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give a breakdown of the legal aid bill under the different categories of work categories for which information is kept including a separate total for divorce and matrimonial expenditure; and if he will give comparable figures for (a) 10 and (b) 15 years ago.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Net expenditure in each main category of work was as follows:

	1977-78 £ million	1982-83 £ million	1992-93 £ million
All Civil	24	68	463
Criminal Higher	22	52	220
Criminal Magistrates'	20	55	197
Green Form	6	31	119
ABWOR[1]	n/a	8	22
Duty Solicitor Schemes[2]	n/a	n/a	72
TOTAL EXPENDITURE	72	214	1,093

It is not possible to give separate net expenditure figures for civil non-matrimonial and civil matrimonial. It is, however, possible to give separate figures in respect of gross expenditure, which are as follows:

	1977-78 £ million	1982-83 £ million	1992-93 £ million
Non-matrimonial	10	38	353
Matrimonial	24	50	183

(All figures have been rounded to nearest £ million)

[1] Assistance by way of representation. The scheme was introduced in April 1980.

[2] The duty solicitor magistrates courts scheme and police station scheme were introduced in June 1984 and January 1986 respectively.

TRANSPORT

Relief Roads (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to consult the public in respect of the proposed Greater Manchester western and northern relief road, section M62 to M66.

Mr. Key: In September.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current position in respect of the loan by the European investment bank for the construction of the Jubilee line.

Mr. Norris: I understand that arrangements for the European investment bank to fund the initial payment by the O and Y company towards its contribution to the cost of the Jubilee line extension are in place, ready to operate once my right hon. Friend can approve the funding agreement and give the go-ahead to construction.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) of 7 July, Official Report, columns 158-59, on the east London river crossing, what are the implications of his announcement for the line order, the compulsory purchase orders and the exchange land certificate in relation to the proposed crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The extent to which the existing line order will need to be varied or revoked will depend on the new proposals which we shall bring forward in due course. We shall not take any action to implement the present compulsory purchase orders, which will cease to be valid in November 1994. The exchange land certificate will accordingly become redundant.

Road Accidents

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the rate for personal injury accidents per million vehicle kilometres for England and Wales, for each year from 1985 to 1992 for (a) motorways, (b) dual carriageways, (c) trunk roads and (d) minor roads.

Mr. Key: Personal injury accident rates for motorways and trunk roads in England and Wales are shown in the table. Accident rates for dual carriageways in England and Wales are not available. Figures for minor roads are shown for 1989 to 1991, but are not readily available for England and Wales for earlier years. Figures for trunk and minor roads are not yet available for 1992.

M6

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list his estimates for traffic levels on each link of the M6 between junctions four and 11 for the years up until 2011, with and without the proposed Birmingham northern relief road.

Mr. Key: The environmental statement for the toll road proposals published in June indicates that in 1996 and 2011 predicted flows—vehicles per day—on M6 could be about:

	Junction 10A-11	Junction 8-9	Junction 6-7	East of Junction 4
1996
with BNRR	73,900	132,500	116,000	81,100

2011

without BNRR	145,500	180,700	167,600	161,800

A copy of the environmental statement will be placed in the House Library.

Passengers Charter

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when it is proposed that the provisions of the passengers charter should apply to services operated in conjunction with passenger transport authorities.

Mr. Freeman: It is for each passenger transport authority to consider whether and when to introduce a passengers charter for the rail services they specify and which are provided by British Rail on contract. I understand that the West Midlands PTA has authorised its PTE to introduce such a charter on 9 August, and that Merseyside PTE is well advanced with its preparation of a charter.

Seat Belts

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has of the number of lives saved every year by the use of rear seat belts in cars.

Mr. Key: An estimated 140 lives were saved in 1992 by the use of rear seat belts.

Road Safety

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made by his Department in technological methods of advancing road safety with particular reference to devices to prevent vehicles driving too close to each other; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Department's research programme aims to assess the safety related aspects of systems emerging from the European vehicle industry-led research programme, Prometheus, including autonomous intelligent cruise control (AICC). This system is intended to enhance driver convenience and comfort by automatically adjusting vehicle speed and following distance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hoax Fire Calls

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), of 19 June 1992, Official Report, columns 701-2, if he will publish a table showing the hoax fire calls for 1991 and 1992 on a similar basis to that given for 1987 to 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information for 1991 is shown in the following table; 1992 information is not yet available.

Drug Seizures

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the figures for drug seizures and offenders in the Birmingham metropolitan area for each month of 1993 up to the latest date available.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not yet available. Information on seizures of controlled drugs in the United Kingdom and offenders dealt with during 1992 will be included in the annual Home Office statistical bulletin to be published in the autumn, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Crime Statistics

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage change (a) in the reported incidence in each category of crime and (b) in total for the Metropolitan police area between 1 April 1992 and 31 March 1993.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not yet available.

Private Security Firms

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of residents' associations and similar bodies which have hired private security firms to protect their property in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Charles Wardell: Information of this kind is not held centrally.

Directorate of Telecommunications

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will set out his objectives in the privatising of DTELS.

Mr. Howard: The key objectives are:

1. To maximise sale proceeds consistent with preserving the best prospects for effective competition in the market for telecommunications support services for the emergency services.

2. To obtain reassurance that the purchaser should have the capacity to meet transferred liabilities and obligations.

Criminal Justice

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet received a copy of the first annual summary of activities from the Criminal Justice Consultative Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I received an advance copy of the first summary of activities for the Criminal Justice Consultative Council from Lord Justice Farquharson on 25 June. It outlines the many important issues considered by the council during 1992, following its inception in January of that year, and includes a list of topics which council intends to include in its forthcoming agenda. The report also provides a brief summary of the activities of the area criminal justice liaison committees in the six months since they first met.

The summary is being published today.

Asylum and Immigration Appeals

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 will be brought into force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Some provisions came into effect when the Bill received Royal Assent on 1 July. My right hon. and learned Friend has made a commencement order bringing all the remaining provisions of the Act into force on 26 July.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is available to the Government on persons residing or working illegally in the United Kingdom; and from what sources the information is drawn.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information about illegal entrants, overstayers and those working in breach of their immigration conditions may be available from records held by the immigration and nationality department. Those responsible for the enforcement of the immigration law also receive information from the police, for other Government Departments and agencies, and from members of the public.

City of London (Road Closures)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the wider London impact of the road closures effected by the City of London corporation on security grounds.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Traffic congestion in Lower Thames street has extended beyond normal peak times. There has been no significant impact elsewhere.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notices under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 have been issued (a) in total since 1987 and (b) in each quarter since January; how much money has accrued as a result, how many such notices have been contested by airlines or shipping companies; and with what results.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As at 31 May 1993, 51,279 notices had been issued to carriers since the Act came into force, and total receipts stood at £25·06 million. The number of notices issued in each quarter since January 1992 was as follows:

Quarter ending	Numbers of notices
31 March 1992	1,954
30 June 1992	1,605
30 September 1992	2,355
31 December 1992	2,197
31 March 1993	1,608

A total of £7.91 million was received in payments during this period. Representations to local immigration service inspectors were made by carriers in 3,304 cases, and further representations to headquarters were made in 612 cases. A total of 1,296 charges were waived locally and 116 by headquarters during the same period.

Animal Experiments

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times Home Office animals inspectors have visited the university of Glasgow since the Animals (Science Procedures) Act 1986 was passed; and what action, if any, arose from such inspections.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Between 1 January 1989 and 12 July 1993, 294 visits were made to the university of Glasgow. Each visit is likely to have involved visits to several individual university departments. Prior to 1989, departmental visits were counted separately: 232 such visits were made in the period 1 January 1987 to 31 December 1988.

It is not the practice to give information about the findings and resultant actions, if any, arising from routine visits of inspection.

Humana Charity

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will request the Charity Commission to undertake an investigation into the Humana Charity, No. 297489, in respect (a) of its donations to the International Emergency Centre and (b) of its links with the Danish TVIND-DAPP organisation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Charity Commissioners are already investigating the activities of Humana in the light of matters identified during routine monitoring. The investigation will include any links which Humana may have with other charitable or non-charitable organisations.

John Matthews

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it took to return clothes and possessions to John Matthews after he left court on Tuesday 6 July; how long John Matthews was in custody; and if he will estimate the total cost of holding and transporting John Matthews.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At Paddington Green police station on 6 July Mr. Matthews refused to give his written authority to hand his property to his chosen nominee. The police are currently awaiting Mr. Matthews' authority to do so.

Mr. Matthews was in custody from 27 April 1993 until his court appearance on 6 July. The estimated cost of holding and transporting him is £37,116.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many overseas visitors were initially refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom in 1987 and in each subsequent calendar year to date; and what were their nationalities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The total numbers of non-EC passengers by nationality who were refused leave to enter, and removed from, the United Kingdom in 1987-91 are published in table 1 of the annual Home Office Command Papers "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom"—Cm. 415, 726, 1124, 1571 and 2063 for each of the five years respectively—copies of which are held in the Library. Corresponding information for 1992 is given in table A. Information on EC nationals refused and removed in 1987-92 is given in table B. It is not possible from the information available centrally to ascertain how many of those refused leave to enter, and removed from, the United Kingdom had sought entry as visitors.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action on malnutrition and infant mortality in Iraq he has taken since the meeting in the Foreign Office between the Under-Secretary responsible for the middle east and the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 22 June.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the meeting referred to, £1 million has been transferred through the United Nations escrow account to the World Food Programme (WFP) for purchasing part of the crop in the north of Iraq to help feed the Kurds. We have also agreed to finance a programme of water and sanitation work in schools in the south to be carried out by CARE. However, responsibility for the condition of the people in Iraq rests with Saddam Hussein. If the Iraqi Government would accept the conditions set out under United Nations Security Council resolutions 706 and 712, it could sell its oil and provide $1·6 billion worth of humanitarian aid for its people.

Aid (Africa)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase aid to (i) Angola, (ii) Mozambique and (iii) Eritrea and Ethiopia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have committed £0·8 million of humanitarian aid to Angola this year and plan to increase this to £2 million if the security situation permits safe access for aid organisations. Three thousand tons of bilateral food aid has also been allocated. We will consider providing further assistance depending on the situation.

We spent over £31 million in Mozambique in 1992-93. We also expect to spend significant sums this year but with a higher proportion of rehabilitation and longer term development activities than last year when the greater need was for drought relief.

We plan to commit £10 million to bilateral projects in Ethiopia over the next two years, and £1 million to Eritrea.

We shall continue to provide major contributions to these countries through our share of the development programmes of the multilateral agencies. In addition the EC Development Council on 25 May, agreed a resolution calling for the Community to implement an urgent rehabilitation programme of at least 100 mecu, drawn mainly from the European development fund, for certain African countries including Angola, Mozambique, Ethiopia and Eritrea.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for further humanitarian relief to Sarajevo to address the severe shortage and possible disappearance of water supplies to the city.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees continues to make every effort to secure the passage of humanitarian supplies into Sarajevo, including fuel, in order to operate the pumps which are essential for the local water supply system.

We are playing a major part in both the road-based relief convoys into Sarajevo and the airlift. But the continuing hostilities are inhibiting the passage of humanitarian supplies and we urge all of the parties to the conflict to allow these supplies to pass without hindrance or delay.

Colombia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the activities funded from United Kingdom expenditure in Colombia and the amounts spent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Current technical co-operation commitments in Colombia funded by Overseas Development Administration are as follows:

- a project in support of biological control of the pests of coffee plants—£0·833 million.
- advice and training support in the post-harvest handling of fruit—£0·842 million.
- completion of a programme of training in mines safety —£0·332 million.
- support to teacher training in English language education —£0·456 million
- sponsorship of post-basic training in the United Kingdom —around £0·5 million per annum.

Technical co-operation spending in Colombia amounted to £1·149 million in 1990-91 and £1·292 million in 1991-92.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the destination, dates and purposes of each overseas visit undertaken by the Minister for Overseas Development since April 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The information requested is contained in the tables.

PRIME MINISTER

Trade Facilitation Groups

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what trade facilitation groups have been set up in Peru, Colombia and Mexico in the wake of his visit; and what advantages have accrued to Britain as a result of agreements and understandings arrived at during his visit.

The Prime Minister: On my visit to Colombia last year I agreed with President Gaviria that we should establish a trade facilitation group and that the United Kingdom and Colombia should begin negotiations for an investment promotion and protection agreement and a double taxation agreement. The trade facilitation group has now reported back on obstacles to bilateral trade and how to overcome them and has identified many opportunities for British businesses. We hope to sign an IPPA and a DTA soon. I did not visit Peru or Mexico.

Departmental Bills

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the steps taken by his Government to ensure that Government Departments pay outstanding bills within 30 days of their receipt; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: "Government Accounting" requires all Departments to pay outstanding bills in accordance with the terms of the contract or generally understood terms of business, or within 30 days of the receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later, if no terms are specified.

Departments are responsible for monitoring their payment performance. The results for 1991-92 were published in written parliamentary answers on 13 July 1992. The results for 1992-93 will be published shortly and Departments will, in future, also be required to publish details of their payment performance in departmental reports.

Child Migrant Scheme

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will place in the Library all Government records relating to the child migrant scheme;

(2) what discussions he has had with representatives of the Australian, New Zealand and Canadian Governments concerning the welfare of United Kingdom child migrants; what is the Government's policy towards the compensation of those who have suffered as a result of this scheme; if he will take steps to increase Government grant assistance to the Child Migrant Trust; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It would not be right to place personal record files in the Library. Other records are considered for deposit in the Public Record Office in the usual way.

I have not raised the subject of child migrants with the Heads of Government in Australia, New Zealand or Canada, nor have they raised the subject with me. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health is contacting the Australian authorities.

I know there have been allegations of physical and sexual abuse of a number of child migrants some years ago in Australia, but any such allegations will be a matter for the Australian authorities. I am not aware of any allegations involving the British authorities or claims against them for compensation.

The Child Migrant Trust applied for Government funds and has received a section 64 grant of £25,000 from the Department of Health for the current year.

Any future application will be considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

PRIME MINISTER

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell), of 5 July, Official Report, column 11, what charges are made to organisations or persons holding non-official events at 10 Downing street in respect of overheads or indirect costs associated with such functions.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 July 1993]: The practice under this and previous Administrations is that the organisers are responsible for all catering and staff costs, as well as other miscellaneous direct costs. No charges are levied for overheads or indirect costs.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham North-West (Mr. Banks) on 5 July, Official Report, column 11, whether all political parties represented in the House can apply to use 10 Downing Street for fund raising and other social purposes.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 July 1993]: As under previous Administrations, the use of 10 Downing street for non-official or party functions is a matter for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 11, which Ministers have hosted non-official or party receptions or functions in 10 Downing street since 1979.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1993]: I have hosted all such events since November 1990.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, columns 11-12, if he will give details of the occasions upon which No. 10 Downing street was used for functions for which tickets were sold for the benefit of political parties since 1979.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1993]: As I said in the reply to which the hon. Member refers, that is not a matter for the Government.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 12, on attendance by Mr. Asil Nadir at functions at No. 10 Downing street, which of the functions attended were Government functions; and who issued the invitation in each such case.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1993]: The only Government function was the dinner for the President of Turkey. For all the functions, invitations would have been issued in the name of the Prime Minister.

Foreign Heads of State (Visits)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the official visits made by heads of foreign states to Northern Ireland in each of the last three years, the engagements carried out by them during each such visit, and indicating which engagements were private, public and official.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1993]: There have been no official visits made to Northern Ireland by heads of foreign states in the last three years.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Conservation Areas

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will publish the consultation paper on the protection of conservation areas.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I issued this on 8 July together with a draft planning policy guidance note on historic buildings and conservation areas. Further details were given in my reply of 9 July to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris), Official Report, column 287.

Arts Council

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on how many occasions grants have been made by the Arts Council under its (a) bursaries to writers scheme and (b) writers in residence scheme during the last five years to applicants who were neither resident in England nor had any previous connection with England.

Mr. Brooke: Under the Arts Council of Great Britain's "Bursaries to writers scheme", bursaries are offered only to writers currently resident in England. Separate schemes are run by both the Welsh and Scottish arts councils. Grants to five writers from abroad have been made by the Arts Council of Great Britain under its "writers in residence scheme" attached to particular areas of the country. Grants under other residency schemes have, to date, been made only to British writers.

North West Council for Sport and Recreation

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement explaining the categories and criteria by which the North West Council for Sport and Recreation assesses the needs of rural communities in terms of minimum levels of sports facility provisions.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 12 July 1993]: This issue has been examined in a specific study commissioned by the North West Council for Sport and Recreation, published in June 1991, entitled "Sport for Rural Communities". The study offers guidelines for sports facility provision based upon the size of rural communities.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give a breakdown by category or rural community of the grants made by the North West Council for Sport and Recreation in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The North West Council for Sport and Recreation does not make grants, but advises the Sports Council's North West regional office and others on the allocation of their grant aid. Grants made by the Sports Council's north-west region in rural areas in 1992-93 were as follows:

Capital grants applicant	Project	Grant £
John Schofield tennis centre	Construction of two indoor court tennis centres at Clitheroe	50,000
Nantwich & Border Counties sailing club	Extension to clubhouse to provide changing facilities	10,000
Cheshire NW schoolboys scramble club	Purchase of land and the provision of toilet/wash-house facilities at Peacock Hay	7,500
Chester mountaineering club	Renovation and upgrading of a mountain hut	10,000
Revenue Grants
Community council of Lancashire	Rural areas sports development officer to assist in implementing the Rural Areas Topic Study	30,000
Cheshire community council	Appointment of sports development officer for rural areas in Cheshire to assist in implementing the Rural Areas Topic Study	30,000
Ribble Valley borough council	Appointment of a sports development officer to promote all aspects of sport in the borough	10,382

Mesopotamian Archaeological Objects

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 463, what information he has on the total holdings of Mesopotamian archaeological objects in British public museums.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 12 July 1993]: Information on the total holdings of Mesopotamian archaeological objects in British public museums is not held centrally. If the hon. Member requires such information, the director of the British Museum would be happy to advise him on how best to proceed to collect it.

EDUCATION

Portuguese

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what representations he has received from the director of Canning house on the study of Portuguese in British schools; and what was his response;

(2) whether he will arrange for at least one examination board to offer GCSE in Portuguese.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received several representations about the decision of the University of London Examinations and Assessment Council to discontinue its GCSE examinations in Portuguese after 1994, including one from the director general of Canning house. Following discussions with the Department, the council has recently decided to continue offering the syllabus beyond that date.

Special Schools

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to stop the practice of including special schools in performance league tables.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. Special schools, like all schools, deserve credit for the level of performance they achieve and should not therefore be excluded from the comparative tables. They will be listed in a separate section of the tables.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he intends to include special schools in the proposed national truancy league tables.

Mr. Robin Squire: Yes. Regular school attendance is important for all pupils. Special school pupils will benefit from the provision being made for them only if they attend regularly.

Teacher Training

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements he has made for the introduction of a preliminary scheme of school-centred initial teacher training this year.

Mr. Forth: In March this year my right hon. Friend invited proposals from consortia of schools to design, organise and make provision for courses of initial teacher training for up to 250 graduates. The courses will lead to qualified teacher status for successful students. On 31 May he announced those consortia which have been approved to offer courses starting in September. A further announcement on courses starting in January 1994 will be made shortly. Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the higher and further education vote—class X, vote 2. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £500,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide in respect of each school which has held a ballot on grant-maintained status (a) the percentages of parents voting and (b) the percentages voting for and against.

Mr. Robin Squire: The details requested, correct as of 11 July, are available in the Library.

Teacher Training

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what experience of working with young children will be necessary to enter the proposed one-year primary teacher training courses;

(2) what will be the minimum qualifications needed to take part in the one-year teacher training courses for primary schools; and what age groups will be recruited;

(3) what percentage of the future intake of teacher training will consist of persons taking the one-year primary school courses.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend issued a draft circular on 9 June which included proposals for specialist one-year courses of initial training for early years teaching, for mature people with the academic qualifications for higher education together with significant experience of working with children. Views on the organisation and content of such courses were invited. The consultation period will continue until the end of July and criteria for all courses of initial training for primary teachers will be finalised in the autumn. It will then be for those wishing to offer one-year courses to make detailed proposals and satisfy the Secretary of State that they meet the necessary requirements.

Class Sizes

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 7 July, Official Report, c. 137, if he will obtain for his departmental library copies of the research on the impact of class size in educational attainment in Tennessee in the United States of America, details of which have been given to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have arranged for a copy of the report on the STAR project to be made available in the DFE information bureau and library. I have noted the findings of this research but conclude that it adds little to an understanding of the effects of class size on educational attainment in schools in England.

Student Loans

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many student loans have been granted in each year since they were introduced; what is the total cash figure in each case; and what is the figure repayable in each case.

Mr. Boswell: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I will ask the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the total change in public expenditure that would result from public expenditure per person in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland being at the same level as in England for (a) 1979, (b) 1992-93 and (c) the 1994-95 and 1995-96 published plans.

Mr. Portillo: Information on general Government expenditure per head in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is published annually in the "Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement". The latest information, for 1987-88 to 1991-92, was published in Cm. 2219. Equivalent information is not available for 1979 or for years beyond 1991-92.

Table E1 in Cm. 2219 shows identifiable general Government expenditure per person in 1991-92 of £2,963 in England. Equivalent figures for the rest of the United Kingdom were £3,506 in Scotland; £3,268 in Wales; and £4,191 in Northern Ireland. On this basis, total identifiable general Government expenditure was some £5½ billion higher in the rest of the United Kingdom taken together than in England.

Those figures go wider than expenditure for which the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are directly responsible. They include, for example, expenditure on social security. They exclude, however, almost a fifth of total general Government expenditure, which cannot be identified from official records as having been incurred on behalf of the population of a particular territorial area.

Departmental Budgets

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Government Departments have introduced monthly budgets with analysis of variations of performance against targets.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not collected centrally. The 1986 multi-departmental review of budgeting recommended that "budget should include output and performance indicators, and there should be regular evaluation of what has been achieved compared with the objectives which have been set".

Most Departments made good progress in meeting this principle. The subsequent next steps initiative, which requires the responsible Minister to set performance targets for each of his agencies normally covering financial performance, efficiency—including unit costs—and quality of service, has led to significant further improvements: typically, the 90 agencies analyse variations of performance against targets on a monthly basis.

End-year Flexibility Schemes

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the entitlements for 1993-94 resulting from the carry-forward of the capital and running costs underspends allowed under the end-year flexibility schemes.

Mr. Portillo: A list of entitlements totalling £358 million for capital expenditure and £48 million for running costs is shown in the table.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, individual cash limits and running costs limits will be increased when entitlement is taken up.

The total increase in cash limits resulting from the take-up of end-year flexibility will be charged to the Reserve and will, therefore, not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Income Tax

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the direct revenue yield in a full year at 1992-93 and 1993-94 levels of income from imposition of limits for all allowances and reliefs within the tax system to (a) £10,000, (b) £15,000 and (c) £20,000 and the additional revenue yield from restricting all allowances including personal allowances and reliefs within these limits, to relief at (i) 20p and (ii) 25p, giving in each case the numbers of people affected.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 9 July 1993]: Estimates of the direct revenue yield in a full year at 1992-93 and 1993-94 levels of income from imposition of the specified limits for allowances and reliefs within the tax system for these years are as follows. These are based on information compiled from a number of statistical surveys and are subject to more than the usual margin of uncertainty, and incorporate the conventional assumption of no changes in mortgage interest rates in 1993-94.

Limit for total allowance and reliefs £	1992-93 yield £ million	1993-94 yield £ million
10,000	690	650
15,000	380	380
20,000	270	280

After restriction of the allowances and reliefs within these limits to 25 and 20 per cent., the estimated further yield would be as follows:

Limit for total allowances and reliefs £	Full year yield at 1992-93 income levels from restricting allowances and reliefs within limits		Full year yield at 1993-94 income levels from restricting allowances and reliefs within limits
	25 per cent. restriction £ million	20 per cent. restriction £ million	25 per cent. restriction £ million	20 per cent. restriction £ million
10,000	2,100	8,600	2,200	8,400
15,000	2,100	8,700	2,200	8,500
20,000	2,200	8,800	2,300	8,600

The number of people with total allowance and reliefs in excess of these limits:

Limit £	1992–93 thousands	1993-94 thousands
10,000	610	420
15,000	85	85
20,000	45	45

The estimates of revenue yield do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of the changes.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield in 1993-94 of restricting all personal allowances and reliefs to the basic rate.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The estimated full year yield at 1993-94 income levels from restricting all personal allowances and reliefs to the basic rate of tax is £2·4 billion. This incorporates the conventional assumption of no changes in mortgage interest rates during 1993-94.

The estimate of revenue yield does not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of the changes.

Discretionary Share Option Schemes

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people have received discretionary share option schemes for the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93; and if he will provide an estimate for 1993-94;

(2) how many employees (a) were granted and (b) exercised discretionary share options; and what was their value in each year since 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answers 12 and 13 July 1993]: Information on the number of employees exercising options under discretionary share option schemes approved by the Inland Revenue was not collected prior to 1991-92. Data are not yet available for 1992-93 and 1993-94. Estimates for earlier years are as follows:

	Number of employees to whom options were granted during year (Thousands)	Number of employees who exercised options during year (Thousands)	Initial value of shares over which options granted during year (£ million	Market value of shares over which options exercised during year (£ million)
1990-91	65	n.a.	1,450	700
1991-92	80	20	1,350	1,100

Company Taxation

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for 1993-94 (a) corporation tax repaid and (b) reliefs for capital allowances.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 July 1993]: It is estimated that total corporation tax repayments in 1993-94 will be £3·7 billion and reliefs for capital allowances will cost £14 billion.

Trading Losses

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the yield in 1992-93 and 1993-94 of restricting the carry-back of trading losses to (a) two years and (b) one year.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 July 1993]: Restricting the carry back of trading losses to two years in 1992-93 might have increased net corporation tax receipts by £300 million. A restriction of the carry back to one year might have increased receipts by a further £100 million. Comparable estimates for 1993-94 are not available.

SCOTLAND

Surgical Treatment

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will develop and publish measurements of the outcome, successful or otherwise, of surgical and medical treatments other than mortalities within the national health service.

Mr. Stewart: Yes. A working group to develop clinical outcome measures involving managers and clinicians was established in late spring 1992. Its first discussion document was published in December 1992 proposing a range of outcome measures. On 7 July 1993 a second discussion document—"Clinical Outcome Measures"—was issued presenting pilot outcome measures at the level of health board of treatment. These include measures other than mortality such as:

1. Proportion of patients discharged home within two months of emergency admission from home for fractured neck of femur;
2. One year re-operation rate after transurethral prostatectomy.
3. 28-day emergency readmission rate after discharge from medical specialities.

These measures are now included in service contracts to ensure arrangements are made for collection of good quality data which are consistent and comparable.

The use of outcome measures and the validity of any comparison depends on standard data and on careful interpretation. The working group is currently addressing these issues in consultation with managers and clinicians.

Anaesthetists

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by each health board the current number of vacancies for anaesthetists; and what action is being taken to fill these posts.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available centrally. As at 30 September 1992, however, there were three established posts for consultant anaesthetists which had been vacant for six months or more. Two or these, in Argyll and Clyde and Western Isles health boards, were filled earlier this year. A further post in Argyll and Clyde health board has been advertised but no appointment has been made.

Health Care International

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures are being taken to ensure that Health Care International does not compete with the national health service in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The HCI hospital at Clydebank will not compete with the NHS for patients. The hospital is to focus on the treatment of overseas patients; NHS hospitals will continue to treat United Kingdom patients unless a health board determines that it would be in the best clinical interests for a patient to receive treatment outwith an NHS facility.

Furthermore, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), the then Secretary of State for Scotland, took steps, at the time of the HCI application to build the hospital, to safeguard the position of the NHS. The application was subject to a rigorous consultative process under the health service Acts. Acceptance by HCI of the consequential stringent conditions designed to protect the NHS was a prerequisite of the authorisation given by my right hon. and learned Friend to the building and operation of the hospital. These conditions relate to the recruitment of medical and nursing staff, the pay and conditions of service of these staff and the supply of blood and blood products. The relevant NHS interests and medical institutions are currently discussing these various aspects with HCI to ensure that the hospital fully meets the specified conditions and that NHS interests are effectively safeguarded.

NHS Reform

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer by the Secretary of State for Health to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) of 23 November 1992, Official Report, columns 497-98, whether he will provide a similar table setting out his Department's figures, for the costs of NHS reform, for each year from 1989-90 to 1992-93.

Mr. Stewart: Details of the cost of NHS reforms for each of the years from 1989-90 to 1992-93 are shown in the table.

Not Proven Verdicts

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to publish the conclusions of the review of the not proven verdict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 12 July 1993]: We expect to publish a consultation paper on the functions of the jury in criminal trials and the not proven verdict towards the end of the year.

WALES

County Council Elections

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the percentage turnout in each county in each county council election in Wales since 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on county council election turnout is published in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys "Electoral Statistics" series and in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Local Government Elections, England and Wales 1989" copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Midwives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many midwives were employed (a) full time and (b) part time in each region in each year since 1988;

(2) how many midwifery staff are employed in each region (a) full time and (b) part time (i) on an agency basis and (ii) on bank contracts;

(3) how many practising midwives there are in each grade in each region, including those in senior nurse/senior midwive grades, senior nurse grades and education and clinical grades, excluding agency midwives; how many are employed (a) full time and (b) part time; and how many student midwives there are in each region.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Detailed breakdowns of nursing and midwifery staff employed by health authorities and NHS trusts into occupational groups such as those requested are not considered reliable. However, information on the numbers—whole time and part time—of nursing and midwifery staff for the years 1988 to 1992 is listed as follows. In addition, a table showing the figures split by grade—excluding student and pupil nurses and staff nursery staff—is shown for 1992. Figures include those agency and bank staff who are paid on standard pay scales but exclude those who are not paid on standard pay scales. Separate information on these is not available. The information is shown for Wales as a whole as there are no regional health authorities in Wales.

Churches and Chapels

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many churches and chapels were located in each local authority area in the counties of Gwynedd and Clwyd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of sickness absence among employees expressed as a percentage of total working time for (a) full-time manual employees, (b) full-time non-manual employees, (c) part-time employees and (d) all employees in Wales for each year since 1987.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not available.

NHS Management

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent by the National Health Service in Wales on external management consultation in each year since 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many tutors are employed in a full-time capacity in Wales to teach the Welsh language to adults; and what plans his Department has to increase the number of full-time tutors of Welsh for adults.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

The Further Education Funding Council for Wales, in partnership with the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales, has established a joint working group to review the provision of Welsh language education for adults. The joint review group will prepare recommendations to the funding councils on (a) the supporting activity needed to ensure the maintenance and development of Welsh language education for adults; (b) the way in which this activity might be funded; and (c) how the funding of Welsh language education for adults might be channelled in future.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many courses are currently offered in the Welsh language in (a) Gwynedd technical college, (b) Llandrillo technical college and (c) the North East Wales institute of higher education; and if he will name the courses and the number of students currently on each one.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Empty Properties

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local authority-owned houses were untenanted in each local authority area at the latest available date; and what information he has on the length of time they had been vacant.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the table.

Neurology

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the medical schools within Wales indicating which schools teach neurology as part of their courses.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The university of Wales college of medicine is the only medical school in Wales. Neurology is part of the range of subjects in the college's undergraduate medical curriculum.

HEALTH

District Nurses

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district nurses were employed in each regional health authority in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table.

Notes:
1. "na" means figure is not available, — = zero.
2. All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.
3. Totals may not add due to rounding.
4. Figures exclude senior nurses 1-5. Includes senior nurses 6-8 in district nursing, district nurses, district nurse practical work teachers, holders of dual post (DN/midwife) and bank district nurses. From 1989 included clinical grade G to I in district nursing.
5. The figures exclude the total number of nurses working in GP practice in England and Wales which increased from 1,515 at 1 October 1982 to 8,780 whole-time equivalent at 1 October 1991.
N.B. For details on appropriate qualifications for practice nurses read para 52.23 (Page 211) national health services, general medical services statement of fees and allowances and payable to general medical practitioners in England and Wales from 1 April 1990.

Nottingham Clinic

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received from hon. Members relating to the Nottingham clinic.

Mr. Sackville: Since the district auditor wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 23 March 1993 under section 20(3) of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, there have been nine such representations, including four parliamentary questions from the hon. Member for Nottingham, East himself.

Emergency Admissions

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of emergency admissions to (a) the Doncaster Royal and Montagu trust, (b) Doncaster healthcare trust and (c) the Trent region in 1990-91.

Mr. Sackville: The information from the hospital episodes statistics is not yet available. The collection of the management information on non-elective admissions in the general and acute specialities given in the reply I gave the hon. Member on 29 June at column 418 did not begin until April 1991.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of emergency admissions of elderly patients to (a) the Doncaster and Montagu trust, (b) Doncaster healthcare trust and (c) the Trent region for the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: In 1992-93 purchasers in the Trent region purchased 129,000 non-elective admissions of persons aged 65 and over. The comparable figure for 1991-92 was 131,000; the information for 1990-91 is not available. In 1992-93 the Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagu trust provided 6,400 non-elective admissions for those aged 65 and over. The corresponding figure for the Doncaster healthcare trust was 1,600. Similar information for 1990-91 and 1991-92 is not available.

Primary Health Care Teams

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will bring forward proposals for the provision of primary health care teams focused around general practitioners' practices in which the co-ordinating role is assumed by a named person and to provide that the co-ordinator receives training in local information and co-ordination skills and is committed to ensuring that all residents have access to the health services they need; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We welcome the report of the task force chaired by the chief nursing officer—"New World New Opportunities"—which highlights the issues and ways forward for primary health care teams. Within those teams there has been a large increase in numbers of practice staff in recent years—an increase of 74 per cent. between 1989 and 1992—and their organisation should suit local health needs. The task force's report is being widely circulated within the health service and we hope that it serves as a stimulus to action for purchasers and providers of services in the light of their assessment of local circumstances.

Smoking

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the advice her Department has provided to insurance companies on the health effects of smoking, as proposed in "The Health of the Nation" White Paper; and what response she has received from those companies.

Mr. Sackville: Officials of the Department of Health have met with representatives of the Association of British Insurers (ABI) and the Department of Trade and Industry to discuss smoking-related issues and to ensure that the ABI is aware of the full range of scientific and medical evidence of the dangers of smoking. There have been no meetings with individual companies.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress the interdepartmental task force announced in "The Health of the Nation" White Paper has made in developing and implementing the proposed comprehensive strategy to reduce smoking prevalence and tobacco consumption; whether this strategy will be published; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The interdepartmental task force on smoking has been established to develop and implement the strategy to reduce smoking. An implementation programme to take forward the strategy will be published in due course.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures, other than an increase in the price in real terms of cigarettes, she will implement in order to achieve the Government's target of a 40 per cent. reduction in consumption of cigarettes by the year 2000 as set out in "The Health of the Nation" White Paper; and if she will quantify, in terms of a percentage reduction in consumption, the contribution that each may be expected to make to achieving the target.

Mr. Sackville: "The Health of the Nation" White Paper sets out a comprehensive strategy to reduce smoking prevalence including action on price, health education and ensuring effective controls on advertising. It also emphasises the key role of health authorities in leading moves to improve the health of local people including action to reduce smoking.

It is difficult to quantify the comparative effect of the different influences on smoking habits with any certainty.

Crime Prevention Audit

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further action she proposes to take in the light of the crime prevention audit received by her Department in 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 26 May at columns 579-80.

Mental Illness

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend the availability of advocates to patients wishing to make complaints about mental health services.

Mr. Bowis: We have advised health authorities and service providers of the need to support the work of independent advocacy services in the mental illness key area handbook. The independent national health service complaints review announced last month will be considering the procedures for the making and handling of complaints by NHS patients and their families in the United Kingdom, and the costs and benefits of alternatives to current procedures.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mentally ill patients were treated (a) in the community and (b) as in-patients, for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the number of patients treated in the community is not available centrally.

The table gives the number of admissions to national health service hospitals in England. For 1985-86 the figures are from the mental health inquiry and for 1985-88 to 1989-90 from the hospital episode statistics system.

The figures include people admitted more than once in a year.

Mental illness
All admissions to NHS hospitals (England)

	Number
1985	199,995
1986	197,251
1987-88	203,700
1988-89	188,900
1989-90	194,500

Note: Figures up to 1986 are admissions to mental illness hospitals and units during the calendar year and include transfers between hospitals. From 1987-88, figures are estimates of admissions to all NHS hospitals during the financial year of patients under the mental illness specialties. These exclude transfer between hospitals.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to amend the code of practice under the Mental Health Act 1983 with regard to the discharge of patients into the community; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We have revised chapter 27 of the code of practice on aftercare arrangements to draw attention to the care programme approach set out in departmental circulars. In the case of patients who have been detained, the application of the care programme approach should meet health and local authorities obligations under section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983 to provide aftercare. The revised code was laid before Parliament on 19 May and we intend to publish it in the autumn.

Child Surveillance

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of general practitioners submitted child surveillance claim forms in the last year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested. Ninety-three per cent. of general practitioners in England were registered to provide child health surveillance as at October 1992.

Health Complaints

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints were referred in each year by each local authority to independent persons under the provisions of (a) the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 and (b) the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Foster Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time spent in fostered care or social service care prior to adoption in the age groups (a) all ages, (b) under one, (c) over one and under five, (d) over five and under 10, (e) over 10 and under 15 and (f) 16 and over in the year before the Children Act 1989 came into force.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 17 June at column 688.

Fluoridation

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which water companies have stopped fluoridation since privatisation;

(2) how many new water fluoridation schemes have been introduced since the Water Fluoridation Act 1985.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions for fluoride supplements have been issued since January; and what are the figures for the comparable period in 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is shown in the table.

Fluoride supplement prescriptions
England

Period	Number of prescription items Thousands
January 1992 to March 1992	2·1
January 1993 to March 1993	34·8

Note: Since 1 January 1993 general dental practitioners have been able to prescribe fluoride supplements for the long-term care of their patients under the continuing care arrangements introduced by the new dental contract in October 1990.

Unemployed People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what encouragement has been given by her Department to general practitioners to address the mental, dietary and lifestyle pressures upon people who are out of work; and if she will make available pump-priming moneys to assist general practitioners to develop programmes to assist unemployed people.

Mr. Sackville: We have not introduced any initiatives specific to unemployed people. However, some 90 per cent. of general practitioners are now taking part in health promotion programmes for the prevention of coronary heart disease and stroke, as part of new arrangements under the GP contract introduced on 1 July this year. Practices will identify the groups within their local population who they consider may be at higher risk, and will offer them help in adopting a more healthy lifestyle.

Opportunity 2000

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the effects of Opportunity 2000 within the national health service to date.

Mr. Sackville: The target completion date for achieving the goals set out in Opportunity 2000 in the national health service is 1994.

Progress so far shows the regions and national health service trusts to be actively pursuing policies to promote women's participation in the national health service. Many of the points for action listed in the implementation guide are in operation; others are being actively considered. As a result there has been an increase in the profile and contribution of women, in all areas covered by the goals, in the service.

A copy of the implementation guide will be placed in the Library.

Children in Need

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have been defined as being in need under the Children Act 1989 in each year since the Act was passed; and how many have had services provided for them.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally. Information is collected on the total number of children receiving certain specific services; children in need will be included in these totals, but are not identified separately.

Residential Homes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received regarding the inspection of residential and nursing homes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We regularly receive correspondence about the registration and inspection of residential care and nursing homes. A large number of helpful comments were received earlier this year in response to our consultation document "Inspecting Social Services", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Uranium Particulates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been commissioned or undertaken by her Department into the nephrotoxicity of inhalation of uranium particulates.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Hepatitis A Vaccine

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what current difficulties are being experienced in the production and or distribution of the hepatitis A vaccine; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has been assured by the manufacturers that there are no current difficulties in production or distribution of this vaccine, known as "Havrix".

Paediatric Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the number of consultant paediatricians and paediatric units in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table. The number of paediatric units is not available centrally.

Consultant paediatricians—England at 30 September each year

Year	Paediatric specialties Number of consultants
1987	676
1988	695
1989	800
1990	821
1991	856

Child Guidance Clinics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many child guidance clinics there were in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Adults at Risk

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to extend legal definitions of adults at risk to include vulnerable elderly people.

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities already have a duty to assess the needs of elderly people who appear to them to require community care services.

Maternity Claim Forms

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of general practitioners submitted a maternity claim form in the last year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested. Some 96 per cent. of general practitioners in England were on their family health services authority's obstetric list as at 1 October 1992.

Small Pharmacies

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria must be satisfied in order for a dispensing chemist to qualify for the essential small pharmacies scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney: A pharmacy must dispense between 6,000 and 17,200 prescriptions per year and be more than 2 km from the next nearest pharmacy.

General Practices

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the general practices she has visited in the last year which are not fund-holding.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have met many non-fund-holding as well as fund-holding general practitioners on my various visits to national health service regions.

Mr. Jeremiah Kearney

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has yet received a report from the social services inspectorate on the death of Jeremiah Kearney.

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today received the social services inspectorate's report on the death, on 24 April, of Jeremiah Kearney. I am arranging for a copy to be sent to the director of social services for Haringey.

The report shows that Mr. Kearney had a severe alcohol problem, and was at severe health risk. He was a tenant of the London and Quadrant housing association, and during the three months prior to his death was in contact with the Irish community care centre in Stroud Green, which has delegated authority from Haringey social services department to undertake community care assessments. I am satisfied with the report and that Mr. Kearney was well informed of the options for residential and day care available to him, but had chosen not to pursue them. There is nothing in the report which can be seen as a criticism of the services provided by Haringey social services department or of the actions of its staff, or of the Government's community care policies.

Sight Tests

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service sight tests have been undertaken since 1987-88 in each district health authority area in the northern region.

Dr. Mawhinney: We do not collect data on national health service sight tests carried out at district health authority level. The number of NHS sight tests paid for by each family health services authority (FHSA) in the northern region is shown in the table.

NHS sight tests: Northern Region FHSAs

[1]From 1 April 1989, NHS sight tests were restricted to certain groups in the population. The sight tests paid for in 1989-90 include some conducted prior to 1 April 1989 when sight tests were universally available. The remainder paid for in 1989-90 do not represent a full year under the new system, because of the delay in payments. The figure for 1989-90 is not, therefore, directly comparable with that for 1990-91.

Child Migrant Scheme

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year after 1963 for which appropriate records were kept the number of children and young persons leaving the United Kingdom under the child migrant scheme, indicating to which countries they were sent and setting out the agencies responsible for their care and control to their migration.

Mr. Bowis: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dementia

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the Government's community care programme in relation to the care of people with dementia.

Mr. Bowis: Our community care arrangements offer local authorities new opportunities to tailor services to the needs of users, inciuding those with dementia.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on provision of care for dementia sufferers in west Cumbria.

Mr. Bowis: The Government's policy for England, including west Cumbria, is to enable elderly mentally ill people to live in their own homes or in a homely setting, with appropriate support for them and their carers for as long as desirable and practicable.

District health authorities are responsible for securing a comprehensive range of psychiatric services to meet the needs of their residents, including quality services for elderly mentally ill people requiring long-term care.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has issued to ensure adequate quality of care in residential homes for people with dementia.

Mr. Bowis: The Department's social services inspectorate publications "Guidance on Standards for Residential Homes for Elderly People" and "Homes are for Living in", which are both available in the Library, give standards of care for all elderly people, including those with dementia.

Alzheimer's Disease

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom presently suffer from dementia; and how many of them have Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Bowis: The proportion of people suffering from dementia in England is shown in the table. It is estimated that around two thirds of these suffer from Alzheimer's disease.

Mental Disorder	Prevalence per cent.
Dementia
aged over 65	5
aged over 80	20

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what ratio of staff to patients her Department recommends in respect of residential homes and day centres for people suffering with Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Bowis: The Department has not issued guidance on staffing ratios. The levels of staffing needed in any particular establishment will depend on the particular needs of the individuals who are being cared for.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 6 July 1993]: All executive non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) sponsored by the Department of Health are responsible to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. No Department of Health executive public bodies are subject to surcharge. The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, the Medical Practices Committee and the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority are subject to investigation by the parliamentary commissioner. Information on audit arrangements is set out in "Public Bodies 1992", and NDPBs are not subject to the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities. All Department of Health executive NDPBs except the Medical Practices Committee include performance indicators in their management statements. All public bodies are being encouraged to follow the principles of the citizens charter. Members of non-departmental public bodies are expected to declare any potential conflict of interest and this is made clear in letters of appointment. Copies of "Public Bodies 1992" are available in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Consultation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation exercises his Department is currently conducting; and what is the timetable in each case.

Mr. Gummer: The Department of the Environment is currently undertaking 50 consultation exercises, the details of which have been placed in the Library.

Government Car Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what negotiations he has had with private organisations in respect of running the government car service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: There have been no negotiations with private organisations about running the Government car service. This option was recently investigated by Coopers and Lybrand and it concluded that it would be more expensive than the current GCS service.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he published his Department's interim guidance for local authorities on energy efficiency in council housing; and to whom the document has been distributed.

Mr. Baldry: The guidance was published on 29 June 1993. Copies have been sent to all local housing authorities in England, and to other interested organisations.

Planning Consent

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to end the exemption from planning consents for newly privatised utilities and local authorities.

Mr. Curry: We have no plans to withdraw the permitted development rights granted to statutory undertakers or to local authorities by the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988. The need for newly privatised utilities to have permitted development rights is considered on a case-by-case basis in the context of the relevant privatisation legislation.

Acid Rain

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has in regard to the proposals to be put to the Economic Commission for Europe in Geneva on new targets to reduce acid rain in Europe.

Mr. Yeo: The proposal for the second sulphur protocol under the 1979 convention on long-range transboundary air pollution is that the gap between current sulphur depositions and substantial protection should be closed by 60 per cent. Different levels of reductions will apply to different nations according to the relative impact of their emissions.

The next meeting in August of the official-level working group will consider further the target date and the ranges of figures calculated for each party. The Government are at present considering its position on the reduction figures indicated for the United Kingdom.

Urban Programme

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of schemes originally funded by the urban programme has been continued by local authority mainstream funding when time expired; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally. It is for local authorities to decide which schemes to support from their own resources.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have recently taken place (a) at the Environment Council and (b) informally between EC Environment Ministers over the plan by France to block the further import of waste for disposal from Germany; and what are the implications for (i) EC policy and (ii) United Kingdom policy of the French Government's position on waste exports between EC member states.

Mr. Yeo: The impact of exports of surplus recyclable materials on member states was discussed at the Environment Council on 29 June. We share French concerns about the impact of such surpluses on our domestic recycling infrastructure, but I am not convinced that banning imports is the right way to solve the problem. However, the Government are urgently considering what action they can take to ensure that recycling capacity in the United Kingdom is sustained. EC policy on shipments of waste between member states is set out in the waste shipments regulation (259/93/EEC), which will apply from 6 May 1994.

Water

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance is issued to water companies as to the exact maximum level of concentration of cyptosporidium oocyst permitted in the public water supply.

Mr. Yeo: As explained in my answer pursuant to the hon. Member's question of 6 July Official Report, column 79, the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 require that for water supplies to be wholesome they must not contain any organism at a concentration which is detrimental to public health. With those requirements in mind, water companies have been advised to maintain a close liaison with local authorities, and with health authorities which will provide advice taking into account local circumstances.

Housing Association Rents

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has undertaken any independent analysis on the impact of grant rate reductions on the future affordability of housing association rents.

Mr. Baldry: We have sought detailed advice from the Housing Corporation on the possible impact of grant rate reductions on rents and on associations' ability to raise private finance. We have also received copies of work undertaken by the National Federation of Housing Associations on this issue and received many representations from housing associations, lenders and other interested bodies.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the average housing association rents on new assured lettings in 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Sir George Young [holding answer 13 July 1993]: The average housing association rents on new assured lettings in the years in question were as follows:

Average rent £/week (to nearest 50p)

[1]1989-90	25·50
1990-91	30·00
1991-92	35·50
[2]1992-93	41·00

Leasehold Reform

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of leaseholders who will be able to purchase their freehold after the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Bill receives Royal Assent.

Sir George Young: We believe that there are three quarters of a million long leaseholders who will potentially benefit from part 1 of the Bill. We do not know enough about the numbers and composition of blocks of flats and their tenants to estimate how many individual buildings will be eligible. Whether qualifying tenants in such buildings choose to participate in collective purchase of the freehold is of course a matter for them. Any qualifying leaseholders who meet the residence criteria will be able to purchase a renewed lease, whether or not they also participate in purchasing the freehold.

Housing (Private Sector Funding)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the Government have taken to generate private sector investment in social housing building programmes since 1988.

Mr. Baldry: By introducing a new financial regime for housing associations in the Housing Act 1988, the Government have enabled associations to raise private finance to augment the contribution made to new schemes from public funds. Housing associations have to date drawn down more than £2·5 billion of private finance in support of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's estimate of the proportion of private sector loan funding which will be required to maintain housing association building programmes in each of the years 1993-94 and 1995-96.

Mr. Baldry: We estimate that the total private sector funding attracted by housing association schemes sponsored by the Housing Corporation in 1993-94 will be £645 million. This represents 33 per cent. of the anticipated total cost of mixed-funded housing for sale and rent to be provided through the Housing Corporation.

The Government have announced their objective of increasing the proportion of private sector funding in new housing association schemes by reducing grant rates to 55 per cent in 1995-96. Final decisions on grant rates will only be taken when Ministers have considered all the relevant evidence, including the availability of private finance to maintain the development programme.

Housing Association Grant

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what analysis his Department has undertaken of the likely impact of the Government's proposal to reduce housing association grant to 55 per cent. by 1995 on new housing association rents in the west midlands;

(2) what estimate has been made of the percentage of new housing association tenants in the west midlands who would be totally reliant on housing benefit if housing association grant rates are reduced to 55 per cent. by 1995;

(3) what proposals the Government have to maintain the flow of private sector funding into social housing schemes in the west midlands in connection with the proposed reduction of housing association grant rates by 1995.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have announced their objective of reducing the average housing association grant rate in England from the current year's level of 67 per cent. to 60 per cent. in 1994-95 and 55 per cent. in 1995-96.

Final decisions will be taken when Ministers have considered all the relevant evidence, including the likely impact on rents, on housing benefit and the availability of private finance. No decisions about grant rates for 1995-96 will be taken until much closer to the time.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will consider using information on the level of unemployment and the level of long-term unemployment as part of the standard spending assessments for 1994-95.

Mr. Baldry: The review of standard spending assessments for 1994-95 will include the consideration of a range of indicators in SSAs including where appropriate alternative measures of unemployment.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that the review of standard spending assessments is fundamental and considers all alterations including reducing disparities between authorities within the same category.

Mr. Baldry: We are undertaking a review of standard spending assessments to incorporate information from the 1991 census into the underlying SSA formulae. We are also taking this opportunity to consider more widely the range of social factors used within SSAs and the weight placed upon them. We also wish to reconsider the area cost adjustment, measures of density and sparsity and the inclusion of day visitors.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangement he has agreed for the review of standard spending assessments.

Mr. Baldry: We have invited each local authority in England to make representations to us on the review of standard spending assessments and to provide evidence to support any changes. My officials are meeting regularly with representatives of the local authority associations to discuss technical aspects of the review.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what timetable he has drawn up for the review of standard spending assessments, including when the consultation period will be completed.

Mr. Baldry: Our review of standard spending assessments will be completed in time for any changes to be incorporated in SSAs for 1994-95. We shall consult in the usual way on our proposals for the revenue support grant settlement for 1994-95, including SSAs, in the late autumn.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation he has had to date at member and officer level with local authority associations about the review of standard spending assessments; and what further consultation he expects to have in the future.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend will meet representatives of the local authority associations at the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance later this month and again in October. The results of the SSA review will be discussed at the October meeting.

My officials have regular meetings with officers from the local authority associations in the SSA subgroup, which is the main forum for discussion of SSA data and methodology issues. The SSA subgroup has met six times so far this year and there will be at least three more meetings before the subgroup reports to the settlement working group in September.

We shall consult in the usual way on our proposals for the revenue support grant settlement for 1994-95, including SSAs, in the late autumn.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to change from using the 1981 to the 1991 census data in calculating standard spending assessments.

Mr. Baldry: It is our policy to use the most up-to-date information available within SSAs. Population estimates based on the 1991 census were incorporated into SSAs for 1993-94 and it is intended to make use of the remaining information now available from the 1991 census for 1994-95 SSAs.

Local Authorities' Expenditure

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest estimate of the extra capital expenditure which will be undertaken by local authorities as a result of the temporary relaxation of the restrictions on the use of capital receipts in comparison with the original estimates given at the time of the autumn statement.

Mr. Baldry: No new estimate of local authorities' extra capital expenditure arising from the temporary relaxation in the capital receipts rules has been made since that published in the autumn statement.

Financial Management Review

Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the financial management review of the Audit Commission to be published.

Mr. Curry: I have placed a copy of the report of the financial management of the Audit Commission in the Library of the House.

Asylum (Housing)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue guidance to local authorities about implementing the housing provisions in the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993, and on the consequences of the Court of Appeal's judgment in the case of R. v. Secretary of State for the Environment ex parte London borough of Tower Hamlets.

Sir George Young: I am today sending to all housing authorities and other interested bodies a consultation paper about proposed changes to the homelessness code of guidance to local authorities. The paper contains a draft supplementary code explaining the new duties of local authorities in relation to asylum seekers who apply for accommodation under the homelessness legislation. In the light of the Court of Appeal's clarification of the law in the Tower Hamlets case, the paper also contains a draft revision to the homelessness code of guidance about the response that authorities should make to applications under the homelessness legislation from persons who have entered the country illegally.

I believe that these proposed changes to the homelessness code of guidance will assist authorities in managing their housing stock, by reducing pressure from applicants whose right to remain in the country has yet to be resolved, or who should not be in the country at all. I intend to issue revised guidance on these matters in the light of the responses to the consultation paper, which are requested by 13 September. I am placing a copy of the paper in the Library.

Temporary Development

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to alter the permitted development rights for temporary uses granted by part 4 of schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988.

Mr. Baldry: My Department issued a consultation paper in August last year inviting views on the scope of the permitted development rights for the temporary uses of land. I have given very careful consideration to the many hundreds of responses which my Department received both for and against introducing new or tighter controls.

I propose to remove the existing permitted development rights for the temporary display of advertisements in order to end the current duplication of controls over such development. I have concluded that there is insufficient justification to remove existing permitted development rights for other temporary uses. We shall continue to keep these arrangements under review.

A paper setting out the Government's full response to the consultation exercise has been placed in the Library.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses have been declared unfit as a result of water disconnection in Nottingham during the last 12 months and in each of the previous five years.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 8 July 1993]: Data on the reasons for houses being declared unfit have been collected since 1990, in which time no houses have been declared unfit in Nottingham on grounds of inadequate water supply.

Interpretation of fitness standards is a matter for local authorities, and ultimately for the courts, but in my view disconnection of a water supply for non-payment of charges does not mean that the property is statutorily unfit.

Rainforests and Cocoa

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from the Brazilian delegation of the Inter-Parliamentary Union about the Atlantic rainforest and tariffs on cocoa.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 13 July 1993]: My Department had no direct representations from the Brazilian delegation of the Inter-Parliamentary Union. Following a telephone call from the hon. Member, officials from the Overseas Development Administration attempted to set up a meeting to discuss the Atlantic rainforest, but this did not prove possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Comfrey

Mr. Hagin: To ask the Minister of agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information she has concerning the number of people in the United Kingdom (a) who currently use and (b) who have suffered adverse health reactions as a result of using comfrey in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not collected, but the independent expert committees that advise Ministers on food safety issues concluded that there was sufficient evidence linking the intake of comfrey to toxic effects in humans to warrant action to reduce intakes of comfrey. A particular concern was the very high levels of pyrrolizidine alkaloids generally present when comfrey is presented in concentrated form.

Imported Animals

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which animals have been designated under the Destructive Imported Animals Act 1932 and in subsequent regulations made under that Act.

Mr. Soames: The Destructive Imported Animals Act 1932 (as amended) places controls in Great Britain on the importation and keeping of musk rats. Orders made under this Act extend these controls to grey squirrels, non-indigenous rabbits, coypu and mink.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which animals designated under the Destructive Imported Animals Act 1932 may now be imported from other member states of the EC.

Mr. Soames: All of the animals to which the Destructive Imported Animals Act 1932 applies may be imported from member states, subject to the controls imposed by the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974 (as amended). However, these animals cannot be kept in Great Britain without an appropriate licence from Agriculture Departments. Licences may only be issued to permit the keeping of these animals for exhibition, scientific research or other exceptional purposes, except in the case of mink which may also be kept for fur.

Veterinary Products

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many EC countries implemented EC directive 81/851 on the harmonising of veterinary products by (a) automatically renewing the licences of current medicines and (b) by a fresh process of relicensing; what considerations led him to opt for the latter approach for the United Kingdom; what are the costs of relicensing a medicine through the Veterinary Medicines Directorate; and how many existing products have not been submitted for relicensing.

Mr. Soames: All member states have been required to apply the full provisions of Directive 81/851 to long standing pharmaceutical veterinary medicinal products, and this approach has been adopted within the United Kingdom. While details of implementation in other countries are a matter for those countries and the EC Commission, the directive does not allow for automatic renewal of licences in respect of old products and we are not aware of any member state which has done this.

No fee is charged for the review of an old product in the United Kingdom. The costs to the company are variable, and will depend on what data are necessary to demonstrate that a product meets current standards of safety, quality and efficacy. As at 25 June 1993, 1,727 such products (63 per cent. of those called for review) have had their licences withdrawn or allowed to expire in the United Kingdom. This is comparable to my understanding of the position in France (68 per cent.) and Spain (56 per cent.).

Folic Acid

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 571, he will list (a) those foodstuffs in which folic acid occurs in significant quantities, and (b) those breads and breakfast cereals which are fortified with folic acid, noting separately those products which have been fortified since his Department commended the report of the Chief Medical Officer on folic acid and the prevention of neural tube defects indicating the contribution to intake of folic acid made by a standard portion of each.

Mr. Soames: A list of those foodstuffs in which folic acid occurs in significant quantities and the contribution to intake of folic acid made by a standard portion of each is set out in the table. Details are not held centrally of breads and breakfast cereals fortified with folic acid, nor of those fortified products which have been introduced since my Department commended to the food industry the recommendations of the expert advisory group in its report to the Chief Medical Officer on "Folic Acid and the Prevention of Neural Tube Defects". I am aware, however, that many breakfast cereals and a number of breads are fortified.

Rare Farming Breeds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action her Department has taken in respect of protecting the United Kingdom's rare farming breeds by artificial insemination; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The regulations governing artificial insemination in cattle and pigs are intended to ensure that semen is collected only from healthy animals and apply equally to all breeds, including rare farming breeds. In EC negotiations on rules for intra-Community trade in bovine semen the Department has taken account of the interests of the rearers of rare and minority breeds. For the foreseeable future, national rules will continue to apply to the use of stored semen which does not meet Community standards.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will make a statement about the number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy which have occurred in Great Britain since the information contained in the progress report which was recently placed in the Library.

Mr. Soames: Up until 13 July 1993, 100,012 cases of BSE have been confirmed in Great Britain, 7,051 of these since the preparation of the progress report on 30 April 1993. The cumulative total of cases has no particular scientific significance and has no relevance to the epidemiology of the disease. What is more important is that the number of suspect cases now being reported is less than at the same time last year, and that the number of cases occurring in younger cattle has dropped sharply. These changes indicate that the ruminant feed ban is bringing the epidemic under control in the way predicted by our scientific experts and that with time the number of cases being confirmed will decline to a negligible level.

Sea Fish Conservation Act

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is her latest estimate of the cost of implementing the Sea Fish Conservation Act 1992, and how much has been spent so far.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 2 February at column 133, and, more generally, to the announcement that I made in the course of the debate on the fishing vessels (decommissioning) scheme on 7 July at column 413.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Vacancies

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many vacancies notified in each of the last six months in the north-west were (a) part-time, (b) full-time, (c) permanent and (d) temporary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. J. Turner to Mr. Peter Pike, dated 14 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State about vacancies notified in the North West.

The total number of vacancies notified to Jobcentres is collated monthly. Detailed full time, part time and temporary vacancy information is available on a quarterly basis.

The table attached shows the information you requested for the past three quarters.

I this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Breakdown of vacancies notified to Jobcentres in the North West Region

Quarter	Number of part-time vacancies notified[1]	Number of full-time vacancies notified	Total number of vacancies notified
5 October 1992 to 8 January 1993	29,493	40,292	69,785
11 January 1993 to 2 April 1993	27,980	39,486	67,466
5 April 1993 to 2 July 1993	32,522	51,583	84,105

[1] Part-time—Under 30 hours work per week.

Quarter	Number of permanent vacancies notified	Number of temporary vacancies notified[1]	Total number of vacancies notified
5 October 1992 to 8 January 1993	51,670	18,115	69,785
11 January 1993 to 2 April 1993	53,792	13,674	67,466
5 April 1993 to 2 July 1993	64,203	19,902	84,105

[1] Temporary—Work lasting six months or less.

Media Employees

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in the media sector in the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available estimates from the Labour Force Survey of employment in the media industries in the United Kingdom are as follows:

	Numbers
Printing and publishing of newspapers	89,000
Printing and publishing of periodicals	29,000
Radio and TV services, theatres etc.	97,000

These figures are based on the estimates for Great Britain in winter (December to February) 1992-93 and those for Northern Ireland in spring (March to May) 1992.

Employer Liability Insurance

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of employers not providing proper employer liability insurance have been recorded in each of the last five years; and in how many cases directors have been prosecuted and convicted of an offence.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employers Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969 (ELCI) is enforced by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). Available information is set out in the following table:

Outcome of HSE inspections under the ELCI for 1988 to 1992.

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
A: Prosecutions
Number of prosecutions for non-compliance	6	7	17	8	5

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
B. Other cases of non-compliance
Number of cases in which non-compliance was identified but which did not lead to a prosecution	35	24	9	16	12

Information on whether any directors were prosecuted and convicted under ELCI (and the outcome of all prosecutions) is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the results of recent research into the distribution of invalidity beneficiaries by severity of their disablement on the 10 point OPCS scale or other measures of severity of disablement.

Mr. Scott: The programme of research is not yet complete.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish renewed guidance to local authorities about their duties in respect of making housing benefit payments.

Mr. Burt: The Department issues guidance to local authorities on all aspects of housing benefit, in the form of a guidance manual and circulars. The manual has recently been fully updated and was issued to all authorities earlier this month. It covers the requirement for local authorities to make interim payments of rent allowance where, through no fault of the applicant, a claim cannot be settled within 14 days.

The Department is committed to issuing strengthened guidance to local authorities shortly to remind them of this duty.

Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will announce the arrangements for claiming industrial injuries disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will shortly lay before Parliament regulations to prescribe chronic bronchitis and emphysema as industrial diseases in relation to underground coal miners. The regulations will come into effect from 13 September 1993. The terms of the prescription, which are as recommended by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council were announced by my right hon. Friend in his reply to the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) on 29 March at column 77. He has also announced that there will be a two-stage take-on in order to ensure that claims can be handled as quickly as possible and that unacceptable delays do not arise.

Claims from seriously ill and older miners will be dealt with first; their claims will be accepted from 13 September. Claims from all others will be accepted from 1 March 1994. No-one will lose benefit as a result of the staged take-on. Payments will be backdated to 13 September 1993 if people claim at the appropriate time and satisfy the usual conditions for the award of benefit.

For the purpose of claiming benefit in stage 1, the regulations will define "seriously ill" miners and ex-miners as those who are in receipt of an award of the higher rate care component of disability living allowance or higher rate attendance allowance. Miners and ex-miners who are awarded one of these benefits between 13 September 1993 and 28 February 1994 will also be able to submit a claim in stage 1. Claims will also be taken in stage 1 from other miners and ex-miners who are age 70 or over on 13 September 1993. In stage 2, claims will be taken from all other miners from 1 March 1994.

The details about claiming will be widely publicised by the Benefits Agency before 13 September.

Social Fund

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many loans have been granted under the social fund for rent in advance by each local social fund office in each year since the establishment of the fund.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 13 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many loans have been granted under the Social Fund for rent in advance by each local Social Fund office in each year since the establishment of the Social Fund.

The Social Fund was introduced in April 1988 and you seek information in respect of each local office. The information is only in this form for the period 1990-91. From April 1991 when the Benefits Agency was created the information is only available by District Office because local offices were grouped into Districts. This information has been placed in the Library under the heading "BENEFITS AGENCY Loans for Rent in Advance from the Social fund".

Information was not kept by local office for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90. I can, however, tell you that the numbers of loans awarded nationally for rent in advance for those periods were 9,098 and 12,833 respectively.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Severe Hardship Allowance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for social Security how many applications were (a) made and (b) approved for severe hardship allowance in the last 12 months for which figures are available in (a) England, (b) the north-west, (c) Lancashire and (d) Burnley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Peter Pike, dated 13 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many applications were (a) made and (b) approved for severe hardship allowance in the last 12 months for which figures are available in (a) England, (b) the North West, (c) Lancashire and (d) Burnely; and if he will make a statement.

The complete range of information you requested is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. This is because statistics relate to Benefits Agency Districts and are not routinely collected to show the number of claims and awards for severe hardship by county or town.

I have however, shown below information relating to England, the Benefits Agency's Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale District and the North Western Social Security Region (which existed prior to the inception of the Benefits Agency in April 1991).

Severe Hardship applications, year ending 30 June 1993

	Awards	Refusals	Total
Burnley District	569	119	688
North West	15,549	3,159	18,708
England	78,265	15,400	93,665

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

United States

13. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which occasions since 1979 Her Majesty's Government have expressed disagreement, or reserve, on any foreign policy initiative of the United States on matters in which both Governments were concerned.

Mr. Hurd: The hon. Member will not expect me to list details of all our private discussions with successive United States Administrations over the past 14 years.

World Trade

14. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that the EC is able to take advantage of opportunities for growth in world trade.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have played a leading role in focusing the Community's attention on the need to improve competitiveness in order to promote economic recovery and secure a greater share of world trade. We will be contributing fully to the Commission's White Paper on this subject. At the same time, we are giving our full support to the Commission's efforts to negotiate a balanced and comprehensive outcome to the Uruguay round which will benefit the United Kingdom, the EC and the world economy generally.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

15. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment as to the possibility of the continued existence of the state of Bosnia-Herzegovina within its present boundaries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Heads of Government at the Group of Seven economic summit in Tokyo on 7 to 9 July reaffirmed their commitment to the territorial integrity of Bosnia-Herzegovina and to a negotiated settlement based on the principles of the London conference.

British Industry (Promotion)

17. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are taken by the diplomatic service positively to promote British industry overseas.

Mr. Goodlad: Through the overseas trade services, which includes the DTI regional offices as well as our commercial sections overseas, the British Overseas Trade Board and direct contact, the diplomatic service maintains close links with industry. Trade promotion is the largest single activity of the diplomatic service overseas, providing British industry with a wide variety of export services, ranging from tailored market reports and trade fair assistance, to facilitating trade missions and individual business contacts.

Middle East

19. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made towards peace in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

25. Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he can report on the middle east peace talks.

28. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's contribution to finding a diplomatic and peaceful solution to the Palestinian-Israeli conflict acceptable to the international community.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 10th round of bilateral negotiations adjourned in Washington on 1 July. The Israeli/Palestinian negotiations have reached an important moment. Both sides now face the decision whether to engage in detailed textual negotiations about interim arrangements in the occupied territories. We are urging them to do just this.

Azerbaijan

20. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Azerbaijan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Relations with Azerbaijan have been good. We are however concerned by the recent upheavals in Azerbaijan and, together with our EC partners, have called on the leading political figures in Azerbaijan to resolve the present crisis peacefully and constitutionally. We are also concerned at the effects which the present crisis is having on efforts to end the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh. We are urging all sides to the conflict to implement the CSCE plan to which they have already agreed.

Channel Islands (Wartime Internment)

21. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the German Government about the payment of compensation to Channel islanders interned in Nazi Germany during the last war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have raised the matter with the German Government on many occasions and at many levels. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised it with Foreign Minister Kinkel on 12 September 1992. The Germans told us definitively on 7 April that they were not prepared to give the Channel islanders any form of compensation or settlement. They said that this decision has been taken at a high political level, and made it clear that they would not reconsider it. We are disappointed by the decision, but I regret that we see no practicable way of taking the Channel islanders' claims any further.

Gibraltar

22. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Gibraltar to discuss its position relative to the European Community.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs nor I have any present plans to visit Gibraltar. However, we maintain a close dialogue with the Government of Gibraltar on all aspects of Gibraltar's position within the European Community.

Angola

23. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held in the Foreign Affairs Council concerning Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Angola was discussed at the European Council in Copenhagen on 21 and 22 June. The Council expressed its support for United Nations Security Council resolution 834 of 1 June, reaffirmed the urgent need for a peaceful solution to the current hostilities based on the Bicesse peace accords and called on UNITA to accept the United Nations plan for humanitarian relief.

35. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current position in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to support United Nations efforts to promote dialogue between the Angolan Government and UNITA, leading to a ceasefire and full implementation of the Bicesse peace accords. To help alleviate suffering caused by fighting we have pledged up to £2 million of humanitarian assistance and 3,000 tonnes of food aid.

Guatemala

24. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the new regime in Guatemala since the recent coup; and what assessment he has made of whether it will respect the United Kingdom's view of the status of Belize.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's ambassador in Guatemala City is in regular contact with new Guatemalan authorities. The Guatemalan Foreign Minister has reaffirmed that the Guatemalan Government maintain their predecessor's constructive policy towards Belize.

Diplomatic Overseas Estate

26. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total value of all contracts for construction refurbishment, and maintenance of the diplomatic overseas estate in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage of those contracts in terms of value was placed with United Kingdom businesses.

Mr. Goodlad: The total value of all contracts for construction, refurbishment, and maintenance of the diplomatic overseas estate awarded by the overseas estate department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1992 was about £11·5 million. Of this, about 40 per cent. by value was placed with United Kingdom businesses. Small works contracts are also awarded by posts overseas directly to locally based contractors in accordance with delegated authorities.

Maastricht Treaty

27. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on when the Maastricht treaty will come into force.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Maastricht treaty will enter into force

"on the first day of the month following the deposit of the instrument of ratification by the last signatory State to take this step"

as outlined in article R of the treaty.

Export Promotion

29. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department takes for promotion of British exports.

Mr. Goodlad: It is a key objective of the Department to promote United Kingdom exports. Seventeen per cent. of frontline diplomatic staff and 48 per cent. of senior locally engaged staff working in 196 missions overseas are employed full time on this task.

Malawi

30. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Malawi after the recent referendum.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 29 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff). We are pleased to note that the Malawian constitution has now been amended to allow for the restoration of other political parties. We look forward to further developments in the establishment of a multi-party democracy.

37. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Commonwealth Secretary General concerning Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

G7 Summit (Tokyo)

31. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues were discussed at the G7 meeting in Tokyo.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in the House on Monday, Official Report, columns 671-85.

Baltic States

32. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new proposals he has to improve relations with the Baltic states.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have close and friendly relations with all three Baltic states. We have opened embassies in each of the states and our political and commercial relations are flourishing. One example of our close co-operation is the expanding programme of technical assistance to the Baltic states through the know-how fund.

Iran

33. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the persecution of members of the Baha'i faith in Iran; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of confirmed and documented cases of the persecution of Baha'is in Iran, including summary execution, lack of due process of law, harassment, arbitrary detention, confiscation of, and eviction from, property. We have made numerous representations to the Iranian authorities about this issue bilaterally and with our EC partners.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Iran about persecution of Baha'is in Iran and their threat to take action against Baha'is in the international community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our European Community partners have made a number of representations to the Iranian authorities about the persecution of Baha'is in Iran, including during recent discussions between the EC and Iran.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made, or plans to make, to the United Nations Security Council regarding possible breaches by Iran of resolution 598 in respect of attacks on bases of the Mojahedin in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The possible contravention of Security Council resolution 598 is a matter for the Security Council which is permanently seized of the issue. We have expressed our serious concern at these air raids to the Iranian authorities. In a letter of 25 May to the United Nations Secretary-General, the Iranian permanent representative to the United Nations said that the air raids had been carried out in self-defence on the basis of article 51 of the United Nations charter and without prejudice to Iran's policy of respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq or its commitment to Security Council resolution 598.

Bosnia

34. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest United Kingdom position towards the war in Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We fully support the continuing efforts of Lord Owen and Mr. Stoltenberg to secure a peace settlement in Bosnia, based on the principles of the London conference. We will continue to lend full support to the humanitarian relief operation, and efforts to prevent a possible spillover of the conflict into neighbouring regions.

Subsidiarity

36. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had recently on the implementation of subsidiarity within the European Community.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the implementation of subsidiarity with our partners most recently at the Copenhagen European Council on 21 and 22 June, when M. Delors presented further examples of legislative proposals which would not be taken forward on subsidiarity grounds. This anticipated a full Commission report, to be delivered at the Brussels European Council in December, which will review existing legislation in the light of subsidiarity. We are working closely with other member states at official level, in particular with the French and the Germans, to ensure that this report is substantive.

Human Rights

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects next to meet his European counterparts to discuss human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Meetings of European Community Ministers often include discussion of human rights.

Social Charter

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have subscribed to the Council of Europe's social charter, but have not ratified the amending protocol opened for signature on 21 October 1991; and if he will make it his policy to encourage those who have not ratified the protocol to do so.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Pursuant to my answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 422, the list of countries should have included Germany. The full list of countries which have ratified the social charter, but have not ratified the amending protocol is therefore: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Malta, Spain, Turkey, and the United Kingdom.

Minority Languages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to make representations to the European Community to secure an increase in its budget allocation for European Community minority languages.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The Government consider that, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, this is a subject better dealt with within a domestic framework having regard to the needs of the individual communities concerned.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the European Community concerning its proposed budget reduction on minority languages.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No specific United Kingdom representations have been made.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which recommendations of the report, "Heritage in St. Helena", will be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We cannot yet say which recommendations will be implemented as the report is still being considered by the St. Helena Government and the St. Helena Heritage Society for which it was prepared.

Burma

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to seek the extension of the EC arms embargo to Burma to the nations of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Goodlad: There are no proposals formally to extend the current European Community arms embargo. A number of Commonwealth countries have instituted their own embargo on arms sales to Burma. We encourage others to do so.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches he has made to Japan for a trade embargo on Burma; and what was the response.

Mr. Goodlad: As I told the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie in answer to his question on 6 July, wider trade sanctions against Burma do not command the necessary international support. There are no plans to approach Japan about a trade embargo on Burma, Official Report, column 87.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of China about its supply of arms to Burma.

Mr. Goodlad: Both bilaterally and in concert with our European Community partners, we have encouraged the Government of China to reconsider its current position on arms sales to Burma.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make special representations to the Burmese Government on the fourth anniversary of the house arrest of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi.

Mr. Goodlad: Together with our European Community partners we take every opportunity to urge the Burmese authorities to release unconditionally all political detainees, including Aung San Suu Kyi. We are considering with our European Community partners how to mark the fourth anniversary of her house arrest.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish an itemised list of all the commitments entered into by Her Majesty's Government under the documents of the CSCE, as referred to by article 3 of the bilateral treaty with the Russian Federation laid before the House in April.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In addition to the Helsinki Final Act, the charter of Paris for a new Europe, and the Helsinki document of 1992 referred to in the treaty dated 9 November 1992 with the Russian Federation, CSCE commitments are also to be found in conclusions of the Madrid (1980-83) and Vienna (1986-89) follow-up meetings as well as subsequent meetings such as the Copenhagen conference on the human dimension (1990), the Moscow conference on the human dimension (1990) and the Stockholm summit of 1992. Copies of these documents are available in the Library of the House. It would involve disproportionate expense to produce an itemised list of all the commitments entered into at these and other CSCE meetings.

Tibet

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he plans to take with his EC colleagues following the resolution on Tibet passed by the European Parliament, with particular reference to access by Governments and international human rights agencies to Tibet.

Mr. Goodlad: We are deeply concerned about the situation in Tibet, including the human rights issues mentioned in the European Parliament resolution, and are in close contact with our European Community partners about further measures to follow up the EC statement of 1 June. We support the principle of free access by humanitarian agencies.

Yugoslavia

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many monitors the United Kingdom has sent to Kosovo.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has provided two monitors for the conference on security and co-operation in Europe's long-term missions in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina—one of whom has returned to the United Kingdom—and has offered a further three monitors. The future of the missions is, however, in doubt following Belgrade's refusal to renew the memorandum of understanding covering the missions.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will submit plans to the UN Security Council for lifting the siege of Sarajevo by military means through attacks on Serb artillery positions around the city; and what other plans he has to prevent the fall of Sarajevo within the next few months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sarajevo is one of six safe areas established under UN Security Council resolution 824 of 6 May. SCR 836 of 4 June expanded the mandate to include deterring attacks against safe areas. We are pressing for full implementation of that resolution. At present there are no further plans for military intervention in Sarajevo.

South American Graduates

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he is doing to promote graduate training in Europe of south American nationals; and what assessment he has of the number of such graduates in Europe in 1983 and the most recent available date.

Mr. Goodlad: There has been no reduction in the number of British Missions in Latin America in the last 12 months. The number of United Kingdom-based staff was reduced from 162 to 150 in the 12 months up to June 1993.

A table of diplomatic service staff in each Post in June 1993, together with the man years dedicated to aid and trade, is as follows:

Country	Post	United Kingdom-based staff 1993	of which	Trade 1993	Aid 1993

DEFENCE

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to President Menem's suggestion that the flags of Britain and Argentina should both fly over the Falkland islands.

Mr. Heathcote-Amory: We have received no such proposal from the Argentine Government. The Falkland islands are British territory and will remain so. The only appropriate flag is the Union flag.

Austria

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if a time scale for Austrian membership of the EC has been established.

Mr. Heathcote-Amory: The European Council in Copenhagen, with the strong support of the British Government, agreed a target date of 1 January 1995 for the accession of Austria, along with Finland, Sweden and Norway.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the provision of RAF Jaguar aircraft to take part in NATO operations to provide air support for UNPROFOR.

Mr. Hanley: On 10 June my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced—Official Report, column 336—that we were offering a squadron of RAF Jaguar aircraft to take part in an operation to be mounted by NATO to provide air support in case of attack against UNPROFOR in the performance of its mandate in Bosnia. This offer has now been formally accepted and 12 aircraft have been called forward to deploy to Italy, where they will be based. They will fly out on Friday 16 July, and will conduct training and work-up. Routine operational flying will start on a day to be determined by NATO and the UN. The RN Sea Harriers embarked in HMS Ark Royal are also available for this purpose if required.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what regular reports he receives on the effectiveness of the UN no-fly zone monitoring operation in Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he is satisfied that the current monitoring procedure is cost effective (a) overall and (b) in respect of airborne warning and control system.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

We receive twice-weekly reports from UNPROFOR on violations observed by UN military observers and NATO fighter and AWACS aircraft. We believe the monitoring operation has been successful in preventing combat flights, particularly of fixed-wing aircraft. The information collected by AWACS aircraft is essential for proper monitoring and enforcement of the no-fly zone.

Princess Mary's Hospital, Cyprus

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to privatise spare bed capacity at the Princess Mary's hospital, Sovereign base, Cyprus.

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to privatise any beds at the Princess Mary's RAF hospital, Akrotiri. The hospital has a defined service role in peacetime and war. Civilian patients are already admitted there for treatment, subject to available bed space, on a repayment basis. This widens the case mix and the professional training and experience of service doctors.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to provide medical equipment at the Princess Mary's hospital comparable to that in NHS hospitals in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hanley: The Princess Mary's RAF hospital, Akrotiri, is already sufficiently equipped for its peacetime role.

Ammunition Stocks

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current levels of ammunition stocks relative to the levels before the Gulf war.

Mr. Hanley: Stocks of ammunition have been reconstituted following the Gulf conflict, and some replenishment has taken place. In some areas, however, replenishment has not been necessary due to force level reductions. The actual types and quantities of stocks are based on weapons in service and NATO guidance. It is not the practice of the Government to give details of such stocks.

Skyguard Radar

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his oral statement of 17 June, Official Report, column 1012, if he will make a statement on the future of the Royal Air Force's covert monitoring Skyguard system.

(2) what will be the impact of the disbandment of 1339 Wing Royal Auxiliary Air Force Regiment on the deployment of Skyguard radars in the low-flying monitoring role.

Mr. Hanley: The disbandment of 1339 Wing Royal Auxiliary Air Force Regiment will not affect deployment of the Skyguard radar system in the low-flying monitoring role. Arrangements are being made to transfer the system to RAF Spadeadam, from where it will continue to be deployed in this role.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying aircraft have been monitored by Skyguard radar since its introduction in the low-flying monitoring role; and how many of the observed aircraft were found to be (a) breaching height regulations, (b) breaching speed regulations and (c) infringing avoidance areas laterally.

Mr. Hanley: Since June 1989 when Skyguard was first used to monitor low flying, 1,426 aircraft have been observed at medium or low level. Of these, nine were detected in apparent breach of regulations; seven in respect of height and two in respect of infringing avoidance areas laterally.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the dates, (b) locations, (c) types of aircraft involved, (d) circumstances and (e) altitudes of all (i) category A and (ii) category B air misses involving military aircraft over the United Kingdom since 1988.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 October 1992, Official Report, column 159, if he is yet able to write to the hon. Member in respect of the air misses at Alnwick on 16 July 1992.

Mr. Hanley: The RAF board of inquiry is not yet complete but my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member as soon as the board of inquiry reports.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of air misses since 1980 which have involved RAF Tornado aircraft; and in how many of these the investigating authorities have found that the Tornado crew did not see the reporting aircraft.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration his Department has given to the fitting of air-to-air transponder equipment to low-flying military aircraft to provide warning to other air traffic.

Mr. Hanley: A contact for a technology demonstrator programme, to prove the technology needed to provide low-flying military aircraft with collision warning facilities, was placed with Easams Ltd. in January 1993.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by month, for the last six months, the number of low-level air-to-air interceptor practice sorties flown over the United Kingdom by military jet aircraft; and if he will show in his answer the nationality of the aircraft.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Attack Runs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total number of attack runs made by aircraft at each air-to-ground weapons range in the United Kingdom by year since 1979.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

RAF Pilots

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned proportionate decrease in the number of operational strike/attack/reconnaissance pilots in the Royal Air Force from 1988 to 1994.

Mr. Hanley: The Royal Air Force plans to maintain numbers of fast-jet aircrew in each role, at the levels necessary to meet commitments. The size of the RAF's front-line units in 1988 was set out in annex C to the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988 (Cm 344-1) and the current position is shown at annex D to the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1993 (Cm 2270).

Service Personnel (Watches)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost has been for the last 12 months in providing watches to service personnel in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Hanley: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Royal Naval Reserve

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the existing training divisions or establishments in the United Kingdom which form part of the Royal Naval Reserve; which of these are to be closed; and why they have been selected for closure.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the consultation document on the future of Britain's naval reserve forces, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

A number of factors were taken into consideration. Many units were designed largely to support their mine countermeasure, naval control of shipping and defence of ports and anchorage roles which are no longer required. Also relevant is the need for a geographical spread of reserve centres throughout the United Kingdom in the areas of good recruitment, the state of repair of the buildings and maintenance running costs. These proposals are subject to consultation which will extend up to 30 July.

"Newsnight" Interview

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a transcript of the interview by the Minister for the Armed Forces on "Newsnight" of 5 July in the Library.

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

Arms Sales

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the names of those countries in the middle east to which the United Kingdom has sold arms since 1979; and what was the total value of those sales.

Mr. Aitken: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal details of arms sales to individual countries. However, the total value of sales to the region since 1979 is some £21 billion.

Sir Bedivere

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether tenders for the refurbishment for the landing ship Logistic Sir Bedivere will be restricted to particular shipyards.

Mr. Aitken: Tenders will be invited from all interested and suitably qualified companies.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many registered disabled people were employed in his Department in each year since 1975.

Mr. Aitken: Figures for the number of registered disabled people for the period before 1989 are unavailable. Details for years 1989 to 1993 are as follows:

Year	Number of Registered Disabled People	Percentage of MOD Total Work Force
1989	1,202	1·0
1990	1,210	0·9
1991	1,164	0·9
1992	1,164	0·9
[1]1993	1,439	1·1

[1]1993 figures exclude Defence Research Agency, Meteorological Office and AWE. The increase on the previous year of 0·2 per cent. was as a result of a re-survey of the non-industrial work force in 1992.

Refitting Tenders

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times tenderers for refit work on ships have been asked to submit the final bid (a) once, (b) twice, (c) three times and (d) more than three times for each year for the last five years for which information is available.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost and effort, as I will explain in a letter I am writing to the hon. Member.

Devonport Dockyard (Wages)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the average hourly wage rate at the royal naval dockyard at Devonport when it was privatised.

Mr. Aitken: The precise details requested are not available. However, immediately prior to the commencement of the Government-owned contractor-operated arrangement at Devonport dockyard on 1 April 1987, the average hourly labour rate was about £6.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Review

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received from Clwyd county council in regard to the forthcoming nuclear review; and what response he has made to the council.

Mr. Eggar: Clwyd county council wrote to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 1 July about the review. The reply explained that an announcement on the review would be made in due course.

New Technology

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department gives to British manufacturing companies to invest in new technology.

Mr. McLoughlin: The main assistance the Government provide to firms to invest in new technology is creating an environment which encourages such investment. The Department also provides support by helping companies gain access to science and technology and innovation best practice and strengthening the local infrastructure and networks for delivery of innovation-related services. Specific support for the development of new technology is also available through such schemes as the small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART), support for products under research (SPUR) and regional enterprise grants for investment and innovation projects. Support will continue for industry/higher education institute collaboration under LINK and for European collaboration under EUREKA.

Armed Services Trainers

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action his Department is taking to ensure the full utilisation in British industry of the skilled trainers declared redundant from the armed services.

Mr. Sainsbury: Wealth creation and the best use of resources in British industry is supported by a wide range of DTI schemes which are complementary to Department of Employment's and the armed forces' programmes and the overall Government strategy of providing the best environment in which companies operate.

Coal

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average level of Government subsidy per tonne of deep-mined coal in each year since 1988 in each of the member states of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 436, in which I gave figures for the amount of Government aid to the coal industry provided in the United Kingdom for the years 1987-88 to 1992-93. Comparable figures for each of the other OECD countries are not readily available.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the work of the renewable energy advisory group and the timetable of that work, with particular reference to wind energy; and when he expects to make the next non-fossil fuel obligation order.

Mr. Eggar: The report of the renewable energy advisory group (REAG) was published in December 1992 and a copy placed in the Library of the House. The Government will publish a renewable energy strategy document later this year which will include wind energy. An announcement will be made on the next renewable energy order under the non-fossil fuel obligation as soon as possible.

Power Plants

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current output from nuclear power plants; and what was the projected United Kingdom ouput for 1993 given in the Windscale inquiry report.

Mr. Eggar: In the first quarter of 1993 nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom supplied 21·8 terawatt hours of electricity. No projected United Kingdom power plant output for 1993 was given in the Windscale inquiry report.

Post Office

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to review a decision by the Post Office for the award of an agency contract.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has no specific powers to direct the Post Office on the award of individual agency contracts. Since the Post Office became a public corporation in 1969, it has been the policy of successive Governments that matters relating to the day to running of the Post Office are the responsibility of the Post Office Board.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what standards his Department lays down for the award of agency contracts by the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department does not lay down standards for the award of agency contracts for sub-post offices as this is a commercial and operational matter for the Post Office.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many agency Post Office contracts have been awarded to senior Post Office staff for the period for which records are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: Of the 617 directly operated post offices converted to agencies between April 1989 and May 1993, 189 have been awarded to former Post Office employees. The Post Office keeps no separate records of awards by grade nor of unsuccessful applications by its employees, but the number of senior personnel involved is thought to be very small.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints there have been about the award of agency contracts by the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has in recent years received representations in two previous cases about the award of agency contracts.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the remedies available for a review of a decision by the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: Other than the general remedies provided under the law, there is no specific right of appeal against non-appointment to an agency contract which is a commercial matter for the Post Office. Customers who have unresolved complaints about Post Office services may approach the Post Office Users' National Council.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the criteria used by the Post Office for the award of contracts to senior staff.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. This is a matter for the Post Office in the day-to-day management of its business. The basic principle followed by the Post Office in the award of all contracts to run agency post offices is to appoint the most suitable candidate in order to provide high-quality services to its customers and clients and to safeguard Post Office assets.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many agency contracts for post offices on the Isle of Wight have been awarded to senior Post Office personnel.

Mr. McLoughlin: One.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last visited Ventnor post office; and when he next intends to do so.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the President of the Boad of Trade has not visited Ventnor post office and has no plans to do so.

South America

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what policy he has to enable the Export Credits Guarantee Department to make risk assessments which would allow British firms to compete with foreign competition in south American markets.

Mr. Needham: The provision of ECGD cover for all markets is determined by an assessment carried out under its portfolio management system. This seeks to strike a balance between enabling British exporters to compete for business overseas with Government support, and the potential cost to the taxpayer if ECGD sustains losses.

Latin America

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what increases have taken place in Export Credits Guarantee Department rates to Latin America for medium and long-term capital gains schemes, for convenient dates over the last decade.

Mr. Needham: Figures are not readily available for premiums charged during the 1980s. Since 1991, the cost of ECGD cover has been more directly linked to the assessment of the risks. Premium rates area also individually tailored according to the features of each piece of business. Overall, average increases/decreases for premium rates for Latin American markets for which cover has been available throughout this period have been:

	Per cent
1991	+10
1992	−29
1993	+22

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what he is doing to encourage medium-sized British companies to operate in Latin America.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade led a business mission to Mexico and Argentina in June 1993. Bilateral trade facilitation groups have been established with Colombia and Mexico, and the Proyecto Venezuela initiative is being continued. In addition, there is a full programme of outward and inward trade missions, exhibitions, seminars and other promotional activities organised with the help of the Latin American Trade Advisory Group (LATAG). The programme aims to encourage small and medium-sized British companies to operate in Latin America.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the results of his exports promotion scheme in relation to six major Latin American markets.

Mr. Needham: The new export promotion scheme is in its initial stages. Each of the six major Latin American markets will be allocated at least one industry secondee and one market desk officer dedicated to the promotion of that market. The export promoter and dedicated market official will be responsible for the development and implementation of an export strategy for their market.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken to bring in people with experience of Latin American markets into relevant posts (a) at his Department's headquarters and (b) in British missions abroad.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has written to a large number of United Kingdom companies inviting them to provide secondees to the Department. So far, two export promoters have been appointed for Latin America, and we hope to recruit a further seven. The majority of commercial staff in British missions overseas are recruited from the local private sector.

Argentina

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to the credit offered by competitors of the United Kingdom in deciding the level of Export Credits Guarantee Department cover in Argentina.

Mr. Needham: The recent restoration of cover for Argentina was decided on the basis of an assessment of the risks involved. Although account was taken of the position of export credit agencies (ECAs) in other countries, it is not Government policy to seek to match other ECAs when determining cover arrangements and premium charges.

Company Accounts

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many companies registered with Companies House ceased trading in each of the last five years; what reasons were recorded for this; and in how many cases the company concerned had failed to submit accounts in the previous year;

(2) how many companies failed to provide Companies house with a full set of accounts in each of the last five years; what percentage of registered companies this represents; and in how many cases directors were prosecuted for this failure.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the chief executive of Companies House executive agency for which my Department is responsible. I have therefore asked Mr. David Durham to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Durham to Mr. Clive Betts, dated 12 July 1993:

On 7 July you tabled the following two Parliamentary Questions:

> To ask the President of the Board of Trade, how many companies registered with Companies House ceased trading in each of the last five years; what reasons were recorded for this; and in how many cases the company concerned had failed to submit accounts in the previous year.
> To ask the President of the Board of Trade, how many companies failed to provide Companies House with a full set of accounts in each of the last five years; and what percentage of registered companies this represents; and in how many cases directors were prosecuted for this failure.

Following the answer given by Mr. Hamilton, I am replying as Chief Executive of Companies House.

I am unable to provide the precise figures you require but the figures contained in the attached five tables provide similar information to that requested. This and other information will be made available in the report made each year by the Secretary of State to Parliament under section 729 of the Companies Act 1985. In the meantime, last year's report "Companies in 1991-92" may be of further help.

I am sorry that I cannot provide precisely the information you require but most of the figures are not kept or aggregated in the form you request. Specifically, we do not keep aggregated information on whether a company in receivership or liquidation has filed accounts for its previous financial year. Because of the limited court time available to Companies House and the length of time it takes to get a case to court, I am also unable to provide figures that establish a direct relationship between prosecutions for non-filing and a company's financial year to which the offence relates.

As it is not a statutory requirement to inform Companies House of the reasons why a company discontinues trading and, there is no requirement for a company that ceases to trade to be removed from the register, I am unable to give the number of companies that have ceased to trade in the terms that you specify. Finally, as Section 246 Companies Act 1985 allows companies to file abbreviated accounts in certain circumstances, the "compliance table" (table F3) interprets the words "full accounts" in the widest sense to mean that accounts have been received that comply with the requirements of the Act.

I hope that this reply covers the points tabled in your questions.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set the National Engineering Laboratory for 1993-94.

Mr. McLoughlin: When it was launched as an executive agency in October 1990, the National Engineering Laboratory was set the target of recovering its full costs through "arms-length" contracts from customers by 1994-95. This is still its primary target.

Other key targets I have set the laboratory for 1993-94 are as follows:

to obtain the return of and review at least 60 per cent. of contract completion questionnaires from clients; to carry out customer consultations and post-completion reviews of 20 per cent. of all contracts valued in excess of £250,000; to achieve laboratory-wide ISO 9001 accreditation by 31 March 1994; to increase the number of non-DTI customers who provide revenues of more than £100,000 per annum by 50 per cent.; and to complete the training of nominated staff in eight competences covered by the four current training programmes.

I have also set the chief executive of the agency the target of replying within 10 working days to letters from MPs delegated to him for reply.

Deregulation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the regulations which have been abolished, with dates, since the establishment of the deregulation unit.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 13 July 1993]: Records are not kept in this form. The deregulation unit has the job of encouraging Government Departments to take proper account of the impact on business of their policies and does not use the number of regulations abolished as a measure of success.

Much regulation is necessary but over-burdensome and is being examined with a view to simplification without prejudice to the legitimate protection of the public.

The aim is to make regulatory costs proportionate to the benefits.

RECHAR

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those organisations which his Department intends to consult in relation to the European Commission proposal to introduce RECHAR II from 1 January 1994.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 13 July 1993]: RECHAR I has been one of fourteen "Community Initiatives" under the European structural funds. The Commission has issued a Green Paper on Community initiatives after 1993, but has so far made no formal proposals. The future of Community initiatives, including any RECHAR II, will be considered by the Council later this year.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch), 6 July, Official Report, columns 105-6, what were the voting figures for each decision taken at the European Community's Foreign Affairs Council held on 2 July; and if he will make it his policy to include in future statements on council meetings information on whether formal votes were taken and which member states voted in favour, against or abstained on particular measures.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 13 July 1993]: No formal votes were taken at the meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 2 July. I regret that this was not made clear in my answer of 6 July, in accordance with the undertaking given to the hon. Member that statements to the House following meetings of the Council of Ministers will either include details of the vote whenever a formal vote is taken, or report that no formal votes were taken.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what help his Department is giving to those small businesses affected by the phase-out of CFC 113.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 July 1993]: CFC 113 is largely used as an industrial solvent. My Department commissioned a study on the phase-out of CFCs in the solvents sector and the availability of substitutes; the implications for small and medium-sized enterprises were specifically addressed. The Department has since supported a series of regional seminars organised by the Engineering Employers Federation, to make practical advice about alternatives available to small firms in particular; and a booklet encapsulating that advice is about to be issued. DTI has also supported a study concerning CFC elimination in the cleaning of electronic assemblies and the results have been published. As part of a general campaign by my Department to alert businesses to the phasing-out of ozone-depleting substances, a one-page flier about CFC 113 phase-out was circulated by the Health and Safety Executive to all dry cleaners.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Arts Council

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions grants have been made available by the Northern Ireland Arts Council under its (a) bursaries to writers scheme and (b) writers in residence scheme during the last five years to applicants who were neither resident in Northern Ireland nor had any connection with Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Prisoners (Appeals)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken to date in respect of convicted prisoners attempting to establish their innocence on appeal, when the Royal Ulster Constabulary cannot trace the original statements taken down by that force's detectives; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The safe guarding of police interview notes is a matter for the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. I understand that a force instruction, which came into effect in September 1992, directed that notes of interviews with terrorist suspects were to be made in booklets, electronically date and time stamped upon issue and following completion of the interview. The instruction also introduced additional measures to safeguard the long-term storage and security of those interview notes.

General Medical Practices

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general medical practices there are in Northern Ireland; and how many operate from (a) publicly-owned health centres and (b) privately-owned premises.

Mr. Ancram: At 1 July 1993, there were 355 general medical practices in Northern Ireland, of which 177 were operating from health centres and 178 from private premises.

Special Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) hydrocarbons and their oxygen, nitrogen and/or sulphur compounds, (b) inorganic cyanides, (c) inorganic halogen-containing compounds, (d) inorganic sulphur-containing compounds, (e) laboratory chemicals, (f) lead compounds, (g) mercury compounds, (h) nickel and nickel compounds, (i) organic halogen compounds, excluding inert polymeric material and (j) peroxides, chlorates and azides;

(2) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) acids and alkalis, (b) antimony and antimony compounds, (c) arsenic compounds, (d) asbestos (all chemical forms), (e) barium compounds, (f) beryllium and beryllium compounds, (g) biocides and phytopharmaceutical substances, (h) boron compounds, (i) cadmium and cadmium compounds, (j) copper compounds, (k) heterocyclic organic compounds containing oxygen, nitrogen and/or sulphur and (l) hexavalent chromium compounds;

(3) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) solvents-S halogen/mixed, (b) mineral oil sludges, (c) contaminated industrial waste, (d) empty contaminated drums, (e) pressurised cylinders/aerosols, (f) contaminated soil, (g) mixed laboratory chemicals, (h) biocides-solid, (i) biocides-liquid, (j) biocides-aqueous diluted, (k) resins-organic and (l) filter material-organic;

(4) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) solid metal bearing, (b) solid inorganic, (c) solid CN, (d) solid organic, (e) solid asbestos, (f) filter material-inorganic, (g) acid metal bearing, (h) acid-inorganic, (i) acid-organic, (j) alkalis metal bearing, (k) alkalis-inorganic, (l) alkalis-organic and (m) aqueous cyanide;

(5) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste arising (a) within the county and deposited within the county, (b) within the county and exported out of the county and (c) outside the county and deposited within the county;

(6) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) pharmaceutical and veterinary compounds, (b) phosphorus and its compounds, (c) selenium and selenium compounds, (d) silver compounds, (e) tarry materials from refining and tar residues from distilling, (f) tellurium and tellurium compounds, (g) thallium and thallium compounds, (h) vanadium compounds and (i) zinc compounds;

(7) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste arisings and deposits;

(8) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) pharmaceutical waste, (b) mixed organics in drums, (c) metal compounds, (d) non-toxic metal compounds, (e) metals-elements, (f) metal oxides, (g) inorganic compounds, (h) other inorganic material, (i) organic compounds, (j) polymeric material and precursors, (k) fuels, oils and greases, (l) fine chemicals and biocides, (m) miscellaneous chemicals waste, (n) filter materials and sludges, (o) miscellaneous waste and (q) construction waste;

(9) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) neutral metal bearing, (b) neutral-inorganic, (c) neutral-organic, (d) neutral-oily (one to 15 per cent.), (e) mineral oil and < 20 per cent. others, (f) mineral oil and > 20 per cent. others, (g) oil + > 20 per cent. water < 85 per cent., (h) grease/fat/wax/vegetable oil, (i) tars/phenols, (j) solvents-non halogen, (k) solvents-halogenated, (l) solvents-mixed (including water) and (m) solvents-S non halogen.

Mr. Atkins: Special wastes are defined in the Pollution Control (Special Waste) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1981. Under the Regulations, a producer of such waste, before it is removed from his premises, is required to complete a consignment note which contains details of the composition and quantity of the waste. Copies of these notes and the details they contain are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Midwives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many whole time equivalent midwives there are at each incremental point of each pay scale.

Mr. Ancram: I will write to the hon. Member once the information has been collated.

RUC

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the result of the review carried out by the Royal Ulster Constabulary into its guidelines concerning informants and agents; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Consideration of the relevant issues is continuing.

Community Services

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the involvement of local authorities in Northern Ireland in community care and other community services.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 12 July 1993]: Northern Ireland's four health and social services boards, through their community-based units of management, are responsible for the provision of community care services and other health and social care given outside hospital.

Local authorities in Northern Ireland have no responsibility for community care.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the suggested proposals to create community trusts in Northern Ireland; and what duties they will be responsible for.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The Government regard health and social services trusts as the best way of delivering health and personal social services in Northern Ireland. My noble Friend Lord Arran has already approved 10 applications for trust status, including the four community units of management in the Eastern board area. These community units will, subject to the passage of further legislation by Parliament, become fully operational as trusts on 1 April 1994. A proposal for further legislation was published on 17 June. This amending legislation will enable trusts providing community services to discharge certain statutory functions which are at present restricted to boards. In bringing this forward our objectives are to enable as many units as possible to take advantage of the significant benefits that trust status offers.

Units of management which are approved as trusts continue to be responsible for the full range of services they already provide, thus preserving the integrated nature of the services in Northern Ireland.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations have taken place with social workers, doctors and other interested people in Northern Ireland on the future care of the mentally ill, the handicapped and the disabled with the introduction of the new community care system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The Department of Health and Social Services has consulted widely on the Government's proposals for community care contained in the 1990 policy paper "People First" and on specific aspects of the new community care arrangements which came into operation on 1 April 1993.

A comprehensive information strategy, incorporating consultative papers and booklets for advisors, clients, carers, home owners and general practitioners was implemented in advance of the new arrangements and culminated in a major community care conference for Northern Ireland on 15 March 1993 attended by representatives of the voluntary, private and statutory sectors.

In addition, health and social services boards and their community-based units of management have consulted with clinicians, social services and other professional staff, providers and users in their areas in developing the new community care systems. Boards are expected to continue to consult regularly with interested parties in bringing forward proposals for development of services and the purchasing of care. The Department will be monitoring the effectiveness of the consultation undertaken by boards.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A prisoners there are currently in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. D. Lewis to Mr. Rod Richards, dated 15 July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many Category A prisoners there are currently in England and Wales.

There were 578 such prisoners on 30 June 1993.

Correspondence

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what change there has been in the amount of mail received by his office from hon. Members regarding law and order issues during 1993; and what steps he is taking to avoid excessive delays in replying.

Mr. Maclean: In the first six months of this year my office received 1,624 letters from hon. Members on law and order matters, compared with 414 in the same period in 1992—an increase of 392 per cent. A monthly comparison is set out in the table.

I very much regret the time taken to reply to some hon. Members' letters. A number of measures have been put in hand to reduce delays. Most notably, additional staff have been allocated to the division principally responsible for assisting in the preparation of replies. Every effort will be made to see that all outstanding correspondence from Members is answered as expeditiously as possible.

Immigration

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants from overseas have been (a) granted political asylum, (b) granted exceptional leave to remain and (c) refused permission to stay since April 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is no provision to grant asylum to a person not in the United Kingdom. Information on the outcome of entry clearance applications made abroad for the purpose of seeking asylum here is not separately identifiable in the statistics.

In the period April to December 1992 a total of 490 grants of settlement—including dependants—were made to south-east Asian refugees, who form a distinct group dealt with under a specific programme. This information since December 1992 is not yet available.

Information on all decisions made in the period 1 April 1992 to 30 June 1993 on applications for asylum in the United Kingdom is given in the following table.

Decisions[1] on applications received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, by type, 1 April 1992 to 30 June 1993

	Decisions
Total decisions	46,155
Recognised as refugee and granted asylum[2]	2,230
Not recognised as refugee, but granted exceptional leave[3]	23,900
Refusals
Total refused	20,030
Refused asylum and exceptional leave after determination	3,755
Refused on third country grounds	770
Refused under paragraph 101 of the Immigration Rules[4]	15,500

[1] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the same period.

[2] Excluding South East Asian refugees.

[3] Where it would have been unreasonable or impracticable to seek to enforce return to country of origin.

[4] For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to two invitations to interview to establish identity.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners have been held on remand in custody for more than 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available provisional data are for 30 June 1993. On that date there were about 200 untried prisoners and 100 convicted unsentenced prisoners in Prison Service establishments who had first been remanded in custody over 12 months earlier. Not all of these defendants will have been in continuous prison custody since their first remand. This period excludes any time spent in non-Prison Service establishments—eg police cells—before reception on remand into a Prison Service establishment.

Child Offenders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders aged 15, 16 or 17 years have received a sentence of detention under section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act since 1983; and if he will break down their offences into categories.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1983 to 1991 is given in the table. 1992 data will not be available until the autumn.

Note: Comparisons with prison receptions suggest there may have been under recording during 1989 and 1990, although this is less likely in 1990.

Fellowship Charitable Foundation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now ask the Charity Commissioners to consider exercising their temporary protective powers under section 8 of the Charities Act 1992 in respect of the trustees of the Fellowship Charitable Foundation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the Charity Commissioners are already considering which of their powers, if any, they should exercise in respect of the Fellowship Charitable Foundation.

Manchester Prison

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce a decision on the future of Manchester prison (Strangeways).

Mr. Howard: The prisons board met yesterday to consider the report of the panel which evaluated the bids for the management of Her Majesty's prison Manchester. It decided to accept the majority recommendation of the evaluation panel that the preferred service provider should be the in-house team. In the face of fierce competition, the in-house bid offers the best value for money and will set new standards for the operation of established local prisons. Subject to the conclusion of a satisfactory service level agreement, the team now faces the challenge of delivering its promise of a safe, purposeful and open regime, with active prisoner and community involvement. Performance against these commitments will be closely controlled on a basis comparable to private sector contracts.

Firearms

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will lay before Parliament the fourth annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Mr. Howard: I have placed a copy of the annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee in the Library of both Houses today.

LORD CHANCELLORS DEPARTMENT

Divorce

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will estimate the average cost to the public sector of divorce for a couple with two children where (a) the parties receive legal aid, (b) one or both parties are rehoused in public housing and (c) the party given custody of the children receives state benefit.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is not possible to estimate the average cost in such a case because eligibility for legal aid, public housing and state benefits depends on a number of factors but particularly the income of the husband and wife at the time of separation. However, the average cost of a legally aided divorce in the county courts in 1992-93 was £1,514.

TRANSPORT

Passenger Transport Authorities

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the contributions to (a) capital investment and (b) revenue of British Rail by each of the passenger transport authorities in each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman: The information is as follows:

Notes

1. Revenue contributions, are largely supported by central Government RSG and SSA cover and capital contributions by credit approval cover given by the Department.
2. Revenue is the level of S20 claims after audit, except 1992-93 which as yet has not been audited.
3. Capital refers to investment funded directly by PTEs, ie, it excludes investment funded by the PSO and recovered via debt charges.

Radioactive Materials (Transport)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was Her Majesty's Government's policy position on the draft code of practice for the maritime transport of radioactive materials discussed at the International Maritime Organisation's marine environment protection committee meeting on 5 to 9 July.

Mr. Norris: Her Majesty's Government's policy is to support the decision of the International Maritime Organisation's maritime safety committee to approve the code of practice for adoption by the 18th assembly of the IMO.

Unstaffed Rail Stations

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the British Rail stations in each parliamentary constituency which are (a) wholly or (b) partially unstaffed, indicating those which became unstaffed within the past year.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not readily available in the form required. However, as at 14 July, of the 2,551 stations on the British Rail network, 977 were wholly unstaffed. Because of the variation in the number of hours for which stations are open, it would be difficult to define partially staffed.

Airline Passengers (Telecommunications)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the safety and security implications of airline passengers using telecommunications technology while airborne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA).

It has been found that transmissions from portable telephones may cause interference with an aircraft's own electronic systems. Earlier this month the CAA issued an updated aeronautical information circular giving guidance on this matter to air operators, pilots, flight crew and all concerned with the operation of the aircraft. They were advised that the use of portable telephones in aircraft is not permitted, and that they should require passengers to switch them off.

Driver's Licence History (Sentencing)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average cost charged to a magistrate's court of a printout by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency of a driver's licence history needed to assist in sentencing.

Mr. Key: DVLA does not charge courts for driver licence printouts.

Urban Public Transport

Mr Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to meet the president of the Institution of Civil Engineers to discuss the reorganisation of urban public transport.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to meet the president of the Institution of Civil Engineers, but Ministers do have regular contact with the institution.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for providing funding for Network SouthEast to lease new trains.

Mr. Freeman: In last year's autumn statement an additional £150 million was made available to British Rail specifically to allow it to lease new rolling stock. New outer suburban trains for Network SouthEast are one of two options being considered by British Rail. It is expected to take a decision later in the summer. Whatever the outcome, I shall be looking to support further leasing deals, provided that they comply with Treasury guidelines.

ENVIRONMENT

Special Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste category of (a) neutral metal bearing, (b) neutral-inorganic, (c) neutral-organic, (d) neutral-oily (1–15 per cent.), (e) mineral oil and < 20 per cent. others, (f) mineral oil and > 20 per cent. others, (g) oil + < 20 per cent. water > 85 per cent., (h) grease/fat/wax/vegetable oil, (i) tars/phenols, (j) solvents-non halogen, (k) solvents-halogenated, (l) solvents-mixed (including water) and (m) solvents-S non halogen;

(2) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) solid metal bearings, (b) solid inorganic, (c) solid CN, (d) solid organic, (e) solid asbestos, (f) filter material-inorganic, (g) acid metal bearing, (h) acid-inorganic, (i) acid-organic, (j) alkalis metal bearing, (k) alkalis-inorganic, (l) alkalis-organic and (m) aqueous cyanide;

(3) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) hydrocarbons and their oxygen, nitrogen and/or sulphur compounds, (b) inorganic cyanides, (c) inorganic halogen containing compounds, (d) inorganic sulphur containing compounds, (e) laboratory chemicals, (f) lead compounds, (g) mercury compounds, (h) nickel and nickel compounds, (i) organic halogen compounds, excluding inert polymeric materials and (j) peroxides, chlorates and azides;

(4) if he will list by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) pharmaceutical waste, (b) mixed organics in drums, (c) metal compounds, (d) non-toxic metal compounds, (e) metals-elements, (f) metal oxides, (g) inorganic compounds, (h) other inorganic material, (i) organic compounds, (j) polymeric material and precursors, (k) fuels, oils and greases, (l) fine chemicals and biocides, (m) miscellaneous chemicals waste, (n) filter materials and sludges, (o) miscellaneous waste and (p) construction waste;

(5) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) acids and alkalis, (b) antimony and antimony compounds, (c) arsenic compounds, (d) asbestos (all chemical forms), (e) barium compounds, (f) beryllium and beryllium compounds, (g) biocides and phytopharmaceutical substances, (h) boron compounds, (i) cadmium and cadmium compounds, (j) copper compounds, (k) heterocyclic organic compounds containing oxygen, nitrogen and/or sulphur and (l) hexavalent chromium compounds;

(6) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) solvent-S halogen/mixed, (b) mineral oil sludges, (c) contaminated industrial waste, (d) empty contaminated drums, (e) pressurised cylinders/aerosols, (f) contaminated soil, (g) mixed laboratory chemicals, (h) biocides-solid, (i) biocides-liquid, (j) biocides-aqueous diluted, (k) resins-organic and (l) filter material-organic;

(7) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) pharmaceutical and veterinary compounds, (b) phosphorus and its compounds, (c) selenium and selenium compounds, (d) silver compounds, (e) tarry materials from refining and tar residues from distilling, (f) tellurium and tellurium compounds, (g) thallium and thallium compounds, (h) vanadium compounds and (i) zinc compounds.

Mr. Yeo: The information is not currently available.

Council Tax

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those local authorities in England with over 60 per cent. of their properties in bands A and B combined, for council tax purposes; and if he will give the relevant percentage in each case;

(2) if he will list those local authorities in England with 50 per cent. or more properties in band A for council tax purposes; and if he will give the relevant percentage in each case.

Mr. Baldry: I am arranging for the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the reason for the United Kingdom request for an exception for 15 years to the prohibition on the sea disposal of low and intermediate-level radioactive substances, under the convention for the protection of the marine environment of the north-east Atlantic.

Mr. Yeo: The convention provides no such exception: it provides that, after a 15-year moratorium which starts this year, France and the United Kingdom will each have the option to resume sea disposal of low and intermediate-level radioactive waste. The reason for preserving this option is that sea disposal may be the best practicable environmental option for certain categories of radioactive waste. It would be wrong to close off that option.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy during the further consultation period on the discharge licences for Sellafield that developed countries should aim for self-sufficiency in dealing with radioactive wastes.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 14 July 1993]: It is for countries to decide their own policy in dealing with radioactive waste in the light of their international obligations.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will release to all consultees as part of the further consultation period announced for the thermal oxide reprocessing plant project on 28 June, the 20-year forward look review commissioned from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

Mr. Yeo: No. The Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's review of the radioactive waste disposal issues which are likely to arise over the next 20 years has not been completed.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to consult over the issue of substitution of nuclear waste in contracts between British Nuclear Fuels and other Governments utilities, with particular reference to the issues raised by Professor Knill of RAWMAC.

Mr. Yeo: We require further information from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee before its advice on waste substitution can be considered properly.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which organisations in the United Kingdom would have the technical capacity to construct or run a dry store capable of taking spent advanced gas-cooled reactor fuel.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.
This is a matter for the organisations concerned.

Toxic Waste (Taiwan)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from the Government of Taiwan as to the proportion of the toxic waste exported in 1992 to Taiwan from the United Kingdom that has been (a) separated and recycled and (b) directly disposed of.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Community Charge Arrears

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce amending legislation to amend regulation 16(1) of the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 to enable the collection of community charge arrears by way of attachment of earnings orders or deductions from income support in conjunction with postponed warrants of commitment to prison under regulation 41 of those same regulations.

Mr. Baldry: A court will normally postpone a warrant of commitment under regulation 41(3)(b) of the Community Charge (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 on condition that a debtor repays a specified sum each week. The weekly payment will be decided by the court following an examination of the debtor's means. It would not therefore be appropriate for a further statutory deduction to be allowed from the debtor's income to recover that debt.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce amending legislation to enable community charge charging authorities to apply to the magistrates courts to vary the order of that court if both charging authority and the debtor are agreed on a payment arrangement.

Mr. Baldry: We do not think that is necessary. Under the law as it stands there is nothing to prevent a debtor from paying an authority more than the amount specified in the court order if he agrees to do so. It would not be appropriate for the debtor to pay less than the amount specified in the order as this is the amount that the court has decided he should pay, following an examination of his means.

Housing Associations

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the Government's objectives in reducing housing association grant; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Government's objective in reducing average housing association grant rates is to maximise the proportion of private finance in new housing association schemes, and thereby maximise the number of new homes that housing associations are able to provide from the available public resources. This will ensure that more people now living in unacceptable conditions can be housed satisfactorily.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals to set up a housing association ombudsman.

Sir George Young: The Housing Corporation circulated proposals in a consultation document earlier this year and, have received a range of comments and suggestions. The Environment Select Committee has also recently reported its views on this subject. These comments are currently being considered and I hope that a revised set of proposals will be issued shortly, dealing both with the establishment of an ombudsman service for housing association tenants and with improved arrangements for the handling of tenants' complaints by associations themselves.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of housing association tenants were in receipt of housing benefit in each year since 1988.

Sir George Young: Reliable information is not available for all housing association tenants covering the period 1988-1992.

The information set out in the table covers permanent lettings by housing associations in the years 1990-1992, and shows the proportion of households assessed by housing officers as qualifying for housing benefit in each year.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the average income levels of housing association tenants in each year since 1988.

Sir George Young: Reliable information is not available for all housing association tenants covering the period 1988-1992.

The information set out in the table covers permanent lettings by housing associations in the years 1990-1992, and shows the average net weekly household income of new tenants who took up a housing association tenancy and of existing tenants who moved within a housing association.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to respond to the recommendations regarding housing association grant made by the Environment Select Committee in its second report of Session 1992-93 (HC466) on the Housing Corporation; and what account will be taken of those recommendations in relevant decisions taken by his Department before publication of his response to the Select Committee report.

Sir George Young: We are examining the recommendations of the Environment Select Committee report on the Housing Corporation and will make a formal response when the House reassembles after the summer recess. However, where operational decisions are needed sooner, we may provide an interim response on particular issues.

In taking decisions about the level of housing association grant in 1994-95, Ministers will consider all available evidence, including the Select Committee's recommendations.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of the amounts of capital receipts received by local authorities since November 1992 and which are available to authorities for capital spending under the terms of the autumn statement; and what was his original estimate.

Mr. Gummer: Estimates of local authorities' capital receipts are based on information provided by local authorities. At the time of the autumn statement, it was estimated that English local authorities would receive some £2·2 billion of capital receipts in 1992-93. On the basis of more recent information from local authorities, a revised estimate of £2·1 billion was made in April this year. No separate estimates of receipts have been made for the period between 13 November 1992 and the end of the financial year, during which virtually all of the receipts received will have been available for capital spending as a result of the temporary relaxation in the capital receipts rules announced in the autumn statement. Provisional outturn information for receipts which local authorities obtained between 13 November 1992 and 31 March 1993 will be published in due course, once returns from local authorities have been received and processed.

Disabled Facilities Grants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation he has made of the effect of the alterations since 1 April in the disregard rules for calculation of entitlement to disabled facilities grants; what consultations he has had with the representatives of people with disabilities on the effects of the alterations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: These changes were designed to provide more help to grant applicants on low incomes and less to the better-off. It is too soon to assess their precise effects. Disability organisations were consulted on the changes prior to their introduction. They will have an opportunity to provide views on this as part of the Department's current consultation exercise on the future of private housing renewal programmes.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the principal changes in the disregards for the purposes of calculating the entitlement to disabled facilities grants since 1 April.

Sir George Young: The information requested is contained in the Housing Renovation etc Grants (Reduction of Grant) (Amendment) Regulations 1993 (SI 1993 No. 551) and Department of the Environment circular 7/93, copies of which are available in the Library.

Council Rents

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions he has reached as a result of the consultation carried out by his Department on recent rent increases for regulated tenancies.

Sir George Young: I have considered carefully the representations from both landlords and tenants on this issue. Although generally no new regulated tenancies have been created since 15 January 1989, the Government gave an assurance at the time of the passing of the Housing Act 1988 that existing regulated tenants would not be subject to the new regime which that Act brought in. Registered rents for regulated tenancies have risen substantially in certain areas since 1989, but still remain well below market rents.

Having carefully considered the representations received as a result of the recent consultation, I am not convinced that the public interest would be best served by altering the legislative balance which currently exists. To provide further legislative controls over rents would hinder efforts to promote the revival of the private rented sector. Housing benefit is available to meet the cost of reasonable increases in regulated rents for those on low incomes. Our objective in all sectors is to move towards personal subsidies rather than subsidies to bricks and mortar. Accordingly, the Government have no plans for further legislation on this sector.

I am concerned, however, that there should be general consistency of approach through the country. I have no powers to issue guidance to either rent officers or rent assessment committees, but I plan to encourage greater exchange of information and views between them to encourage consistency.

Dioxin, Derbyshire

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further investigations have been made of dioxin contamination of soils and vegetation in Derbyshire.

Mr. Yeo: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the results of soil and vegetation sampling at Stanton-by-Dale and Staveley in Derbyshire. The results are in the same range as the levels found in earlier samples taken at Staveley, announced on 31 March, Official Report, column 292.

Concentrations of dioxins in soil and vegetation are reflected in concentrations in milk from the same area. Milk is the principle source of human exposure to dioxins. The concentrations of dioxins in milk produced in the Staveley area are within the normal range for milk in the United Kingdom. Because the levels of dioxins in vegetation and soil in the Stanton-by-Dale area are comparable to or less than the levels found in the Staveley area, there is no concern about the milk produced in the Stanton-by-Dale area.

Sampling of emissions to the air from the foundry at Staveley reveal a very low level of dioxins, equivalent to one seventh of the guideline limit set by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution for new chemical incinerators. These results suggest that the gas cleaning plant at the Staveley foundry is very effective.

Fruit and Vegetables

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's planning policy for farm-based fruit and vegetable packing operations.

Mr. Curry: Farm-based fruit and vegetable packing operations, including those packing the produce of other farms, can help bring necessary diversification to the rural economy and assist our farmers in competing effectively at home and abroad. The Government attach great importance to encouraging new sources of jobs and services in rural areas, and maintaining a strong agricultural and horticultural industry. Planning policy guidance note 7 advises that development which is necessary to sustain the rural economy should be properly integrated with the protection of the rural environment. Unless material considerations indicate otherwise, applications for farm-based packing operations must be determined in accordance with the development plan.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Broadcasting

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment his Department made prior to its decision to require BBC Radio WM to relinquish its medium-wave frequencies of the impact this would have on the ethnic minority broadcasting in the west midlands.

Mr. Brooke: BBC Radio West Midlands simulcasts its services on both FM and AM, except for some 37 hours a week in the evenings, when it broadcasts its Asian programmes on AM. We appreciate that many Asian listeners would regret the loss of these programmes. That is why we have asked the BBC to look for ways of continuing to broadcast them after October 1994, when the Radio Authority will use the AM frequencies for a new local radio service in the west midlands.

North West Council for Sport and Recreation

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the names and backgrounds of the chairman and members of the North West Council for Sport and Recreation.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 12 July 1993]: The chairman, and those members whom I appoint, are currently as follows:

Chairman:	Mr. J. R. Cochrane
Vice-Chairman:	Mr. J. R. H. Greenwood
Ministerial nominees:	Mrs. M. B. Birkenhead
	Mrs. J. Hammersley-Parker
	Mr. H. A. Cann

There are two vacant ministerial appointments.

It would not be appropriate for me to publish personal details in the Official Report. My hon. Friend may therefore wish to pursue this directly with the regional council.

EDUCATION

Student Loans

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the number of students receiving a student loan in further education and higher education.

Mr. Boswell: Loans under the student loans scheme are not available to students in further education. The number of students in higher education who are in receipt of loans under the scheme is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I will ask the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

University Students

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students were studying at each university in the United Kingdom at the latest date for which figures are available; and what were the figures in (a) 1960, (b) 1970 and (c) 1980.

Mr. Boswell: The numbers of students at universities in the academic year 1960-61, and corresponding data for these institutions in the academic years 1970-71, 1980-81 and 1991-92 are shown in the table. Figures for these institutions and those for universities established since 1960-61 are published in the Universities Statistical Record volume 1, and in Statistics of Education volume 6, copies of which are in the Library.

School Meals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many and what proportion of children received (a) paid and (b) free meals in (i) primary, (ii) junior and (iii) secondary schools in England as a whole in each year since 1979.

Mr. Forth: Information on school meal arrangements in England since 1989 is shown in the table. Information prior to 1989 is not available on a comparable basis although the results of early school meals censuses were published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy up to 1988 in "School Meal Statistics at October", copies of which are available in the Library.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a further statement about school teachers' pay in 1993.

Mr. Patten: I am today publishing the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1993, which will put in place the new pay spine for classroom teachers which I announced in February. I intend to lay an order before the House tomorrow which will bring the document into force with effect from 1 September 1993.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans the United Kingdom Government have to join other European countries in contributing to the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis at Laxenburg, near Vienna.

Mr. David Davis: None at the present time.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names of individuals who (a) are spouses of hon. Members, (b) are members of the House of Lords, (c) are spouses of members of the House of Lords and (d) have been party candidates for Parliament, indicating for which party, who have been appointed by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations giving, in each case, the title of the post, any salary payable, and the duration of the appointment.

Mr. David Davis [pursuant to the reply, 9 July 1993, c. 285]: I regret that the information I gave regarding my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) and my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) is incorrect. Although they are members of the Medical Research Council and the Agricultural and Food Research Council respectively, they do not receive any honoraria.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

British Military Hospital, Nepal

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial, medical and administrative support Her Majesty's Government have given the former British military hospital, Dharan, Nepal, to enable it to continue as the major medical and surgical facilitity in east Nepal; and if he will make a statement on the future of the hospital and its staff.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1989, when the British Brigade of Ghurkas withdrew from the British military hospital, we agreed an aid package worth £3 million to assist with the transition to Nepali management. This package included assignments by a surgeon, an anaesthetist, a physician and a general manager. It also funded the construction of new wards, the provision of equipment and the training of local staff.

Long-term viability has been assured through the establishment at the hospital by the Government of Nepal of the BP Koirala Institute for Health Sciences with the assistance of the Indian Government. The final commissioning of wards and transfer of equipment are expected to be complete by the end of this month.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his United States and European Community counterparts about their contributions to United Nations aid for the peoples of the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Humanitarian aid for the peoples of the former Yugoslavia, including assistance through the United Nations, is the subject of frequent discussion with our partners in the European Community and the United States. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development announced an additional package of humanitarian aid for the former Yugoslavia of £18·5 million on 12 July, thus bringing our total bilateral commitment to £63 million. Details of this new package will be set out on 16 July at the meeting of donors which has been called by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and we urge other donors to follow our example.

International Finance Corporation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make available the voting decisions of the United Kingdom executive director in the International Finance Corporation since 1 January 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 13 July 1993]: The proceedings of the board of executive directors of the International Finance Corporation are confidential so as not to inhibit full and frank discussion.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

CSCE

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the second meeting of the Parliamentary Assembly of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe in Helsinki on 6 to 9 July.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Parliamentary Assembly meeting in Helsinki provided a valuable opportunity for parliamentarians from 45 CSCE participating states and representatives of international organisations to meet and debate issues relating to co-operation and security in the CSCE area. The declaration adopted by the Assembly is an important statement of concern regarding conflicts in the CSCE area and also reflects the view of the Assembly that the CSCE has a key role in seeking to prevent and resolve such conflicts.

Chittagong Hill Tract Refugees

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to (a) the Indian and (b) the Bangladeshi Governments on the proposed repatriation to Bangladesh of the Chittagong hill tract refugees currently in refugee camps in the state of Tripura, India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have not made formal representations to either Government about the proposed repatriations. But the Indian and Bangladesh authorities are aware of our concern about the tribal refugees from the Chittagong hill tracts in camps in Tripura. For example, the acting British high commissioner in Dhaka discussed the issue with the Bangladesh Foreign Minister on 26 June.

English Language Teaching

Mr. Whitney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the work of the British Council in direct English language teaching is self-financing, taking account of start-up costs of the ELT operation since the mid-1970s and all relevant overheads.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The work of the British Council in direct English language teaching is entirely self-financing. Students' fees cover all relevant costs, including overheads, and the surplus is used partly to reinvest in the business, partly to cover the business risk and partly to support the council's cultural and educational programmes as a return on earlier investment in start-up costs.

South American Nationals (Graduate Training)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he is doing to promote graduate training in Europe of south American nationals; and what assessment he has of the number of such graduates in Europe in 1983 and the most recent available date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Human resource development is a priority for our bilateral technical co-operation programmes and, wherever appropriate, United Kingdom training is an integral part of aid-funded projects.

It has not been possible to obtain statistics relating to south American nationals studying in European countries other than in the United Kingdom. Obtaining the statistics from all European countries could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In 1984-85, the total number of students from south America studying in the United Kingdom funded by Her Majesty's Government sources totalled 292 at an approximate cost of £1·6 million; statistics for overseas students funded by Her Majesty's Government prior to this are not available. In 1992-93, the number of students from south America was 641 at a cost of about £4·38 million. A breakdown of these totals by country of origin has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Our aid programme has supported the bulk of Her Majesty's Government-funded students from south America. Aid funds are provided under our bilateral technical co-operation training arrangements—287 students at a cost of approximately £2·22 million in 1992-93—and under the Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarship award scheme—274 students at a cost of approximately £1·76 million in 1992-93.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of full-time workers on adult rates currently earn less than (a) £100, (b) £150, (c) £200 and (d) £250 per week, including and excluding overtime, in (i) Yorkshire and Humberside, (ii) north Yorkshire, (iii) the north of England and (iv) the United Kingdom, distinguishing between male and female and manual and non-manual.

Note: Information for part-time men is not available.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the median, highest and lowest decile earnings of full-time workers on adult rates, distinguishing between male and female, manual and non-manual in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside, (b) the north of England and (c) the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information for Great Britain and the regions of Britain can be found in table 116 of part E of the new earnings survey for each of the years requested.

Corresponding information for Northern Ireland is available only from 1984 and can be found in table 1 of the Northern Ireland report. Information for the United Kingdom is not available.

Unemployment

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to assist areas with rising unemployment, in particular areas of high concentrations of defence-related industry; what special programmes are available for such areas; and what plans he has to increase such assistance.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 7 July 1993, Official Report, columns 201-2.

Sickness Benefit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the issue by claimant advisers in the Employment Service of standard letters asking doctors to advise whether a claimant is incapable for work; and if he will publish the guidance for the distribution of such letters.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. J. Turner to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 15 July 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State about the issue, by our Client Advisers, of letters asking doctors to advise clients on their capability for work.

It may help if I explain that everyone claiming unemployment benefit (UB), credits of National Insurance contributions and Income Support (IS) as an unemployed person must be capable of, available for and actively seeking work. ES receptionists and advisers have a key role in making sure clients understand and meet these conditions. Where evidence suggests clients are not meeting them, then our people investigate why and explain the alternatives which may exist. This may include helping clients who are not entitled to UB get an alternative benefit such as Sickness Benefit.

Guidance to ES local office receptionists and advisers, when dealing with new claims for UB, therefore requires that they sensitively prove the issue of capability to find out if there is a current claim to Sickness Benefit; or if the client believes they have a health problem which stops them from working. Only where there is a doubt about whether a client is capable of work, and the client is willing to seek further advice from their GP will an adviser suggest they seek medical advice. If the client does not wish to seek further advice but our people have doubts about their capability for work, their claim will be taken and referred to an independent adjudicating authority for a decision on entitlement.

Where a client is already claiming UB but states they are not capable of work, an ES adviser will assess whether there is a more appropriate benefit and seek to facilitate a smooth transition if appropriate. As part of this process an adviser may suggest the client seeks their GP's advice about their capacity to work. To explain the situation to the GP the adviser will send them a letter (Annex 1) explaining why the client is seeking their opinion. The client is also given a letter to make clear to them that they are seeking medical advice on their own behalf, not on behalf of the ES (Annex 2). The use of these letters also makes sure that a consistent approach is maintained across the network of our local offices. I have also attached (Annex 3) a copy of the guidance available to advisers on the issue of these letters.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Letter to GP Explaining Advice Given to Client by Client Adviser

The Employment Service
Employment Department

Date

I am the Client Adviser at..... benefit office; part of the Employment Service. I give advice to unemployed people to help them find suitable work and provide information about the benefits which they may receive. I also have to ensure that people satisfy the conditions of entitlement for receiving Unemployment Benefit, Income Support and/or credits of NI. One of the main conditions laid down in the Social Security Act 1975 is that the client must be capable of taking up suitable work.

When I interviewed your patient on..... *he/she informed me that they had health problems that prevents them undertaking any employment. In these circumstances I have had to suggest that *he/she should seek your advice about their fitness for employment.

If in your opinion *he/she is incapable of all work then you will no doubt advise your patient in accordance with your own clinical judgement.

Should you advise your patient that *he/she is capable of work then it will be necessary for them to see me again to reconsider their claim to unemployment benefit, income support and/or credits of NI.

When I saw you on.....about your claim for unemployment benefit, you told me that you had a health problem which prevented you doing any work. This means that you do not seem to be capable of and available for work, which is one of the main rules for payment of unemployment benefit (Social Security Act 1975).

In these circumstances I had to suggest that you seek your doctor's advice about your fitness to work. Please take this letter with you if you decide to go to see your doctor.

Current claim—no medical evidence

V16 If the client has an established claim to benefit and states during an interview that they:

a have recently been disallowed Sickness or Invalidity Benefit, and b wish to appeal against the DSS AO's disallowance, and c their doctor is not issuing sickness certificates, and d their medical condition has significantly deteriorated since they last visited their doctor or e are not capable of undertaking work; and f have not seen their doctor;

ask them to seek their doctor's advice about their capacity to work.

V17 If the client agrees to see their doctor, complete and give them a copy of the letter in Appendix V3. Write to the GP using the letter in Appendix V4 explaining the reason for the client's visit, enclosing a copy of the letter issued to the client to avoid confusion between the client and the doctor as to why medical advice is being sought about their capacity for work. Make sure the client knows they are seeking medical advice on their own behalf, not on behalf of you or the ES.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fast Breeder Reactor

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the scope of the United Kingdom fast breeder reactor programme following the closure of the Dounreay reactor; if he will outline the differences from the programme for FBR construction contained in the Windscale inquiry report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I announced on 19 November 1992, Official Report, column 411, that funding of fast reactor research and development beyond March 1993 was not a priority and that the programme would therefore be wound down. No further Government-funded work is planned except for a limited programme of experiments associated with the closure of the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay. Any work beyond that is a matter for the industry.

In his conclusions to the Windscale inquiry report, the then Mr. Justice Parker concluded that the construction of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant was desirable although it was then possible that it would be decided not to proceed further with fast reactors, at any rate for a period.

Coal Industry

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total amount spent on redundancy pay in the coal mining industry since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: I refer to my reply to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 13 July, Official Report, columns 437-38.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total amount spent on retraining redundant mine workers since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The information available on expenditure on retraining redundant mineworkers relates to British Coal's job and career change scheme (JACCS).

Total expenditure from the introduction of JACCS in June 1985 to the end of March 1993 was £42·98 million.

This figure does not include expenditure on those who entered retraining directly via other agencies, training and enterprise colleges, job centres, restart programmes etc.

Information about previous occupation and/or industry before entering a Government training scheme is not collected centrally.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications he has received for import licences for spent nuclear fuel shipments destined for THORP between the present time and 1 November.

Mr. Eggar: All shipments of spent fuel for reprocessing at THORP are made in accordance with the provisions of the Import of Goods (Control) Order 1954. Unless the spent fuel is consigned from the European Community a licence is required. The number of shipments to take place between the present time and 1 November is a matter for the company concerned.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, further to his statement on Monday 28 June, Official Report, column 691, on what evidence he based the figure of £5 billion as the amount of compensation which might be payable in respect of failure to operate THORP.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 8 July 1993]: Whether any money would need to be paid to customers if THORP did not operate, and if so how much, would depend on the circumstances, including those arising in the event of any breach of contract. British Nuclear Fuels plc has advised me that its legal advice is that the contracts in question are very robust.

BNFL has also advised me that the figure of £5 billion in question is the sum of the company's assessment of the economic detriment to the United Kingdom of abandoning THORP—about £1 billion—plus a further £4 billion, being an approximate estimate of the total amount already invested by overseas customers in THORP reprocessing—taking account of transport costs, interest and exchange rate movements.

If any customer were to make a claim against BNFL, it would be for the company to decide how to respond. In the absence of agreement, how much—if anything—would be payable would be determined in the courts in the light of the specific circumstances.

Unemployment

Mr. Pope: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to assist areas with rising unemployment, in particular areas of high concentrations of defence-related industry; what special programmes are available for such areas; and what plans he has to increase such assistance.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department provides advice on diversification through the "Changing Tack" regional seminar programme and associated help manual. In addition, areas which are adversely affected by defence changes may be able to benefit from the EC KONVER initiative, which will be worth some £15 million to the United Kingdom as a whole.

It is for firms themselves to build on their skills and technologies to achieve success in new markets. The DTI offers a wide range of schemes to help companies improve product planning, innovation processes and marketing skills.

Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 35, on representations from lessees, how many of the complainants who wrote to his Department about the treatment of lessees by Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. have been interviewed by officials of his Department.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In response to a recent request, my officials are proposing to meet representatives of the National Association of Inntrepreneurs Lessees in the near future.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assurances he has received from Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. concerning imposition of commercial full market rents on those of its tenants who remain subject to a beer tie.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The company has told my Department that its assessment of a market rent reflects the particular circumstances of individual public houses, including whether or not they are tied.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 July, Official Report, column 347-48, on Inntrepreneur's treatment of tenants, if he will list the assurances given to Ministers by Inntrepreneur Estates Ltd. in 1991 about the treatment of tenants, indicating to what extent they were confined to the introduction of procedures for long-term leases to be determined by independent arbitration where they could not be agreed with tenants.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The assurances were given to Ministers in 1991 by all major brewers. They related to the sympathetic treatment of tenants who might have real difficulties in taking on a long-term lease, such as those nearing retirement, as well as the introduction of independent arbitration procedures.

Grand Metropolitan Estates Ltd.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 July, Official Report, column 347-48, on discussions with Grand Metropolitan Estates Ltd., what were the undertakings given to the Director of Fair Trading by Grand Metropolitan Estates Ltd., following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the Elders IXL Ltd./Grand Metropolitan plc merger; and whether he is satisfied that these have been met.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have placed copies of the undertakings in the Library of the House. The majority of the undertakings were to come into effect in three stages, on 31 October 1992, 31 March 1995 and 31 March 1998. The parties have supplied the Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) with details of the measures they have taken to comply with the first of these stages. These have been considered carefully by the Office of Fair Trading and some points of detail are presently the subject of correspondence with the company. The DGFT's monitoring of compliance will be a continuous process.

Insolvency Service Executive Agency

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set the Insolvency Service executive agency for 1993-94.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have set the Insolvency Service the target of sustaining as far as possible the level of productivity in case administration which it achieved in 1992-93. I shall continue to expect it to bring proceedings for the disqualification of directors of failed companies where these are in the public interest and the submission of prosecution reports where there is evidence of criminal behaviour.

In addition, I have set the service the following quality of service targets for 1993-94:

to report to creditors on assets and liabilities within nine weeks in at least 75 per cent. of all cases; to hold the initial meeting of creditors within 12 weeks in at least 80 per cent. of all cases; to check and action at least 95 per cent. of payment requisitions within 10 days or by the due date; to submit reports within 10 months in at least 80 per cent. of cases where there is evidence of criminality; to submit disqualification reports within 15 months in at least 80 per cent. of cases where there is evidence of unfit conduct by directors.

These are based on an assumption of 40,000 new cases and the completion of 28,000 cases in 1993-94.

In addition, I have set the chief executive of the service the targets of replying within 10 working days to letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply, and producing commercial-style accounts for 1993-94, which will form the basis for the preparation of auditable accounts.

Small Businesses

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what definition of a small or medium-sized enterprise is used by his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: The size of a business needs to be considered in relation to its sector, to its stage of development as well as in the context of any particular scheme or initiative.

The DTI does not therefore use a single definition for all purposes. Instead DTI schemes targeted at small and medium-sized businesses adopt different definitions depending on their particular objectives.

For example, the small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART) competition is for individuals or businesses with fewer than 50 employees; whereas the enterprise initiative consultancy scheme is open to firms employing up to 500 employees. The loan guarantee scheme, on the other hand, makes use of both employee number and turnover and these differ from sector to sector as appropriate.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the maximum size of company that can receive support under the EUREKA programme in the United Kingdom; and what is the maximum size in each of the other participating countries.

Mr. McLoughlin: With regard to the restrictions on the size of company that can receive support from my Department for EUREKA projects, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, North-East (Mr. Butler) on 30 June 1993, Official Report, column 513. This outlines the changes that will occur after 1 September 1993.

The restrictions on the provision of funding for EUREKA projects in other countries is a matter for their individual Governments and disclosure of information is limited. Recent information that is available is presented below:

Country	Restrictions
Austria	None
Belgium	Priorities for innovative projects with likely economic/employment benefits
Denmark	None
Finland	Priorities for industrial funding especially SMEs and market orientated projects
France	Priorities for SMEs
Germany	Certain technology areas restricted
Greece	Priorities for large national industry and SMEs
Iceland	Priorities for industry, market orientated projects for national advantage
Ireland	Priorities for manufacturing industry. State enterprises not eligible
Italy	Government bodies ineligible. Research institutes must be associated with industry
Luxembourg	Luxembourg-based industrial partner necessary
Netherlands	Research institutes and universities ineligible
Norway	Universities and research institutes must constitute with national companies
Portugal	No information available
Spain	Priorities according to Spanish R and D priorities
Sweden	SMEs given priority
Switzerland	Industry ineligible
Turkey	No information available

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future participation of the United Kingdom in the EUREKA programme.

Mr. McLoughlin: EUREKA is an industry-led, bottom-up initiative, but I expect the United Kingdom to continue to be a major participant with United Kingdom organisations both initiating and joining new EUREKA projects. As part of its commitment to EUREKA the United Kingdom will take over the EUREKA chair in 1996-97.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the maximum size of company that can benefit from (a) the small firms loan guarantee scheme, (b) LINK, (c) advanced technology programmes, (d) SMART and (e) Support for products under research.

Mr. McLoughlin: The maximum size of company that can benefit from the small firms loan guarantee scheme, LINK, advanced technology programmes, SMART and SPUR is currently as follows:

Small firms loan guarantee scheme—companies of 200 employees or less, with the exception of the construction, mining and quarrying industries where the limit is 25, that also meet the following sectoral criteria:

- Agriculture, horticulture and service industries—maximum turnover of £500,000;
- Wholesaling—maximum turnover £2,000,000;
- Manufacturing—maximum turnover £3,000,000;
- Catering—maximum of two outlets;
- Road transport—maximum of five vehicles.

LINK and advanced technology programmes[1]—there is no size limit.

SMART—49 employees or fewer.

SPUR—500 employees or less.

[1] From 1 September 1993 advanced technology programmes will be closed to applications for new projects.

MINIS Returns

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish his Department's management information system for Ministers returns.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MINIS 93 returns were published today. A set has been placed in the Library of the House.

Environmental Schemes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the earliest possible date for the reopening of the environmental management options scheme, environmental technology innovation scheme and EUROENVIRON.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 July 1993]: The Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment are considering what future support might be appropriate to encourage innovation by industry in environmental technology. This support might include some elements of the three departmental schemes referred to by the hon. Member but no decision has yet been taken.

Postal Charges

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultation his Department has had with the Post Office covering the increase in charges for recorded, registered and special deliveries; and if he sought the advice of the Mail Users Association or business leaders about the increases.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 July 1993:] The pricing and specifications of Royal Mail's services are operational matters for the Post Office in consultation with the Post Office Users National Council. My Department has, however, made clear to the Post Office its view that, in line with Government policy, the prices charged for recorded, registered and special deliveries should reflect the true costs of these services and should not be subsidised by users of ordinary mail services.

HEALTH

Speech Therapy

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many speech therapists were employed in the NHS in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the table.

Whole-time equivalent speech therapists in England for September of each year

	Number
1987	2,630
1988	2,730
1989	2,810
1990	2,940
1991	3,020

Source: Department of Health non-medical work force census.

Notes:

1. The figures represent speech therapists directly employed in the hospital and community health service.
2. The figures for 1991 include staff in the national health service trusts.
3. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Women's Unit

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will publish (a) the programme of work for the women's unit and (b) the goals that have been achieved to date, following the establishment of Opportunity 2000;

(2) whether she has any plans to continue the women's unit beyond 1994.

Mr. Sackville: In September 1991 the Department of Health was the first Government Department to sign up to Opportunity 2000. The national health service goal is to take full advantage of the potential of women in the NHS so that the best health care can be provided for all members of the population.

To achieve its overall objectives, the national health service management executive has set eight goals for the NHS as the first milestone in the period to the year 2000. The NHSME wants to reach these goals by the end of 1994.

Numerical goals have been set to increase the numbers of women in senior management, accountancy, medical consultants and non-executive positions. Other goals address women's needs for personal and management development; flexible working and child care; and equal access to selection and promotion.

The programme of work for the NHS women's unit has been outlined in the NHS "Implementation Guide to Opportunity 2000", which will be placed in the Library, and 18 months into the campaign enocuraging progress has been made. The monitoring procedure, through local action plans, is ongoing and is constantly assessed by the unit. The future existence of the unit beyond 1994 will depend upon reviewing the progress made in achieving these goals.

Nursery Places

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many day care nursery places there were in each of the last five years for children under three years and from three years to compulsory school age; and what corresponding information for the latest available year she has for other EC member states.

Mr. Bowis: Centrally collected information on places in day nurseries in the public and independent sectors includes all places for children under five; information for the last five years is shown in the table.

Day nursery places available for children under 5
England

As at 31 March	Number
1987	60,733
1988	66,237
1989	75,378
1990	87,451
1991	106,068

Information about publicly funded child care services in European Community member states was included in a report from the European Parliament's Committee on Childcare and Equality of Opportunity, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Folic Acid

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made of whether folic acid is generally available as a medical product on prescription in both 4 mg and 0·5 mg strengths;

(2) what proposals she has to implement recommendation 8.3 of the expert advisory group on folic acid and neural tube defects that prescriptions of folic acid, when given for the prevention of NTD, should be free.

Mr. Sackville: Folic acid is not generally available as a licensed product on prescription in either 4 mg or 0·5 mg strengths. Prescriptions of folic acid 5 mg and of folic acid 0·4 mg with iron, are available free of charge to those who are entitled to prescription charge exemption, including pregnant women and those who qualify for charge remission under the national health service low-income scheme. There are no plans to extend these arrangements.

Passive Smoking

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates have been made of the annual number of people dying from causes related to passive smoking; what plans there are to ban smoking in public places to which children have access; and if she will list the diseases in children which can be caused by passive smoking.

Mr. Sackville: In its fourth report, published in 1988, the Independent Scientific Committee on Smoking and Health estimated the numbers of lung cancer deaths in non-smokers exposed to environmental tobacco smoke over most of their lives as "several hundred deaths per year". A copy of the report is available in the Library.

"The Health of the Nation" White Paper sets a target of 80 per cent. of public places being covered by effective smoking policies by 1994. The White Paper states that the Government would consider legislation on smoking in public places if voluntary progress is not maintained.

International scientific studies suggest that exposure of children to environmental tobacco smoke from parental smoking is causally associated with:

increased prevalence of respiratory symptoms of irritation, increased prevalence of middle ear effusion ("glue ear"), increased risk of lower respiratory tract infections (pneumonia, bronchitis and bronchiolitis) in infants and young children, additional episodes and increase of severity of asthma in children who already have the disease.

Doctors (Appeals)

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 481, if she will take steps to ensure that the information on which she and the Medical Advisory Committee consider appeals by doctors against penalties imposed on them is complete and free from errors of fact; and if she will propose amendments to the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations to allow the involvement of the original complainant in the process.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are satisfied that all the information provided by the complainant and the respondent in connection with the original investigation and any appeal, including sworn testimony in some cases, is available to the Medical Advisory Committee when it considers a penalty. We recently announced a full and independent review of all national health service complaints procedures under the chairmanship of Professor Allan Wilson and we look to his committee to advise us on whether any changes are needed.

Parent-held Records

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of parent-held records.

Mr. Bowis: We understand that the unit cost of the model record produced by the British Paediatric Association is between £1·05 and £1·08, depending upon the quantity ordered.

GP Fund Holders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the relative cost of general practitioner fund holding and joint commissioning by district health authorities and general practitioners.

Mr. Sackville: Both general practitioner fund holding and district health authority purchasing are improving value for money and services to patients.

Home Helps

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many home helps are employed by each local authority responsible for community care; and what is the ratio of home helps to population in each authority.

Mr. Bowis: The centrally available data on whole-time equivalent directly employed home helps, excluding home help organisers and assistant organisers, as at September 1992, the latest date for which this information is available, are shown in the table:

Contraception

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of general practitioners (a) provide a family planning service, (b) put in claims for the fitting of intra-uterine contraceptive devices in the last year, (c) provide condoms to patients, (d) hold the Joint Committee on Contraception certificate and (e) prescribed a diaphragm in the last year.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested.

As at 1 October 1992, 82 per cent. of general practitioners in England were contracted with family health services authorities to provide contraceptive services to patients on their own list. For the same date, 17 per cent. of GPs in England were contracted with FHSAs to provide contraceptive services to patients on any list.

Data from a biannual survey indicates that about half of the GPs in England put in claims for the fitting of IUCDs for the six-month period ending 30 September 1992.

Hospitals (Complaints)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the number of recorded complaints about hospital services in each of the health regions in England and Wales during the last 12 months.

Dr. Mawhinney: The latest information available is shown in the table.

Under the patients charter, launched in October 1991, we made it clear that patients have the right to have any complaint about national health services investigated.
Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide increased resources to enable CHCs to fulfil their role in representing public opinion and monitoring the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for regions, as establishing authorities for community health councils, to ensure that they are properly resourced. The national health service management executive wrote to regions last year reminding them of this obligation.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to ensure that all regional health authorities make all parts of community health council premises used by either members of the public or council members accessible to people with disabilities, with additional funding to complete such works or increased rental for alternative premises being provided in addition to the annual budget of the community health council; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. It is for individual regional health authorities to provide community health councils with suitable accommodation.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will introduce legislation for new statutory duties for community health councils giving them comprehensive monitoring rights over all services provided for NHS patients and rights of consultation and access to (a) district health authority units, (b) NHS trusts, (c) family health services authority services including general practitioner fund holders and (d) situations where health and nursing care are provided within the (i) voluntary, (ii) independent and (iii) private sectors; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will introduce legislation to give powers to community health councils to inspect residential and nursing homes; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to introduce legislation to give community health councils new statutory duties or powers.

Under current legislation, CHCs play a valuable role in helping to monitor services to national health service patients. Recent guidance in relation to monitoring of the patients charter has repeated the importance of this role.

CHCs have statutory rights of access to NHS premises. They must also be consulted by health authorities about proposals for any substantial variations in service. Where services to NHS patients are provided by the independent sector, purchasers can make clear in the contracts concerned the CHC's role in monitoring services.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department issues to regional health authorities regarding the time scale for setting budgets for community health councils; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Midwives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives practise in each zone in London.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of midwifery staff in 1992 given as whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not currently available. Data for September 1992 will be available later in the year.

London Hospitals

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has in relation to trust funds of the London hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: The trust funds of London hospitals are a matter for the trustees of the funds and the Charity Commissioners.

Paediatric Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the number of (a) paediatric specialist/consultants and (b) paediatric beds per 1,000 population in each EC country.

Mr. Bowis: In England in 1991 there were, 0·15 paediatric consultants and 1·76 beds in children wards per 1,000 children under age 15. Equivalent information for other European Community countries is not available centrally.

Splenectomy

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she has commissioned into the desirability of vaccinating people who have undergone splenectomy against pneumonia and septicaemia.

Mr. Sackville: None. We have recommended to all doctors that people who have had a splenectomy should be vaccinated with the pneumococcal vaccine.

Inner London Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of (a) the current level of demand and (b) the current level of unmet demand in inner London for services provided by (i) community psychiatric nurses, (ii) health visitors, (iii) other community nursing staff and (iv) general practitioners; and what assessment has been made of the increased level of demand if the recommendations in the Tomlinson report are followed.

Dr. Mawhinney: The assessment of local health needs is a matter for district health authorities and family health service authorities who will work together closely in inner London to tailor services to local demand. As we outlined in "Making London Better", the London initiative zone will be a focus for the development of primary and community services in London. LIZ is already enabling assessed needs to be met through a wide range of projects. We have provided an additional £43·5 million for investment on improving primary and community health services in this financial year.

School Nurses

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued as to the requirement for schools to have school nurses; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Under section 5 of the National Health Service Reorganisation Act 1977 district health authorities and other purchasers of health services for children are required to arrange for the medical examination of pupils in attendance at schools maintained by local education authorities and at grant maintained schools. The Department is preparing a good practice guide on community child health services including school health services. Later this year we plan to send a consultative draft to health and education authorities, professional bodies, and special interest groups inviting their comments.

Broadgreen Accident and Emergency Unit

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has now received about the closure of Broadgreen accident and emergency unit; how many beds will be lost; what compensatory provision for accident and emergency patients will be made at the Liverpool Royal hospital; and what it will cost to provide these extra beds.

Mr. Sackville: We have received 36 representations from hon. Members, approximately 23,000 letters from members of the public and a number of petitions. Liverpool health authority's consultation document proposing the closure of Broadgreen accident and emergency unit suggests that increasing the efficiency of Liverpool's hospitals to the national average in 1990 will enable services to be delivered from 500 fewer beds across the whole Liverpool conurbation. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is currently considering Liverpool health authority's proposals and will take all factors into account before making a final decision. Under those proposals, A and E services currently provided at Broadgreen will be covered by improved facilities at the Royal Liverpool, Aintree and Whiston hospitals. For more information, the hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. H. Tod, chairman of Liverpool health authority.

Job Descriptions

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 614, in what instances the provision of a job description to job applicants is regarded as beneficial.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is for each national health service employer to decide.

St. Bartholomew's

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the City organisations that have written in opposing the closure of St. Bartholomew's hospital's accident and emergency department; on what dates Ministers in her Department have visited St. Bartholomew's hospital in the last year; and how much time was spent on each visit to the nearest hour.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received a number of letters regarding the accident and emergency department at St. Bartholomew's hospital, some of which have been received from City organisations. I visited Bart's hospital on 9 September, 5 November, 21 and 27 January. Records were not kept of the time spent.

Contact Lenses

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the charge made for contact lenses prescribed by the hospital eye service for each year since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: The charges are shown in the table.

1 September 1979	6·15
1 April 1981	8·30
1 April 1982	7·90
1 April 1984	9·40
1 April 1985	25·00
1 September 1988	26·50
1 April 1990	28·85
1 April 1991	32·15
1 August 1991	32·80
1 April 1992	35·90
1 April 1993	36·90

Note—No changes were made in 1980, 1983, 1986, 1987 and 1989 from previous years.

Psychiatric Patients

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress on the inquiry into homicides and suicides committed by discharged psychiatric patients announced on 23 October 1991.

Mr. Bowis: The confidential inquiry into homicides and suicides by mentally ill people being conducted by the Royal College of Psychiatrists has commenced and is identifying cases of homicide by mentally ill people under the care of or recently discharged by the specialist psychiatric services. Of the 68 cases reviewed to date, 20 fall within the inquiry's remit and a further 12 are being followed up for clarification. Clinical staff are being approached in confidence for detailed information.

The inquiry is also looking at suicides by mentally ill people and has received a positive response. In some areas audit mechanisms have been set up to identify cases and give details of events surrounding the suicide. Collation of information began on 1 June this year when the inquiry has been notified of 55 cases for follow-up.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many internal inquiries have been conducted in the last five years by local authorities, health authorities, social services inspectorates and the courts into circumstances in which mentally ill people have been discharged into the community under the statutory after care provisions in section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983, subsequently to commit serious injury, assault, manslaughter or murder; and how many have been made public.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis her Department arrives at an appropriate prescription charge for NHS medicines; and to which votes the revenues raised are appropriated in aid.

Dr. Mawhinney: The prescription charge is an amount which successive Governments have thought it right, for those who can afford to do so, to contribute towards the cost of family health services. The revenue raised by charges is appropriated in aid of class XII, vote 2 and class XII, vote 1 of the main supply estimates 1993-94.

Medicines Commission

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to receive the annual report of the Medicines Commission for 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received the report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of section 5(2) of the Medicines Act 1968.

Bound volumes have been placed in the Library containing the 1992 reports of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials, the British Pharmacopoeia Commission and the Veterinary Products Committee.

We are glad to pay tribute to the valuable work done by the distinguished members of the Medicines Act advisory bodies and thank them warmly for the time and effort which they contribute to the public interest in this most important field.

Food Safety

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she has taken to ensure that the codes of practice issued under section 40 of the Food Safety Act 1990 are consistently and sensibly enforced; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: On 6 May the Department wrote to all chief environmental health officers in England reminding them that food safety inspections should be conducted in accordance with code of practice No. 9 on food hygiene inspections and urging them to concentrate their efforts where significant risks are posed.

The Department will shortly be consulting on a revision of this code and code of practice No. 5 on the issue of improvement notices to improve and clarify them. in addition, on 25 May, my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food met representatives of the local authority associations, the Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Food and Trading Standards and the Institution of Environmental Health Officers to emphasise the importance Ministers attach to a sensible, risk-related approach to the enforcement of food law. The Department investigates with the local authorities concerned all cases brought to its attention where there is a suggestion that the law has been applied in an over-zealous way.

Nutritional Therapists

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recognition her Department has accorded to the Register of Nutritional Therapists Ltd.; what representations her Department has received about claims to official recognition made by this body; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have recently been made aware of the claim that the title "The Register of Nutritional Therapists" has been approved by the Department of Health. We are taking up this matter with the company concerned and I shall write to my hon. Friend when the outcome of our inquiries is known.

Child Residential Care

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost to a local authority each year to keep a child in residential care.

Mr. Bowis: The centrally held national information is the direct revenue cost, net of related income, of keeping a child in a community home or registered voluntary home, excluding the cost of field social work support, central administration etc. This was £29,016 per year for the year ended 31 March 1991.

Adoption

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost to a local authority of arranging for the adoption of a child.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Fellowship Charitable Foundation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions her Department has held, and with whom, regarding the security and welfare of users of establishments currently run by the Fellowship Charitable Foundation.

Mr. Bowis: Our guidance, LAC(93)6, to local authorities stresses the value of having contingency plans to cover events such as unplanned home closures. The aim is to enable home closures to be handled with minimum disruption to individuals. Guidance on the practicalites of such contingency planning was produced earlier this year by the community care support force and will be placed in the Library.

If, despite these measures, a residential care home suddenly closes and alternative accommodation is not available, the local authority should make residential care arrangements for the residents under its duty under the National Assistance Act 1948 to provide residential care to people who are in need of care and attention which is not otherwise available.

Dentistry

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much the minimum charge for dental treatment has risen in (a) cash and (b) real terms in each year since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no minimum charge for national health service dental treatment. All treatment for those under 18 years is free, and 21 per cent. of adult courses of treatment are provided with full or partial relief from charges.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the location in England of emergency national health service dental units which are open at weekends; what is the average waiting time for a patient at each of these units; what guidance is given as to the recommended weekend opening hours and staffing levels of such units; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The 43 family health services authorities providing emergency dental services at weekends are shown in the table. These arrangements provide cover for patients in 84 family health services authority localities. Information on the average waiting time is not available centrally. Opening hours and staffing levels are matters for local decision. In addition, emergency treatment can also be provided by hospital accident and emergency departments.

Contraceptives

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration the Government have given to imposing prescription charges on contraceptives.

Mr. Sackville: We have no present plans to do so.

Prescription Charges

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much prescription charges have risen in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms between 1979 and 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney: On 1 April 1993, prescription charges had risen by £4·05 cash and £1·53 in real terms since 1979. The charge remains substantially less than the average total cost of a prescribed item to the national health service. Only one in five precribed items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors now attracts a charge, compared with two in five in 1979.

Drugs Projects

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all drugs residential and rehabilitation projects by borough in the Greater London area; how many places each project has; what was the cost of each project in 1991-92; and what was the budget for 1992-93.

Mr. Bowis: Comprehensive information about residential and rehabilitation projects for drug misusers is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the Standing Conference on Drug Abuse, the national umbrella organisation for drug misuse services, which publishes a directory of services available to drug misusers by county and by London borough.

Steroids

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many successful prosecutions have been made relating to the sale and/or distribution of anabolic steroids in each of the last three years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 12 July 1993]: There has been one successful Medicines Act prosecution since 1991.

DEFENCE

Skyship 600

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role has been designed for the Skyship 600 airship ordered by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: A Skyship 600 airship has been supplied to the MOD by Westinghouse Surveillance System Ltd. for a series of trials to assess the suitability of airships for a variety of possible roles. Until these trials have been completed and the results assessed, no decisions can be made on any future operational roles that airships might undertake.

Service Training

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the budgeting implications of reduction in numbers of service personnel involved in training in each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: Following the introduction of the new management strategy, data is now collected by budgetary area—as shown in table 2.2 of Defence Statistics 1993—and not by programme. It is not possible to identify separately the budgetary implications of the reductions in numbers of service personnel involved in training without disproportionate cost.

Redundant Trainers

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to ensure that skilled trainers declared redundant by the armed services are used to their best advantage in the civilian economy.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence provides a comprehensive training and resettlement service for all service leavers, including redundees. This is designed primarily to assist in the move to a second career, and includes advice on the job market and the skills required. Many service leavers not only possess a wide range of skills but will also have several years experience as instructors, trainers and teachers. In addition to the wider marketing of their potential through the "Access to Excellence" campaign, a number of specific initiatives are being pursued in conjunction with the Departments of Employment and Education to promote their value as instructors and trainers for employment opportunities through the training and enterprise councils and within the new general national vocational qualification scheme.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Spanish battalion in UNPROFOR II will be withdrawn; what changes have been or will be made to the area of responsibility of the United Kingdom contingent as a result; if additional logistic support will be required; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The duration of individual nations' contributions to UNPROFOR is a matter for the UN and the nations concerned, which we would expect to make public any such decision. Currently there are no plans to change the areas of responsibility of the various national contingents to UNPROFOR Bosnia-Herzegovina command, and consequently no requirement for additional logistic support.

Burma

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training facilities Her Majesty's Government currently offer to military personnel from Burma.

Mr. Hanley: None: The inclusion of Burma in the list of countries that receive military training provided in the answer my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) gave the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 27 May, at column 681, referred to a civilian who was due to attend a military medical course, but who in the event did not turn up.

Red Arrows

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current annual cost of maintaining the Red Arrows RAF formation flying team.

Mr. Hanley: The full accounting which takes into account station overheads cost of maintaining and supporting the RAF Red Arrows aerobatic team for financial year 1992-93 was some £17,000,000. The cash cost, which comprises pay, aviation fuel and travel and subsistence, was some £2,000,000.

Airborne Warning and Communication System

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what limitations AWACS has in tracking slow-moving propellor-driven light aircraft; if he will make a statement on the reasons for these limitations and on their effects on the ability of the international community to police unauthorised air traffic over Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: AWACS was designed and developed to detect fast-moving military aircraft, larger than those suspected of violating the no-fly zone, flying beyond and below the coverage of surface radars. AWACS' performance in detecting small, slow-moving targets is less effective than for its primary role. The ability to detect these slow-moving targets is further inhibited by the "radar shadow" afforded by the mountainous terrain. Details of suspected violations are reported to the United Nations in a number of ways and the limitations of AWACS does not have a material effect on monitoring the operation of the no-fly zone.

Chemical and Biological Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many committees are run by the Chemical and Biological Defence Board of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council; what are the titles of each committee; how long each committee has existed; how many people sit on each committee; and how many of these people are from universities and institutions of higher education.

Mr. Hanley: The Chemical and Biological Defence Board of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council has three committees reporting to it. These are:

(i) The Biomedical Sciences Committee which has been in existence since 1 January 1992 and has nine members of whom seven are from universities and institutions of higher education.

(ii) The Microbiology and Biotechnology Committee which has been in existence since 1 January 1992 and has nine members of whom five are from universities and institutions of higher education.

(iii) The Physical Sciences Committee which has been in existence since 1 January 1981 and has 10 members all of whom are from universities of higher education.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times the Government have reviewed their policy concerning the production of (a) chemical weapons and (b) biological weapons since 1979; and how many times United Kingdom Defence Ministers have discussed this policy with the Defense Secretaries of the United States Government during that time.

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom abandoned its offensive biological capability after the second world war and its offensive chemical capability in the 1950s and that remains the Government's policy. Since then the United Kingdom's policy has concentrated on implementation of an effective defence against the use of such weapons and international agreements on their control, destruction and eventual abolition. The Government consider their policy on these latter issues on a regular basis, and have a long-standing and continuing dialogue with the United States authorities. The issues are discussed at ministerial level when necessary.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contingency plans have been considered or drawn up by the Ministry of Defence for the supply of chemicals and biological weapons from its allies in the event of an emergency, since 1963.

Mr. Hanley: The Ministry of Defence has had no contingency plans to obtain chemical or biological weapons from its allies since the United Kingdom abandoned its offensive capabilities in chemical weapons in the 1950s and biological weapons after the second world war.

Depleted Uranium Shells

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communication he has received since 1 June from (a) the Traumatic After Care Trust and (b) Galloway United Against Radiation Danger in regard to the health risks posed by the testing and use of depleted uranium shells.

Mr. Hanley: My Department has no record of receiving any communication from Galloway United Against Radiation Danger since 1 June. The directors of the Trauma After Care Trust wrote to me on 8 July, but their letter does not specifically mention such health risks.

Defence Statistics

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many copies of his Department's United Kingdom Defence Statistics 1993 have been printed; at what cost; and to whom it has been distributed.

Mr. Hanley: A total of 9,300 copies of United Kingdom Defence Statistics 1993 were printed. The costs of printing and publication were borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which aims to recover its costs from sales revenue.

In addition to commercial sales, copies were distributed widely within the Ministry of Defence and the armed forces, to British embassies and high commissions, other Government Departments, the Libraries of both Houses, the House of Commons Vote Office, members of the press and academics.

Expenditure

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of national income goes on military spending in (a) Britain, (b) Germany and (c) Japan; and what is the European average.

Mr. Hanley: Defence expenditure for the United Kingdom and Germany in 1992 as a proportion of gross domestic product was 4·1 per cent. and 2·2 per cent. respectively. Japan is expected to devote around 1 per cent. of its GDP to defence in 1992-93. Total defence expenditure by European NATO countries in 1992 was some 2·7 per cent. of their aggregate gross domestic product.

Guard service

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of his Department's new guard service and of its performance relative to previous arrangements.

Mr. Hanley: The MOD Guard Service (MGS) was implemented on 1 October 1992 to bring together a variety of guarding grades locally recruited at some 300 different sites under a wide variety of conditions of service. While the guards had given good service and provided security which was generally high, the new service is designed to produce a more professional body with commonality of uniform; professional standards; pay; conditions of service; staffing structure; and centralised training. The result is an improved performance over the previous arrangements. For the future, improvements to MGS training together with the introduction of recently formulated national vocational qualifications for guarding will further enhance the high standards already achieved.

Bangladesh

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there have been any secondees from the British Army to military training establishments in Bangladesh in 1992 or 1993; and what plans there are for such secondments in future.

Mr. Hanley: There were no British Army secondees in the period, although there was a tri-service training team on loan service in Bangladesh until October 1992. There are no immediate plans for any secondments in future.

Mr. Meacher To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for inviting Bangladeshi military personnel to attend development and technical training courses in British military establishments.

Mr. Hanley: Bangladesh bids for places on courses in British military establishments, in a similar way to other countries. Bangladeshi students attend military courses on a variety of subjects. Details of training provided are confidential.

PRIME MINISTER

Referendums

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the dates since 1979 on which Government policy on the desirability of a referendum has been expressed by the Prime Minister in an official capacity; and whether the Prime Minister was in favour in the cases listed in his parliamentary answer, Official Report, 28 November 1991, column 608.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 28 November 1991 at columns 613-14. I supported the views expressed on behalf of the Government by my predecessor. Since then there have been four occasions, all of which referred to European integration, on which I have made the Government's views clear: 3 June 1992, Official Report, column 830; 18 June 1992, Official Report, column 1037; 16 March 1993, Official Report, column 167; and 30 March 1993, Official Report, column 156.

Tokyo Communiqué

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what specific steps he intends to take to (a) encourage the multilateral development banks to focus more intensively on sustainable development and (b) incorporate environmental appraisals into project preparation and to make them publicly available, as stated at paragraph 8 of the G7 communiqué from Tokyo on 9 July.

The Prime Minister: Following the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in June 1992 the Government have supported a wide range of improvements in this area. For the International Development Association of the World bank, details are set out in the report on the 10th replenishment which the House approved on 12 July. Negotiations on the sixth replenishment of the African Development Fund and the capital resources of the Inter-American and Asian development banks are currently in progress. We are also actively working for agreement by the World bank board to proposals to make more information on its projects publicly available, including environmental assessments: a decision is expected soon.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he has given to the appointment of a senior Minister as (a) a Minister with special responsibility for young people and (b) a Minister with special responsibility for older people; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his similar question on 14 November 1991 at column 639 about designating a Minister with responsibility for young people. Similarly, issues facing older people are not specific to that age group. Appointing a Minister with special responsibility to look after such groups would diffuse responsibilities for particular aspects of policy which presently fall clearly on each departmental Minister.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made towards holding a further meeting of the London conference on former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The steering committee of the international conference on the former Yugoslavia met at senior official level in Geneva on 1 July. There are currently no plans to hold a further meeting, at either official or ministerial level, but the co-chairmen are keeping this under review.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made in placing monitors on the border between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Following the adoption of United Nations Security Council resolution 838, the Secretary-General submitted to the Security Council a report on the options for deployment of international border monitors on the border between Bosnia-Herzegovina and Serbia/Montenegro. Following full discussion of the report in the Security Council, the President of the Council replied, asking the Secretary-General to investigate whether the states involved were willing to co-operate in the deployment of monitors and, if so, which member states of the United Nations would be prepared to contribute monitors. We await the outcome of these soundings.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) why publication of information about population with disabilities has been discontinued in the report, "Households Below Average Income";

(2) if he will ensure that the next "Households Below Average Income" report makes specific reference to people with disabilities and includes statistical data covering disabled pensioners and recipients of disability benefits and invalidity benefits who are under pensionable age.

Mr. Burt: Information on people with disabilities was discontinued as part of the "Households Below Average Income" (HBAI) report following recommendation 4.34 of the HBAI stocktaking report published and placed in the Library in November 1991.

The family expenditure survey, the data source for the HBAI report, does not record whether an individual is disabled and the stocktaking report, expressed concern about the reliability of the data for sick and disabled people.

There are no plans to change the information provided in the next HBAI statistics.

Incomes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the increase in real incomes for the top decile of the income range between 1979 and the latest available year before and after housing costs.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 8 July at columns 214-15.

Pensioners Living Abroad

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has any plans to change the basis on which United Kingdom retirement pensions and widows' benefits are paid to people living abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to change the basis on which United Kingdom retirement pensions and widows' benefits are paid to people living abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: In general, annual upratings of those benefits are not paid outside the United Kingdom, but some 13,500 pensioners and widows living abroad have erroneously been awarded benefit in excess of their legal entitlement, most between 1988 and August 1991. All new awards since August 1991 have been made on the correct legal basis. But there are about 10,500 continuing overpayments; some are only a few pence a week and the average is about £10·80 a week. The total cost is estimated at £33 million between 1985-86 and 1992-93.

We shall not be taking steps to reduce those pensions that are being overpaid since the past overpayments are not recoverable under section 71 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 and we are ensuring that United Kingdom pensioners who have received a certain level of benefit, albeit at too high a rate in existing law, should not now suffer a reduction for reasons which are no fault of their own. For that reason, we intend to introduce an amendment to the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations which will provide a legal basis for maintaining these payments at their present rate.

Expenditure

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing what expenditure on social security would be in real terms in each year since 1973-74 if the number of pensioners, sick, unemployed, widows and families, etcetera had remained unchanged at 1973-74 levels; and what proportion of the gross domestic product such spending accounted for in each year.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to provide the information requested.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate what expenditure on (a) housing benefit, (b) council tax benefit and (c) the social fund is attributable to the rise in unemployment.

Mr. Scott: Information in the form requested is not available. However, in 1992-93 expenditure on housing benefit and community charge benefit for unemployed people in Great Britain was £2,032 million. Awards from the social fund to unemployed people in Great Britain amounted to £115 million excluding cold weather payments. Information about cold weather payments is not available.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing social security expenditure as a proportion of gross domestic product in each year since 1963.

Mr. Burt: The percentage figures for each year from 1963-64 until 1977-78 are in the table. Those for subsequent years are shown in table 4 of the Department of Social Security publication "The Growth of Social Security".

Years	Benefit expenditure as a percentage of GDP
1963-64	6·3
1964-65	6·0
1965-66	6·6
1966-67	6·6
1967-68	8·1
1968-69	8·0
1969-70	7·4
1970-71	7·2
1971-72	7·5
1972-73	7·4
1973-74	7·4
1974-75	7·7
1975-76	8·1
1976-77	8·6
1977-78	8·9

Legal Aid

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 337, if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance notes issued to assessment officers assessing financial eligibility in civil legal aid cases.

Mr. Burt: Copies of the relevant guidance have been placed in the Library.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proposals he has for introducing legislation to disregard attendance on employment training courses by those entitled to adult dependency supplements to their invalidity benefit from before the introduction of the all-or-nothing earnings rule on 15 September 1985, for the purpose of protecting existing beneficiaries;

(2) on what date extra-statutory payments were cancelled for those previously entitled to adult dependency increases on top of their invalidity benefit and who have lost that entitlement due to attendance on an employment training course; what plans he has to issue new instructions restoring the right to make extra-statutory payments to this category of benefit claimants; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his current estimate of the number of claimants of invalidity benefit supplemented by adult dependency allowance dating back to before 15 September 1985, who have lost their allowance due to attendance on employment training courses since 1988; and how many successful claims there have been for extra-statutory payments equalling the lost adult dependency allowance and to what total estimated value.

Mr. Scott: Information on the number of invalidity benefit recipients with an adult dependency increase where entitlement ended due to attendance on employment training courses since 1988 is unavailable. By April 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, there had been five successful claims for extra-statutory payments to a total value of £2,477·70. Instructions to staff to make extra-statutory payments in affected cases were cancelled in error in January 1993, but are being reinstated today. The Government intend to bring forward legislation to place these payments on a statutory footing when a suitable opportunity arises.

National Insurance

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of changing the national insurance threshold into a tax allowance in (a) 1993-94 and (b) 1994-95.

Mr. Hague: If employees did not pay contributions on that part of their earnings which falls below the lower earnings limit the cost would be as follows:

	(£ billion)
	In year	Full year
1993-94	0·9	1·0
1994-95	0·9	1·0

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much revenue would be raised by abolishing the national insurance ceiling in (a) 1993-94 and (b) 1994-95.

Mr. Hague: If the upper earnings limit for employees' contributions was abolished, the additional revenue yield in a full year would be about £2·7 billion for 1993-94 and £3·5 billion for 1994-95. If the upper profits limit for self-employed class 4 contributions was also abolished, the additional yield would be about £0·4 billion for 1993-94 and £0·5 billion for 1994-95.

Over 3 million people would have to pay extra national insurance contributions as a result.

Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of raising the basic state retirement pension to a level at which income support and housing benefit would cease to be payable to pensioners; and by how much the standard rate of income tax would have to be raised to raise the same sum.

Mr. Hague [pursuant to his reply, 21 June 1993, column 61]: The information was incorrect and incomplete due to a transcription error. The correct information is as follows:

The additional cost of increasing the basic retirement pension to the higher pensioner rate of income support would be £3·4 billion. This represents a full year extra cost in 1993-94 net of savings made by the consequent reduction in spending on income-related benefits.

The basic rate of income tax would have to be increased by 3 pence to raise this amount.

It is not possible to estimate a level of retirement pension at which all pensioners cease to be eligible for housing benefit as entitlement depends on the level of rent paid, and rents vary widely. As an illustration of the cost involved we estimate that it would cost £11·2 billion net in 1993-94 to increase retirement pensions to a level where income support and housing benefit entitlement would cease for pensioners paying the average local authority weekly rent paid by pensioners in receipt of housing benefit—£26·64 in May 1991, the latest available figures.

The basic rate of income tax would have to be increased by 8p to raise this amount.

Note: The estimated amounts of increases in the basic rate of income tax have been rounded to the next whole penny.

SCOTLAND

NHS Trusts

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he gives to hospital trusts on the amount of money they should spend on the production of business plans.

Mr. Stewart: No specific guidance has been issued. It is for trusts to decide on such matters having regard to the overall principle of obtaining best value for money.

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to set targets for Caledonian MacBrayne.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has decided to set the following targets for Caledonian MacBrayne for the year 1993-94. The company will be required to achieve as a financial target that fares income should cover at least 59 per cent. of operating costs, including depreciation on a replacement cost basis and provision for an 8 per cent. forgone rate of return on capital. As an efficiency target, the company will be asked not to exceed a maximum unit cost of £1·04 per passenger car unit capacity kilometre. As a quality of service target, the company will be asked to achieve a figure of 96·5 per cent. of sailings arriving on time, excluding sailings which are delayed or cancelled for safety reasons, for example, adverse weather conditions. My right hon. Friend considers that the setting of these targets will provide a clear framework for the operation of the company, consistent with the objectives of securing continued improvement in operational efficiency and standards of service.

Fisheries Protection Agency

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the annual report and accounts for 1992-93 of the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency.

Mr. Lang: I have today published the report, copies of which have been laid in both Houses.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects Scottish Homes to publish the main report of the Scottish house condition survey.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that Scottish Homes will publish the Report of the Scottish house condition survey on Tuesday 20 July and I have arranged for copies to be deposited in the House Libraries and sent to all Scottish Members.

Police

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland; when he will issue his consultation document reviewing police conduct and performance procedures in the Scottish police service.

Mr. Lang: I am today issuing a paper which invites comments on proposals for new procedures to deal with unsatisfactory performance and unacceptable conduct in the police service. I believe these arrangements would be in keeping with the changes which have been, and are being made, to personnel management in the police service. Some of my proposals are drawn from those contained in a similar consultation paper issued by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. My proposals which are designed to modernise and simplify existing procedures in line with best management practice, build on the excellent work already being done by the police themselves to improve the quality of their service to the public.

I have invited comments on the paper by 31 August 1993 and shall welcome views from everyone with an interest in these issues.

Copies of the paper are available in the Library and in the Vote Office.

Public Bodies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to whom each of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Scottish Office is responsible; whether the public bodies or their members in each case are subject to (a) surcharge, (b) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (c) scrutiny by the Audit Commission or National Audit Office, (d) the statutory provisions for open government which apply to local authorities, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charters; and whether the chairpersons and members of the boards of each of these bodies are required to declare an interest.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 6 July 1993]: The day-to-day management responsibility of executive NDPBs depends on the statutory or other arrangements relevant to the individual NDPB. All are responsible through me to Parliament for the proper management of any Government funds made available to them. In respect of the other matters referred to in the question: (a) I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster) on 24 June at column 273; (b) those bodies subject to the scrutiny of the Parliamentary Commissioner are listed in the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967 as amended by the Parliamentary and Health Service Commissioners Act 1987; (c) the audit regime of NDPBs is listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies", which is available in the Library of the House and in certain cases the Comptroller and Auditor General is able to undertake other scrutiny of NDPBs; (d) the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 as amended by the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985 does not apply to NDPBs; (e) performance indicators are often published in the annual report of the body and will normally be contained in the management statement for the body concerned; a selection are included in my Department's departmental report; (f) the citizens charter applies to NDPBs. Scottish Office executive NDPBs are encouraged to fulfil the provisions of the citizens charter and many are already doing so. Management statements will contain commitments to citizens charter principles. In addition, NDPBs will in due course produce charter standard statements.

I take into account the question of interests of chairmen and members of the boards of executive NDPBs when I am making appointments to a body. Arrangements for the declaration of interest of members on specific items under consideration by the body are normal practice; detailed arrangements vary depending on the body.

Parliamentary Boundary Commission

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last consulted the leaders of the political parties in Scotland represented in Parliament regarding appointments made by him to the Parliamentary Boundary Commission of Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 9 July 1993]: In December 1988.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he appointed (a) Mr. A. R. Napier and (b) Professor U. A. Wannop to be members of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Scotland; and what is the duration of the appointment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 9 July 1993]: Professor U. A. Wannop was first appointed a member of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Scotland on 6 June 1983 and Mr. A. R. Napier on 2 May 1985. Both members were subsequently reappointed in December 1988 for a period of five years until 31 December 1993.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

2. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on the balance between direct and indirect taxation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Since 1979 the share of total tax revenue raised as direct tax has fallen by 4 per cent. The share of tax revenue raised as direct tax from individuals has fallen by over 7 per cent.

25. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies have been undertaken into the relationship between the lowering of taxation levels and the amount of revenue generated by those taxes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Changes in the tax system over the last 14 years have lowered marginal tax rates and have encouraged the enterprise and initiative on which a strong growing economy and buoyant tax revenues depend.

Redundant Workers (Counselling)

14. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his proposal to introduce tax relief for companies offering counselling to redundant workers with two years or more service.

Mr. Dorrell: The great majority of the representations we have received have welcomed the proposed relief for outplacement counselling.

Balance of Payments

15. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the balance of payments deficit.

23. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the balance of payments.

Mr. Portillo: The key to reducing the balance of payments deficit is improving our competitiveness. The Government have facilitated this by getting inflation down to its lowest for a generation. Unit wage costs in manufacturing are falling while they are rising in many of our main competitors. The Government have also taken specific action to assist exporters, such as extending Export Credits Guarantee Department cover.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

16. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial implications to the Treasury arise out of the delayed consultation on the commissioning of THORP.

Mr. Portillo: British Nuclear Fuels plc has assessed the impact on its profits of a delay to commissioning THORP to be £2 million per week. The level of profits is a consideration in determining the level of dividend BNFL will pay to the Government as its shareholder.

Unemployment

17. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on public spending of Government policies on unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Government plan to spend £2·8 billion in 1993-94 on training, enterprise and vocational education programmes to help around 1½ million unemployed people back into work. The Budget included £125 million—net cost—to provide an additional 100,000 opportunities.

Value Added Tax

18. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about levels of VAT receipts.

Sir John Cope: VAT receipts in the last financial year, 1992-93 are estimated to have been £37·0 billion. They are forecast to total £39·9 billion in 1993-94.

30. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue will be raised by the extension of VAT to fuel bills.

Sir John Cope: The estimated revenue yield is £950 million in 1994-95 and £2,300 million in 1995-96.

Pools Betting Duty

19. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future of the reduction in pools betting duty introduced to enable football clubs to continue to fund capital works in line with the Taylor report.

Sir John Cope: In the 1990 Budget pool betting duty was reduced from 42·5 per cent. to 40 per cent. for five years to help finance the implementation of the Taylor report and in particular the achievement of all-seating. The former Chancellor, the right hon. Member for Kingston-upon-Thames (Mr. Lamont), made it clear that the Government will be prepared to extend the reduction to the year 2000 provided the football leagues and football clubs produce satisfactory plans to finance their own contribution to further necessary ground improvements. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage will shortly be discussing the position with us on the basis of information supplied by the Football Trust and the clubs themselves, in support of an extension of the reduction.

Bank of England

20. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of an independent Bank of England.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor has made it clear that he intends to listen to the debate that is now going on, so we have not made a final assessment yet.

Business Expansion Scheme

21. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Cancellor of the Exchequer how many companies set up under the business expansion scheme have achieved substantial growth in profitability, growth and productivity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not available. BES has served its purpose well over the years. A wide range of companies have been helped and the scheme has contributed to a climate in which the role of entrepreneurship has been recognised. We are firmly committed to supporting small firms through a range of policies.

Bank of England

22. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to encourage public debate about the future role of the Bank of England.

Sir John Cope: I am not sure any encouragement is needed from either my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor or me. We are particularly interested in the contribution my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) and other hon. members who serve on the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee are making in their inquiry into the future role of the Bank of England.

Nationalised Industries

24. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what comparative studies have been undertaken of the systems for providing capital financing for nationalised industries among EC countries.

Sir John Cope: While we are generally aware of other countries' arrangements, the Government have not undertaken a comprehensive study.

Other countries are following the United Kingdom's lead in privatising nationalised industries.

Income Tax

26. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in the current financial year calling for an increase in income taxes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a number of representations concerning the rates of income tax; some of these favour an increase in the rates and some favour a decrease. It remains the Government's objective to move towards a basic rate of 20 per cent. when it is prudent to do so.

Health Expenditure

27. Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much public spending on health has changed in real terms since 1978-79; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: This year we plan to spend 61·4 per cent. more on the national health service, in real terms, than we did in 1978-79.

Stamp Duty

28. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total revenue from stamp duty on the sale of houses and flats in the latest quarter for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: A provisional figure for receipts of stamp duty on all transactions of land and other property except for shares in the first quarter of 1993 is £150·9 million.

Public Spending

29. Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the public spending planning total for 1994-95.

Mr. Portillo: The new control total for 1994-95 was set in the 1992 autumn statement at £253·6 billion.

Manufacturing Productivity

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on trends in manufacturing productivity over the past year.

Mr. Portillo: Manufacturing productivity in the three months to May was 3·7 per cent. higher than a year earlier. This was the highest growth rate for over six years.

Consumer Price Inflation

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the level of consumer price inflation is in Britain; and what are the OECD and EC averages.

Sir John Cope: Latest figures show that consumer price inflation in the United Kingdom is 1·2 per cent. This is below the average levels in OECD and EC countries of 2·9 and 3·3 per cent. respectively.

Share Option Schemes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many United Kingdom quoted companies run executive share option schemes; how many directors have taken out options at the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: In relation to executive share option schemes approved by the Inland Revenue, this information is not readily available. Information about schemes that are not approved by the Inland Revenue is not held centrally.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the total amount spent on public sector pay in 1994-95 of public sector pay rises in 1994 of (a) 2 per cent., (b) 3 per cent., (c) 4 per cent. and (d) the latest rate of inflation which will be used for the upgrading of pensions and benefits.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates of expenditure on pay across the public sector as a whole are difficult to make due to the disparate nature of the pay bargaining arrangements applying to the groups involved. However, it is estimated that each one per cent. change in public sector pay in 1994-95 would cost/save about £¾ billion.

Assumed public sector pay rise in 1994	Estimated cost in 1994-95 £ billion
(a) 2 per cent.	1·5
(b) 3 per cent.	2·25
(c) 4 per cent.	3·00
(d) Inflation rate used to upgrade pensions and benefits[1]	1·5

[1] The March 1993 Financial Statement and Budget Report gave an assumption of 2 per cent. for the increase in the RPI over the year to September 1993.

Duty Free Goods

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his best estimate on an annual basis of the loss in revenue to each EC country due to increased sales of duty free goods since changes in duty free laws were introduced on 1 January 1993.

Sir John Cope: The information is not available.

Gulf War

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 June 1992, Official Report, column 399, what has been the total cost to the Exchequer of the Gulf war to date; and what are his latest figures for the cash contribution of other countries to the cost of the Gulf war.

Mr. Portillo: The Ministry of Defence currently estimates that the additional military cost of the Gulf conflict is £2,345 million, spread over several years. The Export Credits Guarantee Department has paid up to 31 March 1993, £499 million of claims arising from the situation in the Gulf in 1990-91 and which have yet to be recovered. A further £160 million of claims on Iraq have yet to be examined. Other Departments incurred minor costs in respect of the conflict.

The bulk of these costs has been offset by the cash contributions from other Governments totalling £2,049 million.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he gives to complaints of excessive zeal on the part of Inland Revenue investigating officers from hon. Members; how many such complaints he has received with regard to the special office No. 2; what written guidance exists to guide him on how to deal with such complaints; and if he will place a copy of such guidance in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no special arrangements for dealing with this type of complaint, which would be referred to the Inland Revenue for full investigation and report in the normal way. A response would then be made to the hon. Member as appropriate by the Minister responsible or by the Inland Revenue direct.

I am not aware that any such complaints have been received with regard to the special office No. 2.

Government Staff

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 April.

Mr. Portillo: On 1 April 1993 there were 554,212 staff in post in central Government, a decrease of about 13,600 since 1 October 1992. This is the largest six-monthly fall since July 1987.

Of the total staff in post, 502,798 were non-industrials and 51,414 were classified as being in industrial work. A summary showing staff in post by Department has been placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

General Medical Practices

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at which health centres it is planned to proceed with capital expenditure projects in support of general medical practices in each of the next three years.

Mr. Ancram: Health centres in Northern Ireland at which capital expenditure is planned in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 are as listed:

1993-94	1994-95	1995-96

Midwives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many midwives were employed (a) full time and (b) part time in each health board area in each year since 1988.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	Eastern		Northern		Southern		Western
	Full time	Part time	Full time	Part time	Full time	Part time	Full time	Part time
1990	362	192	115	89	48	70	159	20

1993	270	209	88	96	68	98	156	27

Notes:
1. Figures quoted are at March each year and include both hospital and community midwives.
2. Information prior to March 1990 is not available in a compatible form.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many midwifery staff are employed in each health board area (a) full time and (b) part time (i) on an agency basis and (ii) on bank contracts.

Mr. Ancram: There are no agency midwives employed in the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland. As at March 1993 there were 35 part-time midwives employed on bank contracts by the Eastern board and two by the Southern board.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many practising midwives there are in each grade in each health board area, including those in senior nurse/senior midwife grades, senior nurse grades and education and clinical grades, excluding agency midwives; how many are employed (a) full time and (b) part time; and how many student midwives there are in each area.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows at March 1993:

	Eastern Board		Northern Board		Southern Board		Western Board
	Full time	Part time	Full time	Part time	Full time	Part time	Full time	Part time
Clinical Grade D	25	9	—	2	2	90	20	4

Student Midwife E	7	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

Note:—There are currently a further 21 practising midwives (19 full-time, 2 part-time) in educational grades who are employed by the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Northern Ireland.

Imported Animals

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which animals have been designated under the Destructive Imported Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 1933 and in subsequent regulations made under that Act.

Mr. Ancram: Musk-rats, grey squirrels, non-indigenous rabbits, coypus, mink and arctic foxes.

EC Funds

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what EC contribution was made to public expenditure in Northern Ireland (a) in total and (b) per capita in each of the last five years and the current year; what are his projections for each of the next two years; and for each of those years what is his estimate of the sums received under each heading used by the EC.

Sir John Wheeler: The "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities—the Government's Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96" (Cm 2216) published in February 1993 records EC Structural Funds contribution to public expenditure in Northern Ireland as follows:

£ million

	1988-89 Outturn	1989-90 Outturn	1990-91 Outturn	1991-92 Outturn	1992-93 Outturn	1993-94 Plans
Financed by European Regional Development receipts	47	40	49	50	120	103
Financed by European Social Fund receipts	36	46	51	53	47	55
Financed by European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund[1] (Guidance Section receipts)	13	9	10	29	25	19
Total	96	95	110	132	192	177
Per Capita Value (£)[2]	61	60	69	83	119	109

[1] The agricultural industry in Northern Ireland receives amounts under the Guarantee Section of the EAGGF (ie under the Common Agricultural Policy). Most of these payments are made centrally on a United Kingdom basis through the Intervention Board Executive Agency and no record of such payments is maintained on a territorial basis.
Identifiable receipts for 1991-92 amount to some £60 million.
[2] Based on mid-year population estimates.

From 1994 onwards, Structural Funds allocations to Northern Ireland will be governed by a new Community Support Framework. It will be some months before the expenditure under the various headings will be known.

Prisoners

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners there were in each prison in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years and the current year; how many were male and female; and what are his projections for the next two years.

Sir John Wheeler: The average prison population for the last six financial years was as follows:

Prison	1988-89		1989-90		1990-91		1991-92		1992-93		[1]1993-94
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female

Totals	1,796	26	1,760	23	1,750	30	1,758	38	1,822	43	1,912	40

[1] April-June 1993 only.

It is not possible to project the population by prison establishment.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for how many prisoners he has budgeted in his estimates for the current year and each of the next two years.

Sir John Wheeler: Financial plans are related to actual and anticipated accommodation needs and usage and not directly to prisoner numbers.

Sheep

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total sheep quota for (a) less favoured areas and (b) non-less-favoured areas in Northern Ireland; and what is his estimate of the current total breeding ewe flock in each of those areas.

Mr. Ancram: The total sheep annual premium quota for Northern Ireland is 1,393,888, of which 1,140,519 in the less-favoured areas—LFA—and 253,369 in the non-LFA. The total breeding ewe flock is currently estimated to be 1,142,399, of which 911,635 in the LFA and 230,764 in the non-LFA.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many mentally ill patients were treated (a) in the community and (b) as in-patients, for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

(2) what percentage of patients were treated (a) as day patients, (b) as in-patients and (c) in the community by the NHS in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Ancram: The information is not available in the form requested. Figures on in-patients and community treatment of mental illness patients are presented in the table:

In-patient and community treatment of mental illness in Northern Ireland

Public Expenditure

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total public expenditure in Northern Ireland in (a) total and (b) per capita in each of the last five years and the current year; and what are his projections for each of the next two years.

Sir John Wheeler: The total public expenditure for Northern Ireland within the Secretary of State's responsibility and public expenditure per capita for the years 1988-89 to 1993-94 and forecasts for 1994-95 and 1995-96 are in the following table:

Year	Total public expenditure £ million	Public expenditure per capita £
1988-89	5,436	3,445
1989-90	5,725	3,617
1990-91	5,872	3,694
1991-92	6,428	4,032
1992-93	7,092	4,402
1993-94	7,476	4,598
1994-95	7,703	4,703
1995-96	7,980	4,842

Rural Planning Review

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the rural planning review, giving details of the consultation which has taken place, and the factors which have delayed it; when he expects to have draft proposals ready; and when they will be expected.

Mr. Atkins: A major consultation exercise was held in August 1991 with the circulation of the leaflet "What Kind of Countryside Do We Want?". In addition during late 1991 representations of the Department's town and country planning service attended 20 public meetings or rural clinics organised by the Rural Development Council, the Rural Community Network and Community Technical Aid at which the issues raised in the leaflet were discussed. By spring 1992 over 100 responses, including a substantial report on the rural clinics, were received. The Department has carefully analysed these comments and in the light of the full response to the consultation exercise the Department has decided that there will be no publication of draft proposals. It is intended that the new strategy will be published in September.

WALES

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) hydrocarbons and their oxygen, nitrogen and/or sulphur compounds, (b) inorganic cyanides, (c) inorganic halogen containing compounds, (d) inorganic sulphur containing compounds, (e) laboratory chemicals, (f) lead compounds, (g) mercury compounds, (h) nickel and nickel compounds, (i) organic halogen compounds excluding inert polymeric materials and (j) peroxides, chlorates and azides;

(2) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categores of (a) solvents-S halogen/mixed, (b) mineral oil sludges, (c) contaminated industrial waste, (d) empty contaminated drums, (e) pressurised cylinders/aerosols, (f) contaminated soil, (g) mixed laboratory chemicals, (h) biocides-solid, (i) biocides-liquid, (j) biocides-aqueous diluted, (k) resins-organic and (l) filter material-organic;

(3) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) solid metal bearing, (b) solid inorganic, (c) solid CN, (d) solid organic, (e) solid asbestos, (f) filter material-inorganic, (g) acid metal bearing, (h) acid-inorganic, (i) acid-organic, (j) alkalis metal bearing, (k) alkalis-inorganic, (l) alkalis-organic and (m) aqueous cyanide;

(4) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) acids and alkalis, (b) antimony and antimony compounds, (c) arsenic compounds, (d) asbestos all chemical forms, (e) barium compounds, (f) beryllium and beryllium compounds, (g) biocides and phytopharmaceutical substances, (h) boron compounds, (i) cadmium and cadmium compounds, (j) copper compounds, (k) heterocyclic organic compounds containing oxygen nitrogen and/or sulphur and (l) hexavalent chromium compounds;

(5) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) neutral metal bearing, (b) neutral-inorganic, (c) neutral-organic, (d) neutral-oily (one to 15 per cent.), (e) mineral oil and < 20 per cent. others, (f) mineral oil and > 20 per cent. others, (g) oil + > 20 per cent. water < 85 per cent., (h) grease/fat/wax/vegetable oil, (i) tars/phenols, (j) solvents-non halogen, (k) solvents-halogenated, (l) solvents-mixed (including water) and (m) solvents-S non-halogen;

(6) if he will list by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) pharmaceutical waste, (b) mixed organics in drums, (c) metal compounds, (d) non-toxic metal compounds, (e) metals-elements, (f) metal oxides, (g) inorganic compounds, (h) other inorganic material, (i) organic compounds, (j) polymeric material and precursors, (k) fuels, oils and greases, (l) fine chemicals and biocides, (m) miscellaneous chemicals waste, (n) filter materials and sludges, (o) miscellaneous waste and (p) construction waste;

(7) if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste production in the waste categories of (a) pharmaceutical and veterinary compounds, (b) phosphorus and its compounds, (c) selenium and selenium compounds, (d) silver compounds, (e) tarry materials from refining and tar residues from distilling, (f) tellurium and tellurium compounds, (g) thallium and thallium compounds, (h) vanadium compounds and (i) zinc compounds.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not currently available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste arisings and deposits.

Mr. Redwood: The information is given in the following table.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by year for the last five years, and by county, the number of tonnes of special waste arising (a) within the county and deposited within the county, (b) within the county and exported out of the county and (c) outside the county and deposited within the county.

Mr. Redwood: From the information available, it is not possible to differentiate the amount of special waste originating in and deposited in a county from that imported into the county for deposition. Nor is it possible to determine the amount of special wastes exported from a county which originated in the county. Special wastes may be imported and re-exported as part of the treatment and disposal process. The available information is given in the following table.

Valuation Tribunals

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers of community charge and non-domestic rate appeals disposed of per full-time equivalent employee in each valuation tribunal office in Wales during the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The figures for appeals cleared in 1992-93 by each valuation tribunal office are as follows:

[1] Clwyd tribunal office reduced from four to three full-time equivalent staff 1 August 1992.
[2] Gwynedd tribunal office reduced from three to 1·6 full-time equivalent staff 1 October 1992.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many non-domestic rate appeals were outstanding in Gwynedd at 30 June; how many of that number were lodged prior to 30 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: At 30 June, the Gwynedd valuation tribunal had 1,273 outstanding non-domestic rate appeals. Information on the number of those lodged prior to 30 November 1992 is not available.

Midwives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many whole-time equivalent midwives there are at each increment point of each pay scale.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Detailed breakdowns of nursing and midwifery staff employed by health authorities and NHS trusts into occupational groups such as that requested are not considered reliable. However, I refer the hon. Gentleman to a letter that I sent to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) dated 13 July, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, which gave a breakdown of nursing and midwifery staff in post as at 30 September 1992—excluding students and pupils and staff nursery staff—by grade and pay spine point.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what specialist provision is currently available in Wales for early onset of Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally. It is for health authorities to determine and provide the specialist provision required to meet local needs.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of sickness absence among employees in Wales by broad industrial sector expressed as (a) the average number of days lost and (b) the percentage of employee sickness absence.

Mr. Redwood: The information available on sickness absence, by sector of industry, is given in the following table. These estimates are derived from the labour force survey carried out between December 1992 and February 1993 and may be subject to sampling variability.

Industrial sector	Employees	Percentage absent due to sickness or injury in the reference week[1]
Agriculture	[2]—	[2]—
Energy and water supply	19,000	[2]—
Manufacturing	236,000	5
Construction	53,000	[2]—
Services	664,000	5
All industries and services	979,000	5

Source—Labour Force Survey.

[1] Respondents are asked to indicate any absence in a particular week.

[2] Sample too small to provide a reliable estimate.

Patients

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of patients were treated (a) as day patients, (b) as in-patients and (c) in the community by the NHS in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information in the exact form requested is not available centrally. However, the available information is given as follows. No percentages have been calculated as a patient may be treated in more than one of the categories or in other categories not given.

	Regular day attenders at NHS day care facilities	Number of patients treated[1] Day cases	In-patient cases	In the community[2]
1987-88	12,241	78,471	456,420	—
1988-89	—	85,012	456,858	—
1989-90	11,927	86,486	475,515	—
1990-91	12,152	101,191	482,473	222,869
1991-92	13,275	132,945	500,336	219,548

[1] This does not relate to the number of people treated as one person may have been discharged more than once during the year.

[2] Patients treated by district nurses, community psychiatric nurses, community mental handicap nurses and other community nurses (excluding health visitors and midwives). It should be noted that an individual may be included more than once if they had been treated by more than one category of staff. Comparable information is not available prior to 1990-91.

Voluntary Work

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those voluntary projects, organisations and bodies he has funded in Wales since 1986 along with the amount allocated, other than those which he has financed under section 21 of the Education Act 1980, listing Welsh language projects, organisations and bodies separately.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department provides direct funding to about 250 voluntary organisations each year. In 1991-92, the latest year for which figures are available more than £10 million was paid in direct grants to the voluntary sector, £2 million of which was paid in support of Welsh language activities. In addition, a further £172 million was provided as indirect grants—i.e. those paid via health or local authorities or NDPBs—the bulk of which —some £164 million—was paid to housing associations.

Information on individual grants awarded prior to 1988-89 is not readily available. Since 1988-89 a list of all direct Government grants to the voluntary sector has been placed in the Library of the House. I have therefore arranged for a further copy of the Welsh Office entries for the financial years 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 to be placed in the Library of the House amended to indicate grants awarded solely in respect of Welsh language activities and those awarded under section 21 of the Education Act 1980. However, many of the other grants paid will also have included an element of support for the Welsh language which is not separately identifiable.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total budget of the Welsh Development Agency in 1990-91, 1991-92; and 1992-93 and what proportion of this was allocated to the north Wales office.

Mr. Redwood: The budget for the three financial years is shown in the Welsh Office departmental report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

The agency's budget is allocated according to functions and programmes rather than geographic areas.

Supply Teachers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many supply teachers are registered with each local education authority in Wales for casual cover; and to what incremental point on the main professional grade for teachers' salaries a suitably qualified and experienced supply teacher may progress.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of supply teachers registered with each local education authority in Wales is not held centrally.

The School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document lays down a minimum point on the scale to which teachers may be appointed, depending on their previous service. An experienced supply teacher could be appointed on the minimum point applicable or on any higher point up to the top of the scale. A new pay spine for teachers will be introduced with effect from 1 September 1993.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which primary schools in each local education authority in Wales (a) use the Welsh language as the main language of instruction, (b) use some Welsh as a medium of instruction and (c) undertake little or no instruction through the medium of Welsh.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have made a list of the 1,704 primary schools in Wales available in the Library of the House. The schools are broken down into the following categories: those with classes which use Welsh as a sole or main medium of instruction, those with classes which use Welsh as a medium of teaching for part of the curriculum and those which teach Welsh as a second language or not at all. The breakdown is based on information for the 1991-92 academic year.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average number of hours spent teaching Welsh in schools in Wales in the (a) primary and (b) secondary sectors; and if he will give a breakdown by county.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since 1990, schools in Wales have been progressively implementing the requirements of Welsh as a national curriculum subject. Information on the number of hours or periods spent on national curriculum Welsh is not collected centrally.

However, the 1989 secondary school staffing survey provided information on the number of teaching periods spent teaching Welsh as a first language, Welsh as a second language and remedial Welsh and is given in the following table. Equivalent information is not available for primary schools.

Environmental Contamination

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has received from Gwent county council regarding the potential environmenal contamination of south-east Wales by airborne radioactive particulates arising from Ministry of Defence tests at its Salisbury Plain test area.

Mr. Redwood: None. The Ministry of Defence has also confirmed that it has no knowledge of tests on Salisbury plain which could give rise to radioactive particulates in the environment of south-east Wales.

Land Authorities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total budget of each land authority in Wales in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93; and what proportion was spent in Gwynedd and Clwyd.

Mr. Redwood: The Land Authority for Wales is required to be self-financing. The total value of development land sold by the authority and the percentage in respect of Gwynedd and Clwyd were as follows:

	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Total value	£9·3 million	£8·8 million	£7·0 million
Of which percentage in Gwynedd and Clwyd	21·6 per cent.	17·0 per cent.	13·6 per cent.

Mental Illness

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many mentally ill patients were treated (a) in the community and (b) as in-patients, for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information in the exact form requested is not available centrally. However, the available information is given in the following table.

	Discharges and deaths[1]	Resident patients[2]	First contacts by community psychiatric nurses[3]
1987-88	14,157	[4]3,952	—
1988-89	14,289	—	—

1991-92	16,236	[5]3,013	22,629

[1] Deaths and discharges of in-patients from NHS hospitals. This does not relate to the number of people treated as one person may have been discharged more than once during the year. Includes people treated in the specialities of mental illness, child and adolescent psychiatry, forensic psychiatry and old age psychiatry.

[2] Patients resident in mental illness hospitals and units in Wales on the day an annual census was taken. This will not include patients who although resident at some time during the year were not resident on the date of the census.

[3] Information was not collected centrally prior to 1990-91. This does not include patients cared for by other groups of staff (ie GPs and social workers) and voluntary organisations for which no information is collected centrally.

[4] At 5 April.

[5] At 31 March.

Welsh Office Highways Department

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total budget of the Welsh Office highways department in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93; and what proportion of this money was spent in Gwynedd, Clwyd and Powys.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Gross expenditure in Wales on new construction, improvement and maintenance on motorways and trunk roads was £184·9 million in 1990-91, £171·0 million in 1991-92 and £204·5 million in 1992-93. The proportion spent in Gwynedd, Clwyd and Powys is given in the following table.

	Total gross expenditure on new construction improvement and maintenance (Wales)	Expenditure in Clwyd		Expenditure in Gwynedd		Expenditure in Powys
	£ million	£ million	per cent.	£ million	per cent.	£ million	per cent.

Health Education

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds have been made available by his Department for health education in Wales in each year since 1987.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The amounts made available for health promotion, of which health education forms part, is shown in the following table.

	£ million
1987-88	2·4
1988-89	3·3
1989-90	4·2
1990-91	6·1

Arts Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the level of arts services budgets in each local authority in Wales since 1990.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Individual local authorities decide what to spend on the arts from within their available resources. Information on the budgets they have set for museums and art galleries is given in the following table. Other arts spending is not separately identifiable from local authority budget returns.

Net current expenditure on museums and art galleries[1]

Housing Revenue Accounts

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the notional housing revenue account figures for Wales for the current financial year and the estimates made in respect of the next financial year; and if he will list the assumptions on which they are based.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is as follows:

	1993-94 £ million	1994-95 £ million
Notional income from rents	322·9	346·9
Notional management and maintenance allowance	168·8	174·3

The 1993-94 figures are taken from local authorities first advance subsidy claim forms.

For 1994-95, the estimated figures are also based on the initial claim form data for 1993-94. The key assumptions are for per dwelling increases in real terms of 5 per cent. in guideline rents and 1 per cent. in management and maintenance allowances. These assumptions will be reviewed in this year's public expenditure survey and will be subject to consultation in the usual way. The relevant inflation assumptiion from 1993-94 to 1994-95 is 4·25 per cent. as set out in the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1993-94.

Home Helps

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many home helps were employed in each local authority area in the counties of Gwynedd and Clwyd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The numbers of people employed by the social services departments of Gwynedd county council and Clwyd county council are not reported at district level. The total numbers of home helps—including home help organisers and assistants—employed in each county at the 30 September of each year are shown in the following table:

	Clwyd	Gwynedd

Bus Routes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many bus routes were operating in each local authority area in the counties of Clwyd and Gwynedd in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of bus routes operating in Clwyd and Gwynedd is not available centrally.

Higher Education

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students are currently studying at each public sector higher education college in Wales; and how many of the students are normally resident in Wales, both in terms of total numbers and as a percentage of the main student body.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Provisional data for the 1992-93 academic year on students enrolled on higher education at the former public sector higher education colleges in Wales —including Trinity college—together with the numbers and proportion who were resident in Wales, are as follows:

Students[1] enrolled on higher education courses at 2 November 1992

Institution	Total number of students[2]	Students usually resident in Wales
		Number	Per cent. of total
Cardiff Institute of HE	5,520	3,776	68

[1]All modes of attendance. Excludes students enrolled on further education courses.

[2]Includes other United Kingdom students and those from abroad.

Market Testing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the tender specifications for the market testing of the training office functions of his Department; and if such tender specifications will have to be advertised in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Communities.

Mr. Redwood: The specification for the market test of staff training services within the Department will form part of the tender documentation, which will be issued when tenders are invited. There is no requirement to advertise details of the tender specification in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

Powys TEC

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Powys training and enterprise council in relation to refunding part of the 1992-93 grant in aid to the council.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. My officials have been in regular contact with the TEC since a routine financial appraisal monitoring visit revealed that insufficient evidence was available, at that time, to substantiate some of the TECs adult training invoices for payment by the Welsh Office. The TEC has now gathered additional evidence to suport their claims. My officials will meet with the TEC on 19 July to consider the adequacy of the further evidence.

EDUCATION

Centre for Young Musicians

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will take steps to ensure that musically gifted children from all parts of inner London can continue to receive tuition at the Centre for Young Musicians.

Mr. Forth: The activities of the Centre for Young Musicians are funded from a number of sources—including the Department for Education. We are supporting the central costs of the centre with £100,000 funding for each of the three years 1993-96. I welcome the support given by private sponsors and hope that London children will continue to benefit from the opportunities offered by the centre.

Non-vocational Adult Education

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the standard spending assessment allowances for non-vocational adult education for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 listed by education authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: Provision for the further education for adults for which education authorities are responsible is included within the education component of standard spending assessments, but is not separately identified.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Crown Court Cases

Mr. Michael: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many persons were found guilty following a not guilty plea in Crown courts in England and Wales during 1991; and how many of those were subsequently given a non-custodial sentence.

Mr. John M. Taylor: During 1991, a total of 15,379 defendants were convicted in the Crown court following a plea of not guilty to all or to some counts. Of these, 7,161 received a non-custodial sentence.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal have been allowed and dismissed in 1992 and the first quarter of 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is as follows:

Appeals to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal

	Allowed	Dismissed
1992[1]	249	493
January to March 1993	62	123

[1]Complete figures are not available for 1992. The figures given are estimates based on average returns for the eight months of that year for which figures are available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average delay listed by each immigration appeals hearing centre (i) between receiving the explanatory statement and papers about a case (a) from a British post overseas and (b) from the Home Office and sending those papers to an appellant or his or her authorised representative and (ii) between the hearing of an immigration appeal by an adjudicator and the despatch of the determination to the appellant or authorised representative.

Mr. John M. Taylor: All appeals to the immigration appellate authorities—IAA—are at present registered at their centre at Thanet House in London. On receipt of an appeal, whether from a British post overseas or from the Home Office, the IAA on average dispatches copies of the case papers to the appellant or his of her authorised representative within five days. The IAA's individual hearing centres do not record the average time between the hearing of an appeal by an adjudicator and the dispatch of the determination to the appellant or authorised representative. It is estimated, however, that the current average time for the IAA as a whole is six to eight weeks.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals to immigration adjudicators have been allowed and dismissed in 1992 and the first quarter of 1993, broken down according to the nationality of the appellant and the type of decision appealed against.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested, broken down according to the country where the application was made, is set out in the tables.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements he has made to deal with the effects of the right of appeal for all refused asylum-seekers provided in the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor will designate 16 full-time and 15 part-time adjudicators to act as special adjudicators. These will be appointed from the cadre of experienced immigration adjudicators and will deal with appeals by refused asylum seekers under the Act. In addition, a new regional centre has been opened at Hatton Cross, near Heathrow airport, which will provide 15 hearing rooms; this has replaced the five hearing room centre at Harmondsworth which has been closed.

Benzodiazepine

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many legal aid certificates have been issued in repect of claims arising from the ingestion of benzodiazepine tranquillisers; how many of these have been discharged; and how many are subject to appeal.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A total of 13,168 legal aid certificates have been granted in respect of proceedings relating to benzodiazepine tranquillisers. The position on these is constantly changing, but, at present, more than 7,000 certificates have been discharged and several hundred are awaiting decisions on appeal.

TRANSPORT

Rail Routes (M25)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been made of the improvement, reintroduction or new building of passenger rail routes that would provide rapid inter-urban transport between travel generation centres adjacent, or with easy access, to the M25 motorway.

Mr. Freeman: The Heathrow access and London south-west quadrant study has considered options for new rail links within range of the M25. That study is being considered in the wider context of transport and planning issues in London. I understand that some other ideas for rail projects adjacent to the M25 have been proposed outside the Department. In general however, since for most users the M25 is a relatively small part of their overall journey, rail links which simply connected towns close to that motorway would not provide a very attractive alternative.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects services through the channel tunnel to commence.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for Eurotunnel.

Red Star

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bids to buy Red Star have been received to date.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is responsible for the sale of Red Star. The number of bids received is a commercial matter for BR.

EMPLOYMENT

Apprenticeships

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to provide more apprenticeships; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: In national vocational qualifications we now have an employer-led framework of qualifications which young people can achieve through work-based training, building on the best of our apprenticeship traditions. These training arrangements and qualifications have much to contribute in improving economic competitiveness and equipping young people for rewarding careers.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he proposes with (a) the Trades Union Congress and (b) employers to consider ways of stimulating the growth in the number of apprenticeships in British industry.

Miss Widdecombe: Interest in a modern, revitalised apprenticeship system features prominently in discussions I have with representatives of both employers and employees. All concerned need to be clear that work—based training and vocational qualifications deserve equal esteem alongside other education and training options open to young people.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will list for each annual labour force survey since 1984 and for the spring 1992 and winter 1992-93 surveys the number and percentage of 16 and 17-year-olds in full-time employment;

(2) if he will list for each annual labour force survey since 1984 and for the spring 1992 and winter 1992-93 surveys the number of 16 and 17-year-olds International Labour Organisation unemployed and their ILO unemployment rate;

(3) if he will list for each annual labour force survey since 1984 and for spring 1992 and winter 1992-93 surveys the number and percentage of 16 and 17-year-olds (a) in total, (b) in full-time education and (c) not in full-time education.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the following table:

Youth Training

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 263, how many participants in total were on youth training in January (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: Information about the number on youth training in January 1991 is not available, but the March 1991 figure was 314,000. In January 1992 and January 1993, there were 303,000 and 293,000 people respectively on youth training in Great Britain.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 375, if he will place in the Library copies of the figures underlying his conclusion as to the level of cost savings possible through the contracting out of public services.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Redcar (Ms. Mowlam) on 21 May 1993, Official Report, columns 324-25.

Additionally, my officials are currently collating the market-testing figures for the year to March 1992. I shall publish the results in due course.

Civil Service Occupational Health Service

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the annual report of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service will be published.

Mr. David Davis: Part I of the annual report of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service for 1992-93 is published today. This reports on the health of the civil service. Part 2 of the report, which covers the activities of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service during 1992-93 and includes the agency's accounts, is intended to be published by 30 July. Copies of both parts will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses on publication.

Environmental Technologies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he make a further statement on the benefits that will accrue to the environmental technologies of the implementation of his strategy for science as set out in his White Paper, Cm 2250.

Mr. Waldegrave: The White Paper "Realising Our Potential" will help us build on our strengths in science, engineering and technology. In particular, environmental technologies will benefit from the work of the Natural Environment Research Council, with its new mission statement and the closer relationship it will establish with users of its research.

PRIME MINISTER

Heating Costs

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his estimate of the (a) average, (b) highest and (c) lowest cost of heating a dwelling in (i) England, (ii) Scotland, (iii) Wales and (iv) Northern Ireland for (a) the winter months and (b) the summer months, and indicate in each case the cost for (i) solid fuel, (ii) electricity, (iii) oil, (iv) natural gas and (v) bottled gas; and if he will list the locations in each of the countries which were used for samples to estimate these costs.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally, but the estimated comparative cost of heating two, three, and four-bedroomed homes using different types of fuel and power can be derived from a publication entitled "Comparative Domestic Heating Costs in the UK" published by Sutherland Associates, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what reply he has given to the letter on the THORP from the Japanese group which visited him on 15 June.

The Prime Minister: A reply will be sent shortly.

Ministers (Directorships)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister how many Ministers retain directorships of companies; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to paragraph 107 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". No central record is held of such information.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 7 June, Official Report, columns 13-14, when he expects to be able to place in the Library the requested document regarding deaths resulting from the security situation in Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: The production of a comprehensive list of people killed since 1968 as a result of the security situation in Northern Ireland, and in related incidents in Great Britain, the Irish Republic and mainland Europe, requires extensive and painstaking research. Information on mainland Europe, which is available only after 1978, and Great Britain is nearly complete and will be placed in the Library in the next fortnight. Work on the remaining information is well advanced, and the completed data will be placed in the Library as soon as they are available.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the actions taken by the Government of Bosnia-Herzegovina which Her Majesty's Government consider to have fulfilled the requirements of the London conference, and the ways in which they have failed to co-operate satisfactorily with the international community's peace efforts.

The Prime Minister: The Bosnian Government have been unable to realise the objectives of the London conference owing to the actions of their other parties, in particular the Serbs. The international community has repeatedly made clear that it will not accept a settlement in Bosnia which is dictated by the Serbs and Croats at the expense of the Muslims. We hope that the Bosnian Government will soon be in a position to enter into negotiations with the other parties under the co-chairmanship of Lord Owen and Mr. Stoltenberg.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the actions taken by the Government of Croatia which Her Majesty's Government consider to have fulfilled the requirements of the London conference, and the ways in which it has failed to co-operate satisfactorily with the international community's peace efforts.

The Prime Minister: While we consider that the Serbs bear the main burden of responsibility for the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, we are also not satisfied that the Croatian Government have so far fully met the requirements of the London conference to achieve a peaceful settlement in Bosnia. European Community Foreign Ministers will be considering on 19 July whether measures should be taken against the Croatians so long as they are engaged in activities contrary to the London conference principles.

HEALTH

Dissatisfied Patients

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to introduce the necessary changes to second and third stage complaints procedures by dissatisfied patients to ensure that an independent lay assessor is part of the assessment team; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to make changes to the clinical complaints procedure, in advance of any recommendations which the National Health Service Complaints Review Committee, chaired by Professor Alan Wilson, will be making at the turn of the year.

Neurology Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will indicate the proportion of patients per neurologist within each (a) standardised United Kingdom region and (b) each district health authority and health trust area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table. Data are not available below regional level. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

High Blood Pressure

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate her Department has made of the annual national health service hospital costs incurred in treating patients who suffer heart attacks or strokes caused by raised blood pressure that have not been treated with medication.

(2) what estimate her Department has made of the additional annual cost of the national health service that would be incurred if the 75 per cent. of untreated patients suffering from high blood pressure, as identified in "The Health of the Nation" survey were to be treated with (a) calcium antagonist preparations, (b) Ace-inhibitors, (c) beta-blocking agents and (d) beta-blocking agents in combination with diuretics.

Mr. Sackville: No information is held centrally on which to base such estimates.

Community Care Assessment

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will include in the guidance issued to local authorities on assessment procedures under the new community care arrangements a requirement for authorities to pass on to clients the full results of assessment, irrespective of whether the resources are available fully to meet a client's needs.

Mr. Bowis: We have made it clear to authorities that they should share the results of assessments with users so that they know where they stand. There are no plans to issue further guidance in this area.

Paediatric Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average daily number of available paediatric beds in 1991-92 in England, including special health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Average of daily number of available paediatric beds

Region	1991-92
Northern	731
Yorkshire	809
Trent	879
East Anglian	290
North West Thames	593
North East Thames	639
South East Thames	754
South West Thames	495
Wessex	461
Oxford	399
South Western	559
West Midlands	1,090
Mersey	642
North Western	1,158
Special Health Authorities	447
England[1]: Total Paediatric Beds	9,944

[1] Figures do not add to England total due to rounding.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many special paediatric intensive treatment unit beds there are; how many are temporarily closed; and what estimate has been made of the number required to conform with best practice.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 17 June at columns 704-6.

Children

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children there were under 16 years in 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available information shows that the estimated number of children under 16 years of age, resident in England at mid-1991, was 9·7 million.

Water-borne Diseases

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 1, if she will list the five commonest diseases associated with poor water supply and sewage disposal found in the United Kingdom and the incidence of those diseases in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The incidence of diseases are recorded in the Communicable Disease Report published weekly by the Public Health Laboratory Service Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre, copies of which are available in the Library.

The source of infection for each case of disease reported cannot always be ascertained. It is therefore not possible to list the five commonest diseases associated with poor water supply or sewage disposal.

Dental Charges

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what help she plans to give to persons currently facing increases in their dental charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: Help with the cost of dental treatment is already available to patients on a low income. Some 21 per cent. of adult courses of treatment are provided with full or partial relief from charges.

Child Migrants Trust

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now finance the Child Migrants Trust in its work of tracing the families of child migrants.

Mr. Bowis: The Department has awarded the trust a grant of £25,000 for the current financial year.

Respite Breaks

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action her Department is taking to ensure that the new arrangements for community care provide adequate opportunities for disabled people and their unpaid carers to have a respite break; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The first two key objectives of the community care reforms are to promote the development of domiciliary, day and respite services; and to ensure that service providers make practical support for carers a high priority. The reforms require authorities to assess the needs of carers as well as the people for whom they care. They also provide greater incentives for authorities to provide respite care.

NORTHERN IRELAND

International Investments Gibraltar Ltd.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will endeavour to place on the agenda for discussion at the next Anglo-Irish Conference meeting the action taken by the Irish authorities against Mr. William Flynn, in order to persuade him to stop his campaigning for defrauded investors in International Investments Gibraltar Ltd. and its associate companies in the Irish Republic.

Sir John Wheeler: There are no plans to raise this matter, which is not covered by the Anglo-Irish agreement and, thus, does not fall within the field of activity of the intergovernmental conference.

Road Schemes

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his replies of 26 April and 4 May, Official Report, columns 220-22, what is the actual cost benefit rating for each of the 11 major road schemes referred to in those replies.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:-

Scheme	Rating
Comber By-pass	9.26
A5 Burndennet	0.85
Antrim-Ballymena: Stage 2	1.91
Omagh Through-pass: Stage 2	5.32
Belfast Urban Area Plan roads—
Purdysburn Road: Stage 1 (1995-96)	7.10
Balmoral Avenue-Malone Road Junction (1996-97)	23.18
Forster Green Junction (1996-97)	9.13

Comparable figures for the remaining schemes are not available.

Bank of Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Bank of Ireland's operations in Northern Ireland reflect the fair employment ratios set down by the Fair Employment Commission.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Bank of Ireland. Every employer covered by the terms of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 is required to determine whether it is affording fair participation in employment to members of both communities and, if necessary, to take affirmative action. In support of these employers, the Fair Employment Commission provides, on request, information and advice on any aspect of fair employment practice, including catchment areas.

The commission is also required to ensure that employers are complying with the legislation, that employers' determinations concerning fair participation are correct and that, where necessary, employers are taking the appropriate affirmative action.

Rural Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he will take to reduce the levels of rural housing unfitness; and what action he plans for areas with particularly high levels of unfitness.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive—the Executive—whose chief executive has advised me that the most significant way in which it can reduce rural dwelling unfitness is through the home improvement grant scheme.

To tackle the highest levels of rural unfitness, the Executive since 1989 has identified rural priority areas. It is intended to review the basis of these with the intention of extending them and to intensively market and counsel occupants on the opportunities and options offered by the new housing renovation scheme. From the current financial year—1993-94—the Executive expects to approve around 2,000 rural grant applications annually.

To a more limited degree, rural new building will help to further reduce unfitness. Several small settlements and 'crossroads' areas now have a number of new build schemes to rehouse households living in unfit dwellings; around 200 houses are expected to be provided over the next two years. Additionally, the Executive has provided office accommodation and administrative support for the Rural Housing Association as well as identifying several rural locations where new build to meet the local needs of families living in unfit accommodation could be supported.

Railways

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now place in the Library the conclusions of the consultant's report on private sector involvement in Northern Ireland Railways.

Mr. Atkins: No. The findings of the study are still under consideration.

Fair Employment

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action will be taken by the Fair Employment Commission to ensure that the Agricultural Research Institute, Carrickfergus borough council, Chief Electoral Office and the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company implement affirmative action and outreach programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: All public concerns specified at 1 January 1990 under the Fair Employment (Specification of Public Authorities) Order (Northern Ireland) 1989, as amended, were required to have completed a review of their employment composition and practices by 1 January 1993. Where, as part of this review, an employer determines that members of a particular community are not enjoying or are not likely to continue to enjoy fair participation in employment, the employer is required as part of the review to determine reasonable and appropriate affirmative action.

The Fair Employment Commission is currently studying public sector employers' reviews to establish whether the commission considers that the employers' determinations concerning fair participation are correct and to promote affirmative action where it is necessary.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action will be taken by the Fair Employment Commission to ensure that private sector concerns which employ fewer than 10 employees from one community implement affirmative action and outreach programmes.

Mr. Atkins: Under section 31 of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989, all registered concerns are required to complete a review of their employment composition and practices within three years of the date of their registration with the Fair Employment Commission.

The commission is using its statutory powers to ensure that employers have completed their reviews in accordance with the legislation and, where necessary, are taking the appropriate affirmative action and have set goals and timetables for change.

Additionally, the commission is using its powers of investigation under section 11 of the Act to conduct investigations into 47 large private sector concerns, some of which have a very low representation of one community.

Young People

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of (a) 18-year-olds, (b) 17-year-olds and (c) 16-year-olds in January (i) 1991, (ii) 1992 and (iii) 1993; and if he will list for each year the number in full-time education in (1) schools including maintained, independent and special schools and (2) further education, excluding those on youth training schemes in colleges.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The available information is as follows:

Table 1: Mid-year estimates of Northern Ireland population

	1991	1992	1993
18 year olds	26,702	25,854	25,149
17 year olds	25,652	24,981	24,468
16 year olds	25,009	24,537	24,735

Table 2: Number in full-time education

	Schools	Further Education	Total
1990-91

Notes:
1. Schools figures relate to January; Further education figures relate to November.
2. Comparable information is not available for 1992-93.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Probation Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for the Probation Service of the provision of same-day reports in Crown court cases where a not guilty plea is followed by a finding of guilt.

Mr. Maclean: In asking probation services to provide accelerated pre-sentence reports in the Crown court, we took account of the findings of the review by Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation of the operation of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 which was published last month, and concluded that it would be practicable within current resources to set a same-day target where a custodial remand would otherwise be required.

Runciman Report

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish a response to the report of Lord Runciman on the criminal justice system.

Mr. Maclean: I am considering with my ministerial colleagues the timing and form of the Government's response to the royal commission report.

Security Service

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make available more information about the Security Service following the publication of the White Paper on open government.

Mr. Howard: I am pleased to announce that a booklet about the Security Service, describing its role, responsibilities and organisation is being published today. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

The booklet is a significant step towards greater openness in the Security Service. The information in it will increase understanding of the service's work, while preserving the secrecy necessary to maintain operational effectiveness.

Immitation Fire Arms

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received calling for curbs on the carrying of imitation firearms.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the past year, the Home Office has received represntations calling for further controls on imitation firearms from the Banking Insurance and Finance Union and the Financial Services Staff Federation.

Bones Analysis

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of his Department's analysis of the bones brought from Ekaterinburg, Russia, in July 1991 for identification.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is a matter for which the Forensic Science Service is responsible, and the chief executive has provided a reply.

Letter for Dr. Janet Thompson to Mr. David Atkinson, undated:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question about the project being undertaken by the Home Office Forensic Science Service (FSS) on the remains found near Ekaterinburg, Russia, in July 1991. As you know, the Chief Executive of an Executive Agency, with the agreement of the Minister, replies to Members of Parliament on operational matters. I am therefore replying on behalf of the FSS.

The project has now been successfully completed and we announced the results on 9 July. As a result of the DNA analysis, scientists believe that five of the nine skeletons found are those of the Tsar, Tsarina and three of their daughters. This conclusion is the same as that reached by anthropologists in Russia.

The statistical analysis was complex. The scientists estimated a 98·5 per cent. probability for the identification, based on a neutral interpretation of the previous anthropological evidence and on the least likely interpretation of the DNA evidence.

The scientists involved in the project will submit their work for publication and peer review in the scientific literature to enable other scientists to examine their work and conclusions. Further work will be needed to refine the statistical analysis. Once validated, we hope soon to be able to put the techniques used into practice in criminal casework to the benefit of the criminal justice system as a whole.

Police Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he proposes to set up to ensure Londoners are consulted on (a) his statement on the future of the police service, (b) the Sheehy report and (c) the recommendations of the Royal Commission on criminal justice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The White Paper on police reform —Cm 2281,—invites views on various reform proposals, including the question of the boundaries of the Metropolitan police district. My right hon. and learned Friend has asked for comments from interested persons, including Londoners, on the recommendations of the reports of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards—Cm 2280—and the Royal Commission on criminal justice—Cm 2263. Copies of all these documents are available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office and two copies of the digest version of the White Paper have been placed in every public library.

Immigration

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) husbands, (b) fiancés, (c) wives and (d) fiancées refused wholly or partly on (x) primary purpose and (y) support and accommodation grounds in 1991 and 1992 in (i) the countries of the Indian subcontinent and (ii) any other country for which statistics are available appealed against the refusal; and how many of the appeals in each category were (1) allowed, (2) dismissed, (3) withdrawn and (4) are pending.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is given in the table and relates to the numbers of applications for entry clearance initially refused and the numbers granted following an appeal in the Indian subcontinent. Not all those refused initially go on to appeal.

Information by reason of refusal is not available for countries outside the Indian subcontinent.

Spouses and fiance(e)s in the Indian subcontinent initially refused and subsequently granted entry clearance on appeal by reason for refusal, 1991 and 1992

Winson Green Prison

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will order an inquiry into the release of Mark Jarvis on home leave from Winson Green prison;

(2) if he will make a statement on the circumstances which led to the last release of Mark Jarvis from Winson Green prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given to both these questions.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated July 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about Mark Jarvis being granted home leave from Birmingham prison.

I refer you to my letter in reply to the Question to Mr. Graham Allen MP on 13 July published in the Official Report (columns 429 and 430), a copy of which is enclosed.

As you will see from that reply the decision to grant home leave was reviewed by the governor at Birmingham. The area manager has also reviewed the circumstances in which Mr. Jarvis was granted home leave and he also concluded that the decision was not an unreasonable one.

In the circumstances I am satisfied that there is no need for a further enquiry into this matter.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answers of 7 June, Official Report, column 32 and 25 June, Official Report, column 325, how many projects are covered by the £13.5 million expected cost of the market-testing programme for 1993-94; to what services they relate; how much is to be spent on each project; and how much will be paid to outside consultants for each project.

Mr. Hague: The expected cost of £13.5 million was broadly estimated for the financial year 1993-94. At present there is a total of some 50 individual projects and they relate to the following services:

Accommodation and Office Services
Archival Storage
Audit
Catering
Customer Services
Data Entry
Debt Recovery
Fraud
Legal Services
Medical Services
Personnel
Printing Publishing
Recruitment

Storage and Distribution
Training
Video Production

The individual projects will be subject to a market test through the tendering of some 93 separate contracts/service level agreements.

It is not possible to state the level of expenditure on individual projects as this largely depends on each project's needs, which are dictated by the scale and complexity revealed by the market testing process.

While there is an anticipated need for some external consultancy, it is not possible to determine the level of expenditure of individual projects.

EC Expenditure

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each country in the European Community (a) the total expenditure on social protection, (b) the per capita expenditure and (c) expenditure as a proportion of gross domestic product.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inland Revenue (Relocation)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his latest estimate of the public expenditure savings which will arise from the transfer of the Inland Revenue headquarters office from London to Nottingham; and how these savings are to be achieved in terms of accommodation, staffing and other general running costs;

(2) when he expects the transfer of Inland Revenue headquarters office from London to Nottingham to be completed;

(3) what is the current cost of running Inland Revenue headquarters offices in London and Nottingham, indicating accommodation and salaries costs in each place.

Mr. Dorrell: The offices included in the Inland Revenue's relocation from London to Nottingham are a number of headquarter units and a number of operational offices. At present, just under two thirds of the posts or staff involved have already moved to temporary accommodation in Nottingham, and the remainder are still based in London.

The cost in 1992-93 of the staff already in Nottingham ia around £20 million, of which some £14 million is pay and £2·5 million is accommodation. The 1992-93 cost of the staff still based in London is about £21 million of which some £13·5 million is pay and £3·5 million is accommodation.

The currently estimated annual net pay and accommodation savings are around £12 million a year from 1996-97 to which some £4·5 million is pay and £7·5 million is accommodation.

On present plans, the relocation to the new purpose-built centre will be completed by April 1995.

No. 11 Downing Street

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost of replacing the carpeting on the second floor of No. 11 Downing street.

Sir John Cope: The carpet on the second floor of No. 11 Downing street has not been replaced. One room on the second floor was recarpeted in 1991 at a cost of £963.

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Ms Eagle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the savings from restricting all tax allowances and reliefs to (a) a 25 per cent. rate of tax and (b) a 20 per cent. rate of tax, showing the amounts for each allowance and relief.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 July 1993]: The estimated full-year yields at 1993-94 income levels are shown in the table.

£ million

	Restriction to
	25 per cent.	20 per cent.
All allowances and reliefs	2,400	8,900
Personal allowance (excluding age related addition)	1,000	5,200
Married couple's allowance (excluding age related addition)	320	1,100
Age allowance[1]	—	100
Mortgage interest relief[2]	—	860
Pension contribution reliefs[3]	470	1,000

[1] The higher levels of the age-related personal and married couple's allowance given to those aged 65 and over, subject to the income limit.
[2] Mortgage interest relief is currently restricted to the basis rate of tax. The yield from restricting the relief to 20 per cent. is based on the conventional assumption that interest rates remain at their current levels.
[3] Employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and contributions to personal pensions including retirement annuity premia and free standing additional voluntary contributions.

No account has been taken of possible behavioural changes resulting from such restrictions. Figures for the major allowances and reliefs show the yield from restricting each allowance or relief separately. If two or more were restricted, the total yield would be greater than the sum of the figures for individual allowances.

EC Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Brussels on 12 July. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed the convergence programme circulated by the United Kingdom in May of this year. The programme reflects the Government's economic strategy for sustained non-inflationary growth set out in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" published on Budget day. In discussion, I underlined the Government's determination to take the action necessary to reduce the budget deficit. I also drew the Council's attention to the emerging signs of broad-based economic recovery, our recent good record on inflation, and highlighted the favourable prospects for growth in the United Kingdom economy by comparison with other member states.

The Council welcomed the United Kingdom programme as ambitious and built on realistic assumptions and there was support for the Government's commitment to a firm anti-inflationary strategy. The adoption of a budgetary consolidation strategy and the measures taken in the Budget were welcomed. Ministers also noted the substantial progress already achieved by the United Kingdom in introducing structural reforms and welcomed the Government's continued commitment to supply-side reform.

The general economic situation in the Community was also discussed in the context of the Council's six-monthly multilateral surveillance discussions. Ministers underlined the importance of the conclusions of the Copenhagen European Council on economic recovery and unemployment. The Council also stressed the need to address fiscal imbalances and to create conditions which would permit further reduction of interest rates in some member states. It was agreed that national convergence programmes were a valuable instrument of economic policy co-ordination. Without prejudice to the national responsibility for programmes, it was agreed that it would be desirable for them to cover a common time horizon and for them to be updated annually.

Ministers had a first discussion of the Commission's ideas for interest rate subsidies for European investment bank lending to small and medium-sized enterprises and bridging finance for structural funds spending in the context of a general discussion of follow-up to the European Council. These proposals are likely to return to the Council later in the year.

Finally, there was a short discussion of tax-free allowances for travellers entering the Community from third countries and travellers within the Community. Germany maintained its objections to the increases proposed.

No formal votes were taken. The Council conclusions on the United Kingdom convergence programme and the communiqué on multilateral surveillance were agreed by consensus.

WALES

Valuation Tribunals

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many (a) officers and (b) members of staff employed by the joint Gwynedd/Clwyd valuation tribunals office speak Welsh; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he proposes to take to ensure that appellants in Gwynedd are able to correspond with the officers of the joint Gwynedd/Clwyd valuation tribunal office and to have their cases heard through the medium of the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many (a) officers and (b) members of staff employed by the joint Gwynedd/Clwyd valuation tribunal office have a sufficient knowledge of the Welsh language to correspond through the medium of the language; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In appointing staff to the new joint office, the Gwynedd and Clwyd valuation tribunals were required to take account of the Secretary of State's policy that a fully bilingual service should be provided. Questions about the staff appointments are matters for the tribunals themselves as the employers. The tribunals are being provided with the necessary resources to pay for the Welsh language training of staff; and to deal with any specific issues concerning Welsh language correspondence and enquiries. The tribunals hear cases in Welsh as appropriate and will continue to do so.

Neurology

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the specialist centres in Wales in neurology and the treatment of epilepsy, indicating the number of patients treated by each centre in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The hospitals listed in the table treated patients in the speciality of neurology during the financial year 1991-92. It is not known centrally how many patients treated for epilepsy are included with the figures. It should be noted that patients with a diagnosis relating to neurological problems may sometimes be treated by consultants in other specialties.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will indicate the proportion of patients to each neurologist in each district health authority and health trust area in Wales;

(2) how many neurologists are based within each district health authority and health trust in Wales; and how many neurologists specialise in epilepsy.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of neurologists and patients per neurologist is given in the table. It is not known centrally how many of the neurologists specialise in epilepsy.

Housing Associations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to which of those housing associations operating in Wales are based (a) in Wales and (b) outside Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is Housing for Wales policy to provide grant aid only to registered housing associations based in Wales. The whole of the development programme is therefore carried out by Welsh associations; but a few English associations continue to own and manage small numbers of homes in Wales.

Burial Grounds

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding differences between the responsibilities of the Church in Wales and the Church of England in relation to the maintenance of closed burial grounds; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The only representations received on this subject have come from the hon. Gentleman: four letters since June 1990. My right hon. Friend does not propose to take any action at this stage.

Health Line Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the monthly amount of inquiries made to Health Line Wales since it was set up; and what independent evaluation he has commissioned of the value for money to be obtained from its operation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Between 30 November 1992 and 30 June 1993, a total of 1,703 calls were received by Health Line Wales, broken down by month.

	Number
January	208
February	580
March	374
April	252
May	196
June	93

All calls are monitored and this information forms part of the full internal evaluation of the service currently being undertaken. It will include an external consumer satisfaction survey by independent market researchers of a random sample of the users of the service. The evaluation report is expected during early August.

Young People

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of (a) 18-year-olds, (b) 17-year-olds and (c) 16-year-olds in January (i) 1991, (ii) 1992 and (iii) 1993; and if he will list for each year the number in full-time education in (1) schools, including maintained, independent and special schools and (2) further education, excluding those on YTS in colleges.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information required is given in the table.

	16 years	17 years	18 years

[3] Full time and sandwich courses at November of each academic year, ages at 31 August preceding each academic year.
[4] Data for 1993 are provisional.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance he has granted to the Welsh Grant-maintained Schools Association; what assistance in kind has been granted to the association; what proposals he has for further grant-in-aid; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My Department does not provide assistance, financial or otherwise, to the Welsh Grant-Maintained Schools Association. However, officials have met members of the organisation to discuss a wide range of issues relating to the grant-maintained sector in Wales.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Offshore Oil and Gas Licensing

Mr. Cormack: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to release information regarding the special conditions attached to blocks awarded in the 14th offshore oil and gas licensing round.

Mr. Eggar: The special conditions attached to blocks awarded in the 14th offshore licensing round are the most far reaching to date in terms of environmental protection. It is my intention that those conditions attached to licences in order to protect the environment should be made available. My officials are currently consulting the industry and those bodies which advised on the conditions regarding the separation of their commercially confidential elements from those which can be disclosed. I am anxious to release as much of this information as possible.

Defence Industry (Reduction)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what specific steps are being taken by his Department to assist those areas which have been affected by the recent reductions in the level of defence procurement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 13 July 1993]: My Department provides advice to defence companies on diversification opportunities, through the "Changing Tack" regional seminar programme and associated help manual. In addition, areas which are adversely affected by reductions in defence spending may be able to benefit from the EC Konver initiative, which will be worth some £15 million to the United Kingdom as a whole.

EC Funding

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those applicants which his Department has submitted or is planning to submit for funding under the Konver programme.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 13 July 1993]: The Konver scheme has not yet progressed so far. European Community procedures for such schemes require general national programmes to be written and approved before individual applications can be considered.

The European Commission has asked for proposed national programmes for Konver—not individual applications—to be sent to it by 31 August. Individual United Kingdom applications will be considered as soon as possible after the Commission has agreed the United Kingdom's Konver programme; I hope that that will be early in the autumn.

Meanwhile, in order that the scheme may proceed in the United Kingdom as soon as possible after the Brussels procedures have been completed, the Government will invite draft applications in August, following completion of the consultation process now being undertaken by my Department.

ENVIRONMENT

Industrial Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in his plans to conduct a survey of industrial pollution expenditure.

Mr. Yeo: We shall start work on the survey later this year.

Council Tax

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the calculation used in determining the scheme tax band when assessing levels of council tax transitional relief entitlement; and if he will list both the scheme and actual figures for every band in each London borough.

Mr. Baldry: Scheme taxes used in the calculation of transitional relief are calculated by charging authorities in accordance with part II of schedule 2 to The Council Tax (Transitional Reduction Scheme) (England) Regulations —SI 1993/175. For the other information requested, I refer the hon. Member to the tables that have been placed in the Library following the answers given to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 24 May 1993, Official Report, column 369, and to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne North (Mr. Henderson) on 31 March 1993, Official Report, column 295.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration governed his decision on the timing of the release of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's report on waste substitution; by what means the release of the report was publicised; what representations have been made to his Department before and after the release in regard to the timing and contents of the report; and what considerations of commercial sensitivity underlay the decision to remove certain information from the published version of the report.

Mr. Yeo: This report was placed in the Library of the House following agreement on the commercially sensitive material which needed to be withheld, and a RWMAC press release was issued. There remain a number of points that require clarification and RWMAC will be asked to undertake further work on this and to report. This further report will be made available on the same basis.

PSA BM Scotland

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the bids which were received in response to the competitive tender of the PSA BM business; and what was the basis on which the successful tender by SERCO was accepted.

Mr. Baldry: The following bidders were shortlisted as potential purchasers of PSA Building Management Scotland: a joint venture between Amey and Sir Alexander Gibb and partners; Serco; and a management buy-out team. Serco was chosen as the purchaser because it best met the criteria set by the Government. The main criteria were:

the overall financial value of the offers bidders' financial status

the credibility of bidders' long term future plans bidders' commitment to developing the business in the private sector bidders' intentions regarding staff and the prospects for staff bidders' response to the proposed secondment and pension arrangements bidders' commitment to ensuring continuity of service to existing customers"

THORP

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, following his recent announcement of a further consultation period on THORP, if he will list (a) the relevant officials, (b) agencies and (c) consultants, who will be involved; and by what processes the consultation will be carried out.

Mr. Yeo: We intend to consult the same statutory consultees and other bodies who were recently consulted by the regulatory authorities, and to make the consultation documents available to the public in the same way.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) of 28 June, Official Report, column 392, whether the documents he intends to release in connection with a further round of consultation will be made available in translation in the language of the principal countries contracted for reprocessing at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Yeo: No.

Environmental Ideas

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to improve the communication of environmental ideas, problems and solutions to the public.

Mr. Yeo: My colleagues and I take every opportunity to raise public awareness of environmental matters. The Department runs information campaigns on specific issues and encourages and supports local authorities, industry and the voluntary sector in their public information work in the environmental field. In order to get the environmental debate on a sound factual footing, we published in October last year "The UK Environment", the first comprehensive compilation of statistically based information on our environment. Returns from readers show that it has been welcomed as a positive contribution to improving public understanding.

Environmental Performance Indicators

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he or officials of his Department have had with the Chemical Industries Association on environmental performance indicators.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend is due to meet the Chemical Industries Association on Tuesday 20 July and this is one of the topics proposed for discussion.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to produce environmental sensitivity maps of the United Kingdom continental shelf area indicating where the Government would not allow exploration for oil and gas.

Mr. Yeo: None: it is more efficient to consider these questions in relation to each area as and when the possibility of licences for exploration is considered.

Warehouse Racking Systems

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to implement the recommendation of the Wood committee that warehouse racking systems should be deleted from class 4 of the Plant and Machinery Order.

Mr. Baldry: We are currently considering all the Wood committee's recommendations as part of the preparation for the 1995 rating revaluation.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what information published by, or received from Nirex his Department based the reply to question 8 contained in his departmental memorandum to the Defence Committee, HC-Paper 549, page 38.

Mr. Aitken: The reply to the question referred to was based on information contained in confidential management documents produced by Nirex. Some of this information is also contained in the publicly available Nirex report No. 327, dated 21 October 1992.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many copies of his Department's brochure, "Trident: Thirty Years of the Polaris Sales Agreement" have been published, at what cost; and to whom it has been disbributed.

Mr. Aitken: A total of 10,000 copies of the brochure "Trident: Thirty Years of the Polaris Sales Agreement" have been printed. Copies have been sent to, among others, the media, members of the public, local councillors and hon. Members. A number have been placed in the Library of the House. The overall cost of producing the brochure was some £26,000.

Depleted Uranium Shells

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) of 1 July, Official Report, columns 630-31, when he expects to begin the environmental impact assessment at Eskmeals and Kirkcudbright, respectively, to which he refers; if Her Majesty's Health and Safety Executive produced a report following its 1986 visit to Kirkcudbright; and if Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution produced published reports following the visits to Eskmeals in 1989 and 1993 to which he refers.

Mr. Aitken: My Department is already in the process of commissioning independent consultants to undertake an environmental impact assessment at both Eskmeals and Kirkcudbright. A suitable company will be engaged by late summer or early autumn. The Health and Safety Executive did produce a report following its 1986 visit to Kirkcudbright. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution did not produce published reports following its visits to Eskmeals in 1989 and 1993.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department has conducted on the pyrophoric qualities of depleted uranium when distributed into particulate matter on impact in an armour-piercing shell.

Mr. Aitken: Neither the Ministry of Defence nor the Defence Research Agency has conducted studies or trials specifically addressing this phenomenon. Data available from United States sources indicate that it has no military significance.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 639, if Her Majesty's Government made any submissions to the European Commission, pursuant to article 34 of chapter III of the Euratom treaty, when United Kingdom depleted uranium shells were tested at La Gramat in France in 1990.

Mr. Aitken: The Euratom treaty does not apply to military activities. There was therefore no requirement to make any submission to the European Commission regarding the testing of depleted uranium shells at Gramat in France.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when British Nuclear Fuels was awarded the contract to monitor for radioactivity at the Dundrennan test range at Kirkcudbright following the testing of depleted uranium shells; and if the monitoring reports have been published.

Mr. Aitken: British Nuclear Fuel's contract to analyse samples from the Kirkcudbright range commenced on 1 May 1992 and was renewed earlier this year. As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) on 1 July 1993, Official Report, column 630, copies of the monitoring reports on the three ranges where DU rounds have been fired will be placed in the House of Commons Library once they have been checked to confirm that no classified information is included.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the tests for the armour-piercing capability of depleted uranium shells are conducted.

Mr. Aitken: All tests in the United Kingdom of the armour-piercing capability of DU shells are carried out in the enclosed butt facility, known locally as "VJ Battery", at Eskmeals. The tests at Kirkcudbright are to test the range and accuracy of DU rounds and no firings have ever been carried out against armour targets there.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 5 July, Official Report, column 51, if he will set out (a) how many depleted uranium shells have been recovered following test firing into the Solway firth and (b) what monitoring has been undertaken of the Solway firth as to radioactive contamination from the shells.

Mr. Aitken: No DU rounds have been recovered from the Solway firth to date. Environmental monitoring arrangements are set out in the reply of my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces' to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 14 June, Official Report, column 474.

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition planned to be held in Aldershot between 5 and 10 September.

Mr. Aitken: We have received numerous written representations concerning the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition both from hon. Members relaying the views of their constituents and direct from members of the public.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what tests and studies the chemical and biological establishment at Porton Down has carried out on the organophosphorous binary reactant QL; when these experiments were carried out; and for what purpose;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 163, how many memoranda of understanding have been agreed in the field of chemical and biological defence, as opposed to offensive chemical and biological warfare, involving Britain and the United States of America since 1963; what was the subject and nature of each memorandum of understanding; and in which year each memorandum of understanding was agreed;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 162, what information his Department has with the United States of America relating to technical work on its binary chemical weapon, M-687 155 mm artillery round; and how and when this information was exchanged;

(4) in which years VX nerve gas was stored at the Ministry of Defence's establishment at Nancekuke in Cornwall; and why it was stored there;

(5) pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 160, when Australia and New Zealand joined the tripartite technical co-operation programme; for what reasons Britain agreed to each of these two countries joining the programme; and if information was exchanged under the programme on the subject of chemical and biological defence and warfare before 1967;

(6) when the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down started and completed work on the AR5 aircrew respiratory system; in conjunction with which other countries the research and development of the system was carried out; under which specific defence agreement this collaboration was arranged; and if this system is now in service with any other countries;

(7) pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 162, how many exchange postings in relation to binary chemical weapons the United Kingdom and United States Governments arranged and in which years; and under which specific defence agreement these postings were arranged;

(8) what experiments his Department carried out on Q fever; when these experiments were conducted; for what purpose the results of these studies were passed to either the United States of America, Canada or Australia; and why and when these results were passed to other countries;

(9) if all research carried out by the Ministry of Defence's chemical and biological research establishment at Porton Down into LSD was conducted within the establishment itself;

(10) what factors led to the signing of the 1980 memorandum of understanding between the United Kingdom, the United States of America and Canada on chemical and biological defence, as referred to in his answer of 21 May 1992, Official Report, column 255;

(11) pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 162, when the two memoranda of understanding referred to in the answer were signed; how many other memoranda of understanding relating to chemical and biological defence Britain has signed with Australia since 1963; and what they were about;

(12) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) on 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 164, if he will list the location, dates and participating countries at each of the subsequent tripartite conferences on toxicological warfare until the present day; and if he will outline the recommendations and conclusions of each of these conferences;

(13) which British scientific research institutions have received stocks of toxins and biological agents from the United States of America Department of Defence since 1979; which toxins and biological agents have been transferred and when; which United States Department of Defence establishments have supplied these toxins and biological agents; under which defence agreements these toxins and biological agents were transferred; and for what purpose on each occasion;

(14) on what dates, and in which publications, scientists on extramural research projects funded by the chemical and biological defence establishment, Porton Down, published their findings in 1991, as referred to on page 15 of the establishment's annual report 1991-92;

(15) for what reasons the Ministry of Defence delayed dismantling its nerve gas agent plant at Nancekuke, Cornwall after the Ministry had decided to decommission the plant; what tasks were carried out at the site in the intervening years between the decommissioning and dismantling; and if these tasks were connected to the United Kingdom's chemical and biological defence programme;

(16) pursuant to his answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 164, if he will publish the official name and details of the informal agreement under which the 15th tripartite conference on toxicological warfare was organised; and if this agreement still exists;

(17) how many members of the 1985 independent advisory group on Gruinard island have since been on scientific advisory committees serving the Ministry of Defence or the the Porton Down chemical and biological warfare establishment;

(18) what experiments his Department has carried out on the chemical agent B staphylococcal enterotoxin; when and where these tests and studies were carried out; for what purpose; when the results of these experiments were first exchanged with the United States of America, Canada or Australia; and if this exchange occurred under the arrangements of the technical co-operation programme.

Mr. Hanley: These are matters for the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document and I have asked him to reply.

Letters from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 July 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what tests and studies the chemical and biological establishment at Porton Down has carried out on the organophosphorus binary reactant QL; when these experiments were carried out; and for what purpose (Question 12, Order Paper, 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. As part of this work, it is necessary to evaluate the potential hazard from nerve agents such as VX. In order to do this, work was carried out at the Chemical Defence Establishment, Nancekuke from early 1960 to about 1968 to study the transesterification process involving QL as part of the study into the nerve gas VX.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him, pursuant to his Answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 163, how many memoranda of understanding have been agreed in the field of chemical and biological defence, as opposed to offensive chemical and biological warfare, involving Britain and the United States of America since 1963; what was the subject and nature of each memorandum of understanding; and in which year each memorandum of understanding was agreed (Question 13, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The United Kingdom abandoned offensive work on chemical and biological weapons in the late 1950s and since then the role of the Chemical and Biological Defence

Establishment has been to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The following agreements in the field of chemical and biological defence involving Britain and the United States of America have been agreed since 1963;

(a) The United Kingdom-United States of America-Canada Memorandum of Understanding on chemical and biological defence was signed in 1980 and addresses research, development, production and procurement of chemical and biological defence equipment.

(b) The NATO Army Armaments Group (NAAG) Panel VII on nuclear, biological and chemical defence involving both Britain and the United States of America was set up in 1967. This addresses the standardisation of NBC equipment and procedures.

(c) The United Kingdom-United States-Canada-Australia American British Canadian Australian (ABCA) Armies agreed The Basic Standardisation Agreement in 1964 with the aims of ensuring the fullest cooperation and collaboration between the Armies, the highest possible degree of interoperability through standardisation and the greatest possible economy through the use of combined resources and effort. This includes a group known as the Quadripartite Working Group (QWG) which has a panel on NBC defence.

(d) The Technical Cooperation Programme which was set up in 1958 activated its Sub Group E on chemical and biological defence in 1967 which has the aim of promoting collaboration in chemical and biological defence research.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him, pursuant to his Answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 162, what information his Department has with the United States of America relating to technical work on its binary chemical weapon, M-687 155 mm artillery round; and how and when this information was exchanged (Question 15, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The United States of America has provided technical information to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down which has enabled us to evaluate the potential hazard to the United Kingdom Armed Forces should a potential aggressor State utilize biological binary weapons.

4. This information has been provided during the course of the development of the M-687 binary artillery round as part of the regular briefings provided by the United States on their chemical and biological programme. Much of this information has been in the public domain and has been provided to the United Kingdom for background information.

5. As the United Kingdom abandoned all offensive work on chemical weapons in the late 1950s, there has been no collaboration with the United States of America on the M-687 binary chemical artillery round.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him in which years VX nerve gas was stored at the Ministry of Defence's establishment at Nancekuke in Cornwall; and why it was stored there (Question 16, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Samples of VX nerve agent were stored at Nancekuke between 1957 and 1976 for studies into the storage stability of this agent so as to assist in our evaluation of the potential hazard to the United Kingdom Armed Forces should an aggressor produce such materials.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him pursuant to his Answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 160, when Australia and New Zealand joined the Tripartite Technical Co-operation Programme; for what reasons Britain agreed to each of these two countries joining the programme; and if information was exchanged under the programme on the subject of chemical and biological defence and warfare before 1967 (Question 19, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Australia joined the Tripartite Cooperation Programme in 1965 and, since it was no longer a tripartite organisation, the name of TTCP was changed to The Technical Cooperation Programme thus retaining the same initials. In 1969 New Zealand also joined The Technical Cooperation Programme. Our records do not indicate the reasons why the United Kingdom, US and Canada agreed to each of the two countries joining the programme.

3. Information on chemical and biological defence was exchanged prior to 1967 under the American, British, Canadian and Australian (ABCA) agreement and before that under the close cooperation which existed between the Allies during World War II.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him when the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down started and completed work on the AR5 Aircrew Respiratory System; in conjunction with what other countries the research and development of the system was carried out; under which specific defence agreement this collaboration was arranged; and if this system is now in service with any other countries (Question 21, Order, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down started work on the AR5 Aircrew Respiratory System project in 1976 whan the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment provided advice to the lead Establishments of the Defence Research Agency Farnborough (then the Royal Aircraft Establishment Farnborough) and the RAF Institute of Aviation Medicine on overall NBC philosophy, materials and testing. CBDE has continued to provide advice in support of the in-service deployment of the AR5 Aircrew Respiratory System.

3. No other countries were involved in the development of the AR5 which is currently in-service with the UK Armed Forces and is also used by the US Navy and Canadian forces.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him pursuant to his Answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 162, how many exchange postings in relation to binary chemical weapons the United Kingdom and United States governments arranged and in which years; and under which specific defence agreement these postings were arranged (Question 23, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. As the United Kingdom abandoned work on offensive chemical and biological weapons in the late 1950s, there have been no exchange postings in relation to binary chemical weapons between the United Kingdom and the United States Governments as the US binary programme began in the 1970s.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what experiments his Department carried out on Q fever, when these experiments were conducted; for what purpose the results of these studies were passed to either the United States of America, Canada or Australia; and why and when these results were passed to other countries (Question 27, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has carried out research on Coxiella Burnettii, the causative agent of Q-Fever. This work was carried out in the late 1980s and has been directed at the development of identification techniques for the organism based on gene probe and antibody technologies. The results of this work have formed part of the programme of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment which is the subject of collaboration with the United States, Canada and Australia under The Technical Cooperation Programme and with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him if all research carried out by the Ministry of Defence's Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down into LSD was conducted within the establishment itself (Question 30, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The majority of the work at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment into the evaluation of the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is carried out within the Establishment. Extramural research contracts are placed with universities and other higher education institutes and industry when these outside bodies have an appropriate expertise that is not available within the Establishment and which compliments the expertise of the Establishment.

4. Insofar as the research into LSD is concerned, most of this work was carried out within the Establishment. Some complementary research was carried out in a university under extramural research contract to the Establishment.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what factors led to the signing of the 1980 memorandum of understanding between the United Kingdom, the United States of America and Canada on chemical and biological defence, as referred to in his Answer of 21 May 1992, Official Report, column 255 (Question 31, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. The Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention was signed in 1972 and entered into force in 1975. As it was then perceived that the threat from biological weapons had reduced, steps were taken in both the United Kingdom and the United States to reduce their biological defence programmes. There was also a reduction in chemical defence work in the 1970s.

4. As a consequence, it was recognised in both the United Kingdom and the United States that there would be mutual benefits from close collaboration in the fields of chemical and biological defence. Consequently, the Memorandum of Understanding was drawn up between the United Kingdom and the United States together with Canada and signed in 1980 with the objective of integrating the chemical and biological defence programmes of the three countries to the maximum possible extent.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him, pursuant to his Answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 162, when the two memoranda of understanding referred to in the answer were signed; how many other memoranda of understanding relating to chemical and biological defence Britain has signed with Australia since 1963; and what they were about (Question 32, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The Memorandum of Agreement between the UK and Australia relating to a joint programme of research, investigation and material testing at the Joint Tropical Trials Research Establishment (JTTRE) was signed in October 1977 and this superseded the Joint Tropical Research Unit Memorandum of Understanding signed in December 1970 which in turn replaced an earlier Memorandum of Understanding in 1962 setting up the Joint Tropical Research Unit.

3. There have been three other agreements with Australia relating to chemical and biological defence since 1963:

(a) The Technical Cooperation Programme set up in 1958 under which chemical and biological defence was addresed in Sub Group E which was created in 1967. Australia joined The Technical Cooperation Programme in 1965 and information on research into chemical and biological defence has been exchanged with Australia under this agreement since Sub Group E was created in 1967.

(b) The United Kingdom-United States-Canada-Australia American British Canadian Australian (ABCA) Armies agreed The Basic Standardisation Agreement in 1964 with the aims of ensuring the fullest cooperation and collaboration between the Armies, the highest possible degree of interoperability through standardisation and the greatest possible economy through the use of combined resources and effort. This includes a group known as the Quadripartite Working panel on NBC defence.

(c) The United Kingdom United States and Canada Air Standization Coordinating Committee (ASCC) was extended to include Australia in 1964; the ASCC has a working party addressing CB defence.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him pursuant to his Answer to the honourable Member for Brent East on 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 164, if he will list the location, dates and participating countries at each of the subsequent tripartite conferences on toxicological warfare until the present day; and if he will outline the recommendations and conclusions of each of these conferences (Question 34, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The locations, dates and participating countries at each of the subsequent tripartite conference on toxicological warfare until the present day are as follows:

(a) Fifteenth Conference held in the United Kingdom in 1960 and attended by representatives of Canada, United Kingdom and United States.

(b) Sixteenth Conference held in Canada in 1962 and attended by representatives of Canada, United Kingdom and United States.

(c) Seventeenth Conference held in the USA in 1964 and attended by representatives of Australia, Canada, United Kingdom and United States.

3. In 1965 the America, British, Canadian and Australian (ABCA) Armies Group reviewed the effectiveness of these toxicological conferences. This led to their being subsumed into the Technical Cooperation Programme under which Sub Group E on Chemical and Biological Defence was created in 1967.

4. It is not practicable to outline the recommendations and conclusions of each of these conferences as these were the subject of trinational and, in the 17th meeting quadrinational agreement. It would be necessary to seek the agreement of all the countries concerned to the release of the recommendations and conclusions of these conferences.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him which British scientific research institutions have received stocks of toxins and biological agents from the United States of America Department of Defense since 1979; which toxins and biological agents have been transferred and when; which United States Department of Defense establishments have supplied these toxins and biological agents; under which defence agreements these toxins and biological agents were transferred; and for what purpose on each occasion (Question 36, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to have available small quantities of the materials which may be used as chemical or biological warfare agents by a potential aggressor.

3. It is not possible for us to comment on what toxins and biological agents may have been received by other British scientific research institutions from the United States of America Department of Defense since 1979. This reply is necessarily limited to the Ministry of Defence scientific research institutions.

4. The quantities involved are very small and in no way could be regarded as stocks of agent. Small quantities of the following toxins and micro-organisms which might be used by a potential aggressor as biological agents have been provided:

(a) Shellfish toxin (saxitoxin) from the then US Army Chemical Research and Development Center in 1982

(b) Clostridium perfringens betatoxin from the US Army Medical Research Institute for Infectious Diseases in 1992.

(c) Bacillus anthracis strains from the US Army Medical Research Institute for Infectious Diseases in 1985. The strains received did not contain the toxin plasmid and are regarded as attenuated strains.

5. In addition other materials including some vaccines and simulants have been transferred which are neither toxins or biological agents. All the materials transferred have been to support collaboration into the provision of effective protective measures.

6. These materials have been supplied under The Technical Cooperation Programme and under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him on what dates, and in which publications, scientists on extramural research projects funded by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, published their findings in 1991, as referred to on page 15 of the Establishment's annual report 1991-92 (Question 39, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. It is not the practice of the Ministry of Defence on both national and personal security grounds to identify links between the Ministry of Defence and the contractors engaged on extramural research. It is left to the individual contractors to decide whether or not to disclose their contracts with the Ministry of Defence. I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful on this occasion.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him for what reasons the Ministry of Defence delayed dismantling its nerve gas agent plant at Nancekuke, Cornwall after the Ministry had decided to decommission the plant; what tasks were carried out at the site in the intervening years between the decommissioning and dismantling; and if these tasks were connected to the United Kingdom's chemical and biological defence programme (Question 41, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Work on the pilot scale nerve agent plant at Nancekuke was completed and the plant decontaminated in January 1956 before the decision was taken to decommission the plant later in that year. The plant was partially dissembled to allow other work to be carried out on the site. This other work included tasks related to the chemical and biological defence programme such as the manufacture of a dye for detector paper, a chemical needed to produce P2S, which is an ingredient in medical countermeasures against nerve agents, as well as research work aimed at determining whether other nerve agents presented a hazard to British Armed Forces.

3. The plant was not finally dismantled until the closure of Nancekuke in the late 1970s because of the absence until then of the necessary resources as great care was taken to avoid any hazard to the staff involved in the dismantling work and to ensure that any toxic chemicals were safely disposed of.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him, pursuant to his Answer of 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 164, if he will publish the official name and details of the informal agreement under which the 15th Tripartite Conference on Toxicological Warfare was organised; and if this agreement still exists (Question 44, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Exeuctive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The 15th Tripartite Conference on Toxicological Warfare had its origins in informal agreements of 1946 which in turn had their roots in World War II allied cooperation between the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada. Whilst the agreement which led to the Toxicological Warfare conferences no longer exists, its spirit continues in respect of the cooperation between United Kingdom, United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand under the Technical Cooperation Programme in the activities under Sub Group E on Chemical and Biological Defence. This transition from the Tripartite and eventually Quadripartite Conferences occurred in the mid 1960s.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him how many members of the 1985 Independent Advisory Group on Gruinard Island have since been on scientific advisory committees serving the Ministry of Defence or the Porton Down chemical and biological warfare establishment. (Question 47, Order Paper 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The Independent Advisory Group on Gruinard Island was established by the then Chief Scientific Adviser of the Ministry of Defence writing to the President of the Royal Society to invite him to nominate a Chairman for the Independent Advisory Group. The Chairman of the Advisory Group then decided who he wished to have on his Advisory Group and he chose its membership which included a representative from the Scottish Home and Health Department. At the time of their appointment, none of the members of the Independent Advisory Group on Gruinard Island were on or had been on scientific advisory committees to the Ministry of Defence or to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down.

3. The Independent Advisory Group on Gruinard Island carried out its work during the period 1985 to 1989 which resulted in Gruinard Island being returned to its original owners in May 1990. Since becoming members of the Independent Advisory Group on Gruinard Island, one member of the Group has served as a member of the Chemical and Biological Defence Board of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council and subsequently as a member of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what experiments his Department has carried out on the chemical agent B staphylococcal enterotoxin; when and where these tests and studies were carried out; for what purpose; when the results of these experiments were first exchanged with the United States of America, Canada and Australia; and if this exchange occurred under the arrangements of the Technical

Co-operation Programme (Question 48, Order Paper, 8 July 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Staphylococcal enterotoxin B is a potent toxin produced by the bacterium staphylococcus aureus. The toxin causes vomiting and diarrhoea and is known to be highly active when delivered by the aerosol route and for these reasons, the toxin is considered to be a potential biological agent which might be used against the United Kingdom Armed Forces.

4. The Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has carried out studies on staphylococcal enterotoxin B to assess the potential hazard to the United Kingdom Armed Forces and to devise effective protective measures such as detection and medical countermeasures against this toxin. The results of this work have been exchanged with the United States, Canada and Australia under the Technical Co-operation Programme since 1979 and also with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence since 1980.

Defence Scientific Advisory Council

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name all the chairmen and chairwomen of the Defence Scientific Advisory Board since 1984.

Mr. Aitken: I assume that the hon. Member refers to the Defence Scientic Advisory Council. Its chairmen since 1984 have been:

1981 – 1984	Mr. P. E. Trier
1985 – 1991	Professor Sir J. I. G. Cadogan
1991 – present	Professor D. E. N. Davies

Army Recruitment

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department expects to implement plans for gender-free physical testing for recruitment to the Army.

Mr. Hanley: It is currently planned to introduce gender-free testing of Army recruits in April 1995.

Royal Family

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to his Department of expenditure in support of the royal family in respect of (a) the Royal Yacht, (b) the Queen's Flight, (c) royal flights in civil aircraft and (d) equerries for the 1992-93 financial year.

Mr. Hanley: Expenditure in 1993-93 was as follows:

	£ thousands
(a) Royal Yacht	8,361
(b) Queen's Flight	7,590
(c) Royal flights in civil aircraft	9
(d) Equerries	170

Note: The figure for The Queen's Flight is a total operating cost. The flight is not exclusively used by the Royal Family, but it is not possible to allocate expenditure to users without disproportionate cost.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 July Official Report, column 629, what is the proposed United Kingdom contribution to the 1994 budget for the preparatory commission for the organisation for the prohibition of chemical weapons; and how much will be charged to the estimates for 1993-94.

Mr. Hanley: The executive secretary intends to present his 1994 budget at the September plenary session of the preparatory commission of the chemical weapons convention. Until then it is not possible to give accurate assessments of the United Kingdom contribution and of how much will be charged to the estimates for 1993-94.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a full disclosure of the details of Britain's past chemical warfare activities, under the terms of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Hanley: After United Kingdom ratification and the convention has entered into force.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has of the existence of (a) Serbian and (b) Croatian regular forces in the territory of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Hanley: We are aware of media reports claiming the presence of Serbian and Croatian regular forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Any information gathered by UNPROFOR troops about force composition would be passed through the United Nations chain of command, ultimately to the Security Council. As a member of the Security Council, the United Kingdom receives information reported by UNPROFOR.

Military Tasks

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to provide more detailed information on the estimated costs of the individual force elements allocated to military tasks, as described in Cm. 2270, page 23.

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to publish detailed information on the estimated costs of force elements.

Tornado

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role Tornado F3 aircraft and regular infantry batallions have in the provision of a strategic and substrategic nuclear capability.

Mr. Hanley: Tornado F3 aircraft are required as part of the forces necessary to safeguard the deployment of the deterrent. Regular infantry battalions are required as part of the forces necessary to safeguard the physical security of nuclear assets and the command and control infrastructure. In both cases, the units involved are normally available to carry out other tasks in peacetime.

Surface-to-Air Missiles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sea-launched medium-range surface-to-air missile capability is currently operational.

Mr. Hanley: RN carriers and anti-air warfare destroyers are currently armed with the Seadart medium-range surface-to-air missile system.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ground-launched medium-range surface-to-air missile capability is currently operational.

Mr. Hanley: There is no ground-launched medium-range surface-to-air missile currently in operational service with United Kingdom Forces. RAF Tornado F3 aircraft provide the United Kingdom with a medium-range air defence capability, and these are supplemented by Royal Navy destroyers and Sea Harriers. A shorter range ground-launched surface-to-air missile capability is provided by the Rapier and Javelin air defence systems.

Queen's Flight

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to the procurement of new aircraft for the Queen's flight.

Mr. Hanley: There are no current plans to procure new aircraft for the Queen's flight.

Diego Garcia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current size of the naval party based at Diego Garcia.

Mr. Hanley: The party consists of three officers and 38 ratings and marines.

Service Units

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether information on the average annual running costs of service units has contributed to the information given in Cm. 2270, page 23.

Mr. Hanley: The estimated force element costs referred to in "Defending Our Future"—Cm. 2270—were derived from a wide range of data sources, including, where available and appropriate, running cost information.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current average annual running costs of all those units listed in Cm. 2270, page 22, table 3.

Mr. Hanley: Running cost information could be provided for those units listed at page 22 of "Defending Our Future" only at disproportionate cost. Information on running costs for each top-level Budget is set out in the supply estimates—Cm. 495-1.

Rapid Reaction Corps

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts concerning the future use of the Allied Command Europe rapid reaction corps in United Nations military operations.

Mr. Hanley: NATO Defence Ministers agreed at the December 1992 defence planning committee meeting that support for United Nations and CSCE peacekeeping should be included among the missions of NATO forces and headquarters. In principle, therefore, the Allied Command Europe rapid reaction corps would in future be available for such support to the United Nations in common with other NATO formations.

Defence Staff

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the compendium of staff targets and staff requirements, referred to in Cm. 2270, page 73.

Mr. Aitken: We plan to publish the compendium as a special issue of the "Defence Contracts Bulletin", on 21 July. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether compendium of staff targets and staff requirements that he is due to publish will include in-service dates.

Mr. Aitken: Yes.

Departmental Land

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much land his Department proposes to (a) purchase and (b) dispose of in the coming year.

Mr. Hanley: Purchase of land is carried out on an opportunity basis once a landowner has indicated a willingness to sell a particular area of land. Similarly, we do not maintain a record of the area of land we expect to dispose of as changes in site boundaries often occur before a property or piece of land is finally sold.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was his Department's total land holding in the United Kingdom for each of the past five years.

Mr. Hanley: My Department's total land holding in the United Kingdom for each of the past five years was:

1 April 1993 242,542 hectares
1 April 1992 243,333 hectares
1 April 1991 242,865 hectares
1 April 1990 240,613 hectares
1 April 1989 241,300 hectares

Service Accommodation

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards discount sales of Ministry of Defence flats to service personnel leaving the forces.

Mr. Hanley: Surplus flats in Scotland are wherever possible offered for sale to service personnel through the services' discount scheme. This scheme is open to all eligible service personnel, not just those leaving the forces. Surplus flats in England and Wales are not offered for sale through the discount scheme because of different property laws, and are instead offered for sale to housing associations in exchange for nomination rights on a percentage of the properties to house those leaving the services over the next few years. If sales cannot be agreed on this basis, the properties are offered for sale by tender on the open market.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards residence by separated wives of service personnel with children in Ministry of Defence married quarters not required for use.

Mr. Hanley: If the separation arises because the requirements of the service prevent a wife and family accompanying her husband on a posting, she will be allowed to remain in her married quarter for up to 12 months. If a service man is posted away for a longer period, his wife will normally be given the opportunity to join him. If she chooses not to, she must vacate her quarter within three months. If there are special or compassionate circumstances, which prevent her from joining her husband, she may be offered a surplus married quarter, subject to availability, in the area of her choice.

If the separation arises because of the breakdown of the marriage, an estranged wife will be allowed to remain in her married quarter for a period of 93 days, to allow her time to find alternative accommodation. If the marital breakdown occurs overseas, the wife will be moved at service expense to an address of her choice in the United Kingdom. If a wife has no home to go to, she will be offered a surplus married quarter in the United Kingdom, where she may stay for up to 93 days.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of providing caretaking for empty Ministry of Defence married quarters over the past year.

Mr. Hanley: The cost of providing caretaking for some 2,000 surplus married quarters in the process of being sold amounted to £270,000 in financial year 1992-93. Caretaking costs of empty properties which are not surplus to requirements are not separately identifiable.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel left the forces in 1992.

Mr. Hanley: 34,254 personnel left the services in 1992 and 19,292 joined.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Depleted Uranium Shells

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Ministry has made of the environmental effects of the test firing of depleted uranium shells (a) on land-based test ranges and (b) on the sea in regard to implications for flora and fauna of the test localities.

Mr. Aitken: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces' reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 14 June, Official Report, column 474.

SCOTLAND

Forest Charter

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action has been taken by Her Majesty's Government in the light of the initiatives produced by the United Kingdom forest charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The issues raised in the forest charter, a statement produced last November by the United Kingdom Forests Network, are being considered in the preparation of the United Kingdom's national plan for the implemtation of the forest principles agreed in Rio. The views of non-governmental organisations will be sought later this year before the plan is completed.

Glasgow Royal Infirmary

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends putting out to tender the contract to construct the new maternity unit at Glasgow royal infirmary which will serve eastern Glasgow; what construction timescale is involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 13 July 1993]: Plans for the development of a new maternity unit at Glasgow royal infirmary are currently the subject of detailed consideration and at this time no formal submission for approval to build has been submitted.

It is primarily a matter for individual health bodies to progress building projects from approval to build through to the tender stage and the timing of construction work is dependent on this process.

Scotland in the Union Initiative

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public bodies he envisages relocating functions and staff within Scotland as part of the Scotland in the Union initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1993]: The White Paper "Scotland in the Union" (Cm 2225) indicates that the Government intend to seek opportunities for further dispersal both of parts of the Scottish Office and of non-departmental public bodies for which I am responsible. I announced on 29 June our decision to relocate part of the Scottish tourist board to Inverness and we shall continue to seek to identify other units or bodies which it would be operationally feasible and financially attractive to relocate when practical opportunities occur.

Prisoners

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average daily prison population at the latest date for which figures are available and in the previous five years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 12 July 1993]: I have asked Mr. E. W. Frizzell, the chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service, to arrange for a reply to be given to the hon. Member.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 16 July 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Scottish Prison Service, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Question asking what was the average daily prison population at the latest date for which figures are available and in the previous 5 years.

On 25 June 1993 the actual population was 5772. The average population for the current financial year so far, ie 1 April 1993 to 25 June 1993 is 5827. The average population for the five previous financial years is as follows:

	Number
1991-92	4,897
1990-91	4,738
1989-90	4,886

	Number
1988-89	5,168
1987-88	5,421

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Theatres

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the overall amount, and proportions of theatre groups' incomes derived from ticket sales, grant aid, and private sector sponsorship in 1992 and 1982, including any ventures which are wholly commercial in character.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that the hon. Member's question relates to theatres in Scotland. The information requested is not held centrally. The following figures, provided by the Scottish Arts Council, relate to those drama companies that receive revenue funding from the council. No information is held on wholly commercial productions.

All figures are in £ at actual prices

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Israel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the admission of Israel to one of the regional groups at the United Nations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We believe Israel should be allowed into the Asian group of the United Nations. But until they are, we would not object to Israeli membership of the Western European and others group of the United Nations if there were a consensus among other member states.

Diplomatic Service

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what shrinkage has taken place of posts in Her Majesty's diplomatic service in Latin America in the last 12 months; and if he will pubish a table of numbers of United Kingdom-based diplomatic, aid and trade staff in each Latin American country for the most recent available date.

Mr. Goodlad: There has been no reduction in the number of British missions in Latin America in the last 12 months. The number of United Kingdom-based staff was reduced from 162 to 150 in the 12 months up to June 1993.

The table shows the number of diplomatic service staff in each post in June 1993, together with the man years dedicated to aid and trade.

Entry Clearance Staff

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many entry clearance application staff in each high commission or application point in the Indian sub-continent are (a) men and (b) women; and what facilities exist for female applications to be interviewed by women staff.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of (a) men and (b) women entry clearance application staff in each of the posts in the Indian sub-continent are;

	Men	Women
Islamabad	30	17
Karachi	5	7
New Delhi	10	17
Bombay	11	24
Madras	2	4
Calcutta	2	3
Colombo	4	6
Kathmandu	2	2
Dhaka	[1]—	[1]—

[1] Figures not available.

Facilities exist at all these posts for female applicants to be interviewed by female staff or to have a female officer present at the interview if they so wish.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions he has had with the Secretary-General of the United Nations as to the next action to be taken by the United Nations following the breakdown of the United Nations-sponsored talks on Cyprus; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with the Turkish Government following the recent breakdown on the United Nations-sponsored talks on the future of Cyprus; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what discussions he has had with the Greek Government following the breakdown of the United Nations-sponsored talks on Cyprus; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what discussions he has had with President Clerides following the breakdown of the United Nations-sponsored talks on Cyprus; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will raise the issue of Cyprus during the forthcoming Commonwealth conference of Heads of Government in Cyprus in October; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what actions he proposes to take with the Secretary-General of the United Nations to encourage sucessful continuation of the talks on the future of Famagusta; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The intercommunal dispute in Cyprus is the subject of intensive negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations Secretary-General. This process has our full support and it is important not to start new initiatives that may confuse or cut across the United Nations effort.

On 30 June the United Nations Secretary-General issued a report detailing the progress of the latest round of talks and proposed confidence-building measures which would bring both Varosha and Nicosia airport under United Nations control. Our permanent representative to the United Nations, in his capacity as President of the Security Council, replied by letter on 7 July asking the Secretary-General to continue his efforts and report again in September. The latter's special representative is at present visiting the area.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the way forward with Turkish Deputy Prime Minister Inonu on 14 July and will take further opportunities to promote the Secretary-General's mission between now and September.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions during the course of 1993 the British high commissioner to Cyprus has visited northern Cyprus; whom he has met during his visits; and what was the purpose of each visit.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: One of the duties of Her Majesty's high commissioner in Cyprus is to maintain contact with the leaders of the Turkish Cypriot community in order to promote and protect British consular or other interests. In this context he and members of his staff are frequently in northern Cyprus.

Kosovo

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Nations monitors are allocated for duties in Kosovo; how many United Nations monitors are currently on duty in Kosovo; from which countries they originate; what plans there are to increase United Nations monitors in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no United Nations monitors allocated for duties or currently on duty in Kosovo. However, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 14 July, column 556, on the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe missions in Serbia.

Mr. Sodagar Hussain

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British post in Islamabad received a copy of a letter from the hon. Member for Bradford, West to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, concerning the case of Mr. Sodagar Hussain—IMP H 312018/2 (S); Po 13775/93; what reconsideration the entry clearance officer has given to this case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The high commission in Islamabad has not yet received the letter from the hon. Member concerning Mr. Sodagar Hussain which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Home Office undertook to send in his letter to the hon. Member of 5 July.

I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit as soon as the entry clearance officer in Islamabad has reviewed the case in the light of the hon. Member's letter.

Mrs. Assia Andrabi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the detention of Mrs. Assia Andrabi, her husband, and baby daughter, at Srinagar airport in Kashmir by Indian security forces on 5 February; if he will ask the Indian authorities for information about where Mrs. Andrabi, the leader of Dukhtaran-e-Millat, a voluntary women's organisation in Kashmir, is detained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received no previous representations concerning Mrs. Andrabi and her family. From our initial inquiries we understand that they are being held in Srinagar. The high commission in New Delhi has requested details of the whereabouts of Mrs. Andrabi, her husband and daughter, from the Indian authorities. I will write to the hon. Member once the response of the Indian authorities has been received.

Bosnia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries which have designated troops to protect protected areas in Bosnia; how many troops each country has committed; when those forces are expected to arrive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Offers received, and under consideration, by the United Nations of forces to deter attacks against safe areas include:

	Numbers
Turkey	[1]—
Malaysia	1,500
Pakistan	3,000
Bangladesh	1,220
Tunisia	1,000
Nordic Contingent	900
Jordan	900
Holland	200
Norway	[2]—

[1] Up to a Brigade (about 4,000)
[2] Construction Unit (strength unknown)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Nations is expected to finalise detailed rules of engagement for military personnel engaged in the protection of protected areas in Bosnia; to whom those detailed rules of engagement will be communicated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ground forces deployed with UNPROFOR to deter attacks against safe areas will operate under existing UNPROFOR rules of engagement. Rules of engagement for air support of safe areas have been developed by NATO in conjunction with UNPROFOR and are being forwarded to the United Nations and troop contributors for agreement. All personnel are fully briefed on the UNPROFOR rules of engagement in force.

Mr. Graham Noble

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 501, what further information he has obtained about Mr. Graham Noble, of Brighton, who is detained by Serbs in the Krajina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Noble has been charged by the Krajina Serbs with espionage. It is unclear at this stage exactly how long it will take to investigate his case. Her Majesty's embassy in Belgrade is pressing the Krajina Serb authorities to grant consular access to Mr. Noble for an official from the embassy in Zagreb which has consular responsibility throughout Croatia. Mr. Noble continues to receive visits from the local representative of the International Committee of the Red Cross who reports that he is well. UNPROFOR in Croatia have offered their good offices to try to arrange a visit by Mr. Noble's brother.

Vukovar (Hospital Abductions)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 501, concerning patients and staff abducted from hospitals in Vukovar in 1991, why the UN commission of experts decided not to attempt identification, exhumation and return of all the bodies; whether the Croatian authorities have sought the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN Commission of Experts plans to carry out a more detailed examination of the mass grave site at Ovcara in the near future. This will include exhumation of all of the bodies. But the Commission will attempt to identify only 20, sufficient to link the gravesite with the disappearances from Vukovar hospital. The remainder of the bodies will be handed over to the Croatian authorities for identification. The Croatian authorities have not requested Her Majesty's Government's assistance in this task.

Mr. Sheikh Riaz Ahmed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 30 June, Official Report, column 500, when the British embassy at Paris expects to receive a reply to the formal note sent to the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning the refusal to allow Mr. Sheikh Riaz Ahmed to enter France; when the British embassy is going to send another note; if he will raise this matter with his French ministerial counterpart; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British embassy in Paris has kept in close touch with the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Despite several reminders, interim replies to the embassy's note were not received from the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs until 6 and 8 July. There are still some points which need clarification and the embassy is pursuing this.

I have no plans to take this matter up with my French counterpart at this time. I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as I have a further report.

War Crimes Tribunal

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the establishment of a war crimes tribunal; when it is expected to sit; and what rules for admissible evidence will be used.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the United Nations Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 827 establishing an international tribunal for former Yugoslavia, the United Nations Secretary-General has been making arrangements for its functioning. The first task is to appoint the prosecutor and judges of the tribunal. The prosecutor should be appointed within the next two months. The judges will be elected by the United Nations General Assembly this autumn. The rules of evidence and procedure will be drawn up by the judges once appointed.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on evidence which has been gathered by international organisations for future consideration by a war crimes tribunal; how such evidence is likely to be presented; and how it will be categorised.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Most information submitted so far to the United Nations Commission of Experts, who are charged with the collation, analysis and investigation of such evidence, has been collected by states. We understand that Amnesty International has submitted three reports on war crimes committed in the former Yugoslavia and that Helsinki Watch has submitted one. It will be for the prosecutor and judges of the international tribunal, once appointed, to decide how this evidence might be categorised or presented.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on supporting a war crimes tribunal for the former Yugoslavia; what the cost of the United Kingdom's commitment is likely to be; who will bear the cost of locating and transporting witnesses before the tribunal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We fully support the creation of an ad hoc tribunal for former Yugoslavia. The tribunal is to be funded from the United Nations regular budget. The financial annex to the United Nations Secretary-General's report on the means of establishing the tribunal includes an estimate of $30·5 million for all the tribunal's costs for one year once it is operational. The estimate will be scrutinised by the United Nations Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions at this year's United Nations General Assembly.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations into alleged war crimes in the former Yugoslavia have been undertaken; how many of the alleged perpetrators are (a) Croat, (b) Muslim and (c) Serb; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Commission of Experts was established in September 1992 by United Nations Security Council resolution 780 to collate, analyse and investigate evidence of war crimes committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 submitted to the United Nations under the terms of United Nations Security Council Resolution 771. The commission is building a data base of incidents, victims and alleged perpetrators. At this stage it is not possible to say how many alleged perpetrators come from each party to the Bosnian conflict.

Iraq

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government will take in respect of possible threats by the Government of Iran Mujaheddin bases in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The possible contravention of Security Council resolution 598 is a matter for the Security Council which is permanently seized of the issue. We have expressed our serious concern at these air raids to the Iranian authorities. In a letter of 25 May to the United Nations Secretary-General, the Iranian permanent representative to the United Nations said that the air raids had been carried out in self-defence on the basis of article

51 of the United Nations charter and without prejudice to Iran's policy of respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Iraq or its commitment to SCR 598.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 228

SESSION 1992–93

5th July, 1993—16th July, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
